Topics: Bible, closed canon
Author: Board of Managers of the Albany Bible Society
Title of Book: Anniversary Report of the Board of Managers, of the Albany Bible Society, February, 1819.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: G.J. Loomis
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: This is the eighth annual report of the Society for the year of 1818, given in February of 1819. The report is followed by a lengthy move for acceptance by B.F. Butler, a speech by Mr. A. Townsend and a treasurers account.

Comment: References to the topic at hand are found in the move for acceptance by B.F. Butler. In extolling the virtues of the Bible society and the world-wide dissemination of unannotated Bibles, Butler affirms the all-sufficiency of the Bible alone.
Researcher:     Date:
Excerpt (pages): "Another feature of this system, which calls for our warmest commendation, is the wise resolution to send forth the Scriptures without note or comment. For all the purpose of general and gratuitous circulation, the Bible is already perfect and complete. No comments are required to give it additional value. It is a gem too high to need the tinsel ornament of fancy, or the polish of human wisdom" (20).
Length of Relevant Material: 7 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 17-25
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Comment:
Excerpt (pages):
Length of Relevant Material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Redemption; Salvation; Universalism
Author: John Cleaveland. 1722-1799.
Title of Book: An Attempt to nip in the Bud, the unscriptural Doctrine of Universal salvation, and some other dangerous errors connected with it; which a certain stranger, who calls himself John Murray, has, of late, been endeavoring to spread in the First Parish of Gloucester, to draw disciples after him. In a letter addressed to one of those that are drawn away; if possible to reclaim him and the others. To this end and in hopes that it may by the blessing of God serve also to confirm all in some of the most important doctrines of God's word, it is made public, in answer to the desire of a very respectable number of persons of reputation and influence in said paris. To which is subjoined, the dying testimony for the truth, and against error, of their worthy minister, the Reverend Mr. Samuel Chandler, lately deceased. By John Cleaveland, A.M. Pastor of the Second Church in Ipswich.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Salem.
Publisher: E. Russell.
Date of Publication: 1776.
Library Location: HBLL Library; Evans Collection (Early American Imprints); Call Number: 080 sh64 Evans 14684
Nature of Source: A pamphlet published in an attempt to counter one "John Murray," a "stranger" who had been wander the countryside preaching the "unscriptural Doctrine of Universal Salvation."
Comment: According to Dan Vogel (in Religious Seekers and the Advent of Mormonism), the case Alma presents to his son Corianton is essentially anti-universalist. "Alma tells Corianton that, contrary to his Universalist beliefs, upon death there are two abodes for the spirits of God's children... Universalists who often heard the orthodox argue against their beliefs using the parable of Lazarus and the rich man (Lk. 16: 1-31) would have easily identified with this argument." To support this assertion, Vogel references this pamphlet by John Cleaveland.
Cleaveland's anti-universalist arguments are indexed in another entry. This passage, provides a clear, brief statement of the univeralist position itself.
Researcher: Date:
Exerpts:
Cleaveland's synopsis of the doctrine of universal salvation:
"Christ, by making complete atonement for sin by the sacrifice of himself, has made up the breach between God and fallen men, so that all men are now pardoned, all are justified, and all will finally be saved . . . Some, indeed, speak of application to Christ as necessary, but my bible knows of no such application as necessary to our being pardoned" (22)

"Therefore, he that believeth not shall be damned, must signify no more than this, he shall be condemned in his own mind, and suffer the loss or want of that comfort, which such enjoy, as believe; it doth not mean that he shall be damned forever; yea though such as die in unbelief may go to hell, or to an intermediate state, where Judas went, when he went to his own place, which may be a state of inquietude, or perplexity, yet they shall in due time be finally released from that state and be blessed in heaven forever" (23).

Topics: restoration; sectarian strife; apostasy
Author: Editor
Title of Book: "Notes on a Tour."
Title of Article: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 5)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Date of Publication: Dec. 5, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Editor comments on the state of Christianity based on his observances from recent travels across America. Stresses the spirit of religious inquiry that prevails among all the people, along with the great diversity of sects and denominations. Author sadly notes the profound emphasis placed on "sound doctrine," even more than morality. Compare with the religious environment Joseph describes in his history.
Researcher: Date: Excerpt (pages): "We are happy to find that, in spite of the reigning doctors of traditions, the people are gradually awaking to a sense of their religious rights and privileges. We find a large majority of most religious communities are quite unsettled in their views of religious principles and practices. They have lost the greater part of that confidence of being the most reformed christians, and the wisest in the world, which was the characteristic of every sect some quarter of a century ago. Many who thought their church almost infallible, now readily admit that she not only may, but that she actually does, frequently err. And there is a spirit of inquiry marching forth, before which, most assuredly, the rotten systems of tradition and error must and will fall. . . . in my late tour of a thousand miles I was reminded of what I had before discovered, that religious sects and forms cover the earth as the different sorts of timber the soil. . . . But one of the most prominent signs of the times, and one of the most significant. . . is this: The people every where have an insatiable appetite for sound doctrine. They eat whole sermons after sermons, and run after this and that preacher sound doctrine, and are as hungry as before. Is he sound --is he sound in the faith? This is the all important question, on the solution of which depends the character of the preacher for orthodoxy or heterodoxy -- and his reputation is all in all to him. . . . sound doctrine is made, like charity, to cover a multitude of sins. . . Errors of opinion become in many places the cause of ecclesiastical degradation and of exclusion from the church, while immoralities are overlooked" (28-29 or 198-199).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: revelation; basis of authority
Author: Dr. Watts
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Revelation"
Title of Periodical: The Candid Examiner (Vol. 2, No. 3)
Place of Publication: Montrose, PA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jul. 17, 1826
Nature of Source: A religious bi-weekly publication mainly promoting the Universalist doctrine. In addition to articles on religion and on the activities of Universalist societies, it included sermons, Bible studies, poetry, anecdotes, and a good deal of selected material, especially from Universalist magazines.
Comment:
Researcher: Date:
Excerpt (pages): "There is no reason whatsoever, that can prove or establish any authority so firmly, as to give it power to dictate in matters of belief, what is contrary to all the dictates of our reasonable nature. God himself has never given us any such revelations: and I think it may be sad, with reverence, he neither can nor will do it. . . ."
(23)
Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was completed:

Topics: Spirit, Soul, and Body
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Life and Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg"
Title of Periodical: Christian Examiner and General Review
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Co.
first called the Christian Disciple, the Christian Examiner "promoted 'spiritual and moral improvement,' [and] focused mainly on religious topics, and included some book reviews, religious news, and poetry." It was a "tower of strength for Unitarians . . . waging war against the Spirit of the Pilgrims, an anti-Unitarian magazine." In 1857 it adopted more liberal ideas and became completely absorbed by transcendentalism. (Index to American Periodicals 53)

Comment: this passage contains several accounts of Swedenborg's visionary powers. He had the ability to recount accurate details that he never witnessed.

Researcher: Date:

Excerpt (pages): "M. Thiebault says, I know not on what occasion it was, that, conversing one day with the Queen on the subject of the celebrated visionary, Swedenborg, we (the members of the Academy) expressed a desire, particularly M. Merian and myself, to know what opinion was entertained of him in Sweden. I on my part related what had been told me respecting him by Chamberlain d'Hamon, who was still alive, and who had been ambassador from Prussia both to Holland and France. It was, 'that his brother-in-law, (the Count de Marville,) Ambassador from Holland to Stockholm, having died suddenly, a shopkeeper demanded of his widow the payment of a bill for some articles of drapery, which she remembered had been paid in her husband's life-time; that the widow, not being able to find the shopkeeper's receipt, had been advised to consult with Swedenborg, who, she was told, could converse with the dead whenever he pleased; that she accordingly adopted his advice, though she did so less from credulity than curiosity; and at the end of a few days Swedenborg informed her, that her deceased husband had taken the shopkeeper's receipt for the money on such a day, at such an hour, as he was reading such an article in Bayle's Dictionary in his cabinet; and that his attention being called immediately afterwards to some other concern, he had put the receipt into the book to mark the place at which he left off; where in fact it was found, at the page described!'" (334)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Date When Copying Was Done: pp. 333-335

Topics: spirit and matter; intelligence and intelligences

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge

Publisher: Cambridge University Press

Date of Publication: 1992

Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchrydion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the sixteenth hermetic dialogue is entitled "Definitions of Asclepius to King Ammon on god, matter, vice, fate, the sun, intellectual essence, divine essence, mankind, the arrangement of the plentitude, the seven stars, and mankind according to the image" (58).

Researcher:                             Date:
Excerpt(s): "Look in the middle most parts of the earth at the many founts of water and fire gushing forth. IN the same place, one observes three natures, those of fire, of water and of earth, depending from one root. Hence, the earth has been believed to be a storehouse of all matter, sending forth supplies of matter nad in return receiving substance from above. IN this way, the carstman (I mean the sun) binds heaven ot earth, sending essence below and raising matter above, attracting everythign toward the sun and around it, offering everything from himself to everything, as he gives freely of the ungrudging light. Fir it is the sun whence good energies reach not only through sky and air but even to earth and down to the nethermost deep and abyss.
"But if there also exists some intellectual essence, it is the sun's mass, whose receptacle may be sunlight. Only the sun knows . . . of what this essence is composed or whence it flows since by location and anture it is near to the sun. . . . {We, who are forced to understand by guesswork, do not observe it.} But a vision of the sun is not a matter of guesswork. Since it is the visual ray itself, the sun shines all around the cosmos with the utmost brilliance, on the part above and on the part below. For the sun is situated in the center of the cosmos, wearing it like a crown. Like a good driver, it steadies the chariot of the cosmos and fastens the reins to itself to prevent the cosmos going out of control. And the reins are these: life and soul and spirit and immortality and becoming. The driver slackens the reins to let the cosmos go, not far away (to tell the truth) but along with him. IN this way are all things crafted. The sun portions out eternal permanence to the immortals and feeds the immortal part of the cosmos with the rising light emitted from its other side, the one that faces heavenward. But, with the light held in confinement as it shines all around inside the hollow of water and earth and air, the sun enlivens and awakens, with becoming and change, the things that live in these regions of the cosmos. It brings transmutation and transformation among them, as in a spiral, when change turns ont hitng to another, form kind to kind, from form to form, carfting them just as it does the great bodies. For the permanence of every body is change: in an immortal body the change is without dissolution; in a mortal body there is dissolution. And this is what distinguishes immortal from mortal, mortal from immortal.

"Just as the sun's light is continuous, so also—both in location and supply—does its fecundity continue on and on without cease. Around the sun are many troops of demons looking like battalions in changing array. They are not far from the immortals though they dwell <with mortals>. From on high, they have assigned the territory of mankind, and they oversee human activity. What the gods enjoin them they effect through torrents, hurricanes, thunderstorms, fiery alterations and earthquakes; with famines and wars, moreover, they repay irreverence. Irreverence is mankind's greatest wrong against the gods: to do good is the gods' affair; to be reverent is mankind's; and the demons' is to assist. Whatever else humans dare to do—out of error or daring or compulsion (which they call fate) or ignorance—all these the gods hold guiltless. Irreverence alone is subject to judgment.

"For every kind, the sun is preserver and provider. Just as the intellectual cosmos that encompasses the sensible cosmos fills if by making it solid with changing and omniform appearances, so also the sun that encompasses all things in the cosmos strengthens and makes solid all of them that are generated, as it takes I those that are spend and dwindling away. The sun sets in array the troop, or rather, troops of demons, which are many and changing, arrayed under the regiments of stars, an equal number of them for each star. Thus deployed, they follow the orders of a particular star, and they are good and evil according to their natures—their energies, that is. For energy is the essence of a demon. Some of them, however, are mixtures of good and evil.

"They have all been granted authority over the things of the earth and over the troubles of the earth, and they produce change and tumult collectively for cities and nations, individually for each person. They reshape our soul to their own ends, and they rouse them, lying in ambush in our muscle and marrow, in veins and arteries, in the brain itself, reaching to the very guts.

"The demons on duty at the exact moment of birth, arrayed under each of the stars, take possession of each of us as we come into being and receive a soul. From moment to moment they change places, not staying in position but moving by rotation. Those that enter through the body into the two parts of the soul twist the soul about, each toward its own energy. But the rational part of the soul stands unmastered by the demons, suitable as a receptacle for god.

"Thus, if by the way of the sun anyone has a ray of shining upon him in his rational part (and the totality of those enlightened is a few), the demons' effect on him is nullified. For none—neither demons nor gods—can do anything against a single ray of god. All others the demons carry off as spoils, both souls and bodies, since they are fond of the demons' energies and acquiesce in them {And it is the love that} misleads and is misled. So, with our bodies as their instruments, the demons govern this earthly government. Hemeres has called this government "fate."

"This intelligible cosmos, then, depends from god and the sensible cosmos from the intelligible, but the sun, through the intelligible cosmos and the sensible as well, is supplied by god with the influx of good, with his craftsmanship, in other words. Around the sun are the eight spheres that depend from it: the sphere of the fixed stars, the six of the planets, and the one that surrounds the earth. From these spheres depend the demons, and then, from the demons, humans. And thus all things and all persons are dependent from god.
"Therefore, the father of all is god; their craftsman is the sun; and the cosmos is the instrument of craftsmanship. Itelligible essence governs heaven; heaven governs the gods; and demons posted by the gods govern humans. This is the army of gods and demons.
Through them god makes everything for himself, and all things are parts of god. But if all things are part of god, then all things are god, and he makes himself in making all things.
His making can never cease because he is ceaseless. And as god has no end, so his making neither beginning nor end" (59-61).

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy (pages): 58-61
Date When Photocopying Was Done:

---

Topics: spirit and matter; intelligence and intelligences
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchydion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.
Comment: the sixteenth hermetic dialogue is entitled "Definitions of Asclepius to King Ammon on god, matter, vice, fate, the sun, intellectual essence, divine essence, mankind, the arrangement of the plentitude, the seven stars, and mankind according to the image" (58).

Researcher: Date:
Excerpt(s): "Look in the middle most parts of the earth at the many founts of water and fire gushing forth. IN the same place, one observes three natures, those of fire, of water and of earth, depending from one root. Hence, the earth has been believed to be a storehouse of all matter, sending forth supplies of matter and in return receiving substance from above. IN this way, the craftsman (I mean the sun) binds heaven to earth, sending essence below and raising matter above, attracting everything toward the sun and around it, offering everything from himself to everything, as he gives freely of the ungrudging light. Fir it is the sun whence good energies reach not only through sky and air but even to earth and down to the nethermost deep and abyss.

"But if there also exists some intellectual essence, it is the sun's mass, whose receptacle may be sunlight. Only the sun knows . . . of what this essence is composed or whence it flows since by location and nature it is near to the sun. . . . {We, who are forced to understand by guesswork, do not observe it.} But a vision of the sun is not a matter of guesswork. Since it is the visual ray itself, the sun shines all around the cosmos with the utmost brilliance, on the part above and on the part below. For the sun is situated in the center of the cosmos, wearing it like a crown. Like a good driver, it steadies the chariot of the cosmos and fastens the reins to itself to prevent the cosmos going out of control. And the reins are these: life and soul and spirit and immortality and becoming. The driver slackens the reins to let the cosmos go, not far away (to tell the truth) but along with him. IN this way are all things crafted. The sun portions out eternal permanence to the immortals and feeds the immortal part of the cosmos with the rising light emitted from its other side, the one that faces heavenward. But, with the light held in confinement as it shines all around inside the hollow of water and earth and air, the sun enlivens and awakens, with becoming and change, the things that live in these regions of the cosmos. It brings transmutation and transformation among them, as in a spiral, when change turns one thing to another, form kind to kind, from form to form, crafting them just as it does the great bodies. For the permanence of every body is change: in an immortal body the change in without dissolution; in a mortal body there is dissolution. And this is what distinguishes immortal from mortal, mortal from immortal.

"Just as the sun's light is continuous, so also-both in location and supply-does its fecundity continue on and on without cease. Around the sun are many troops of demons looking like battalions in changing array. They are not far from the immortals though they dwell <with mortals>. From on high, they have assigned the territory of mankind, and they oversee human activity. What the gods enjoin them they effect through torrents, hurricanes, thunderstorms, fiery alterations and earthquakes; with famines and wars, moreover, they repay irreverence. Irreverence is mankind's greatest wrong against the gods: to do good is the gods' affair; to be reverent is mankind's; and the demons' is to assist. Whatever else humans dare to do-out of error or daring or compulsion (which they call fate) or ignorance-all these the gods hold guiltless. Irreverence alone is subject to judgment.

"For every kind, the sun is preserver and provider. Just as the intellectual cosmos that encompasses the sensible cosmos fills if by making it solid with changing and omniform appearances, so also the sun that encompasses all things in the cosmos strengthens and makes solid all of them that are generated, as it takes I those that are spend and dwindling away. The sun sets in array the troop, or rather, troops of demons, which are many and changing, arrayed under the regiments of stars, an equal number of them for each star.
Thus deployed, they follow the orders of a particular star, and they are good and evil according to their natures—their energies, that is. For energy is the essence of a demon. Some of them, however, are mixtures of good and evil. "They have all been granted authority over the things of the earth and over the troubles of the earth, and they produce change and tumult collectively for cities and nations, individually for each person. They reshape our soul to their own ends, and they rouse them, lying in ambush in our muscle and marrow, in veins and arteries, in the brain itself, reaching to the very guts. "The demons on duty at the exact moment of birth, arrayed under each of the stars, take possession of each of us as we come into being and receive a soul. From moment to moment they change places, not staying in position but moving by rotation. Those that enter through the body into the two parts of the soul twist the soul about, each toward its own energy. But the rational part of the soul stands unmastered by the demons, suitable as a receptacle for god. "Thus, if by the way of the sun anyone has a ray of shining upon him in his rational part (and the totality of those enlightened is a few), the demons' effect on him is nullified. For none—neither demons nor gods—can do anything against a single ray of god. All others the demons carry off as spoils, both souls and bodies, since they are fond of the demons' energies and acquiesce in them {And it is the love that} misleads and is misled. So, with our bodies as their instruments, the demons govern this earthly government. Hermes has called this government "fate." "This intelligible cosmos, then, depends from god and the sensible cosmos from the intelligible, but the sun, through the intelligible cosmos and the sensible as well, is supplied by god with the influx of good, with his craftsmanship, in other words. Around the sun are the eight spheres that depend from it: the sphere of the fixed stars, the six of the planets, and the one that surrounds the earth. From these spheres depend the demons, and then, from the demons, humans. And thus all things and all persons are dependent from god. "Therefore, the father of all is god; their craftsman is the sun; and the cosmos is the instrument of craftsmanship. Intelligible essence governs heaven; heaven governs the gods; and demons posted by the gods govern humans. This is the army of gods and demons. Through them god makes everything for himself, and all things are parts of god. But if all things are part of god, then all things are god, and he makes himself in making all things. His making can never cease because he is ceaseless. And as god has no end, so his making neither beginning nor end" (59-61).

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy (pages): 58-61
Date When Photocopying Was Done:

Topics: spirit and matter; intelligence and intelligences
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the sixteenth hermetic dialogue is entitled "Definitions of Asclepius to King Ammon on god, matter, vice, fate, the sun, intellectual essence, divine essence, mankind, the arrangement of the plentitude, the seven stars, and mankind according to the image" (58).

Excerpt(s): "Look in the middle most parts of the earth at the many founts of water and fire gushing forth. IN the same place, one observes three natures, those of fire, of water and of earth, depending from one root. Hence, the earth has been believed to be a storehouse of all matter, sending forth supplies of matter and in return receiving substance from above. IN this way, the craftsman (I mean the sun) binds heaven to earth, sending essence below and raising matter above, attracting everything toward the sun and around it, offering everything from himself to everything, as he gives freely of the ungrudging light. Fir it is the sun whence good energies reach not only through sky and air but even to earth and down to the nethermost deep and abyss. "But if there also exists some intellectual essence, it is the sun's mass, whose receptacle may be sunlight. Only the sun knows . . . of what this essence is composed or whence it flows since by location and nature it is near to the sun . . . . {We, who are forced to understand by guesswork, do not observe it.} But a vision of the sun is not a matter of guesswork. Since it is the visual ray itself, the sun shines all around the cosmos with the utmost brilliance, on the part above and on the part below. For the sun is situated in the center of the cosmos, wearing it like a crown. Like a good driver, it steadies the chariot of the cosmos and fastens the reins to itself to prevent the cosmos going out of control. And the reins are these: life and soul and spirit and immortality and becoming. The driver slackens the reins to let the cosmos go, not far away (to tell the truth) but along with him. IN this way are all things crafted. The sun portions out eternal permanence to the immortals and feeds the immortal part of the cosmos with the rising light emitted from its... other side, the one that faces heavenward. But, with the light held in confinement as it shines all around inside the hollow of water and earth and air, the sun enlivens and awakens, with becoming and change, the things that live in these regions of the cosmos.
It brings transmutation and transformation among them, as in a spiral, when change turns one thing to another, form kind to kind, from form to form, crafting them just as it does the great bodies. For the permanence of every body is change: in an immortal body the change in without dissolution; in a mortal body there is dissolution. And this is what distinguishes immortal from mortal, mortal from immortal.

"Just as the sun's light is continuous, so also-both in location and supply-does its fecundity continue on and on without cease. Around the sun are many troops of demons looking like battalions in changing array. They are not far from the immortals though they dwell <with mortals>. From on high, they have assigned the territory of mankind, and they oversee human activity. What the gods enjoin them they effect through torrents, hurricanes, thunderstorms, fiery alterations and earthquakes; with famines and wars, moreover, they repay irreverence. Irreverence is mankind's greatest wrong against the gods: to do good is the gods' affair; to be reverent is mankind's; and the demons' is to assist. Whatever else humans dare to do-out of error or daring or compulsion (which they call fate) or ignorance-all these the gods hold guiltless. Irreverence alone is subject to judgment.

"For every kind, the sun is preserver and provider. Just as the intellectual cosmos that encompasses the sensible cosmos fills if by making it solid with changing and omniform appearances, so also the sun that encompasses all things in the cosmos strengthens and makes solid all of them that are generated, as it takes I those that are spend and dwindling away. The sun sets in array the troop, or rather, troops of demons, which are many and changing, arrayed under the regiments of stars, an equal number of them for each star.
Thus deployed, they follow the orders of a particular star, and they are good and evil according to their natures-their energies, that is. For energy is the essence of a demon.
Some of them, however, are mixtures of good and evil.

"They have all been granted authority over the things of the earth and over the troubles of the earth, and they produce change and tumult collectively for cities and nations, individually for each person. They reshape our soul to their own ends, and they rouse them, lying in ambush in our muscle and marrow, in veins and arteries, in the brain itself, reaching to the very guts.

"The demons on duty at the exact moment of birth, arrayed under each of the stars, take possession of each of us as we come into being and receive a soul. From moment to moment they change places, not staying in position but moving by rotation. Those that enter through the body into the two parts of the soul twist the soul about, each toward it own energy. But the rational part of the soul stands unmastered by the demons, suitable as a receptacle for god.

"Thus, if by the way of the sun anyone has a ray of shining upon him in his rational part (and the totality of those enlightened is a few), the demons' effect on him is nullified. For none-neither demons nor gods-can do anything against a single ray of god. All others the demons carry off as spoils, both souls and bodies, since they are fond of the demons' energies and acquiesce in them {And it is the love that} misleads and is misled. So, with our bodies as their instruments, the demons govern this earthly government. Hermes has called this government "fate."
"This intelligible cosmos, then, depends from god and the sensible cosmos from the intelligible, but the sun, through the intelligible cosmos and the sensible as well, is supplied by god with the influx of good, with his craftsmanship, in other words. Around the sun are the eight spheres that depend from it: the sphere of the fixed stars, the six of the planets, and the one that surrounds the earth. From these spheres depend the demons, and then, from the demons, humans. And thus all things and all persons are dependent from god.

"Therefore, the father of all is god; their craftsman is the sun; and the cosmos is the instrument of craftsmanship. Intelligible essence governs heaven; heaven governs the gods; and demons posted by the gods govern humans. This is the army of gods and demons. Through them god makes everything for himself, and all things are parts of god. But if all things are part of god, then all things are god, and he makes himself in making all things. His making can never cease because he is ceaseless. And as god has no end, so his making neither beginning nor end" (59-61).

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy (pages): 58-61
Date When Photocopying Was Done:

---

Topics: temple
Author: Captain William Morgan
Title of Book: The Mysteries of Free Masonry
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: Wilson and Company
Date of Publication: 1830
Library Location: BYU Microfiche
Nature of Source: Morgan, an ex-Mason wrote this expose of Freemasonry; and consequently disappeared after divulging the secrets of the Masons. His 1826 disappearance sparked a flood of anti-Masonic sentiment which spread across New England until about 1840. Morgan was never heard from again, and when a body was found floating in a nearby river, the Freemasons were blamed for his death.
Comment: part of the lecture on the Royal Arch Degree Researcher: Part of the Royal Arch Degree lecture Morgan records. Masons learned secret passwords as the rose in degrees, and the password of this degree was the name of God, as rediscovered in Solomon's temple.
Excerpt (pages): "Q. Where was you made a Royal Arch Mason?
A. In a just and legally constituted Chapter of Royal Arch Masons...assembled in a room or place representing the tabernacle erected by our ancient brethren, near the ruins of King Solomon's temple.
Q. Where is the High Priest stationed, and what are his duties?
A. He is stationed in the sanctum sanctorum. His duty, with the King and Scribe, to sit in the Grand Council, to form plans and give directions to the workmen...."
Q. The Royal Arch Captain's station and duty? A. At the inner veil, or entrance of the sanctum sanctorum, to guard the same, and see that none pass but such as are duly qualified, and have the proper pass-words and signets of truth."

Tells story of three Masons entering in through different veils of the temple, during which they discover "to the inmost recesses of the vault...a small chest, or box, curiously wrought...On examination, the Grand Council pronounced it to be the are of the covenant, which was deposite in the vault by our ancient Grand Master, for safe keeping. On inspecting it more closely, they found a key with which they opened it. The High Priest then took from it a book, which he opened, and read as follows: Genesis 1:1-3.

Q. Was there anything further found in the ark? A. There was a key to the ineffable characters belonging to this degree, as follows: [a key with signs corresponding to the alphabet is printed].

Q. What further was said to you? A. The High Priest read the following passage, [Exodus vi, 2,3]... He then informed us that the name of Deity, the divine Logos, or word, to which reference is had in John I. 1, 5...That this Logos, or word, was ancienly written only in these sacred characters, and thus preserved from one generation to another. That this was the true Masonic word, which was lost in the death of Hiram Abiff, and was restored at the re-building of the temple, in the manner we had at that time assisted to represent.

Q. What followed? A. We were reminded of the manner in which we had sworn to give the Royal Arch word; were instructed in the manner and finally invested with the all-important word in due form.

Q. What is the Grand Royal Arch word? A. JAH-BUH-LAN." (55-6)

"Each Son of Adam Is My Brother":
Gender and Ritual in Nineteenth-Century Secret Societies
David A. Allred

In the nineteenth century, secret societies like the Freemasons, Odd Fellows, Red Men, and others saw their combined membership swell from approximately 2,500 to 6 million. Experiencing their greatest growth beginning in the 1840s, these groups performed rituals that invoked the learning and imagery of obscure alchemists, classical scientists, Native Americans, Old Testament patriarchs, and even medieval knights. This fascination with the mythic past seems out of place in a century that defined itself by technological advancement and modern "civilization." In response to this paradox, one nineteenth-century scholar of fraternities questioned "whether the mystical side to our natures has not expanded more rapidly than that which looks mainly to material comfort."

However, recent scholars have explained these groups' remarkable growth in other ways, suggesting that the concept of masculinity accounts for the explosion of secret society activity. For example, historian Mark Carnes argues that secret societies were men's unofficial response to changing gender relations. By the mid-nineteenth century, industrialization was forcing more men to work away from the home, giving women more influence in the domestic sphere. Additionally, Protestant churches were also becoming a feminized social space both because women were participating more in these churches and because the theology was becoming increasingly liberal, a trend that softened God's image and emphasized traditionally feminine attributes like love and charity. In Carnes's analysis, a feeling of alienation from traditionally masculine arenas led men to the lodge, where, by seeing "each son of Adam [as a] brother," they built brotherhood and enacted masculine ritual. In the lodge room, men could initiate young men into manhood on their terms. In Carnes's words, "[secret fraternal ritual] could literally give voice to sentiments that would otherwise remain unexpressed. Its dramaturgical devices enabled elderly sachems and patriarchs to adopt and love as their own the younger brethren of the order, who were in turn assured of paternal approval and affection."

For Mormon historians this rise of secret societies in the 1840s is significant because at the same time, Mormons saw the emergence of secret societies of their own. Five Mormon organizations could be classified in this way. First, in 1838 the Danites organized to expel dissenters and defend Mormon settlements in northwest Missouri. Three years later, Mormons in Nauvoo petitioned to organize a Masonic lodge, which was officially set up in March 1842. In May of the same year, Joseph Smith began to perform endowment ceremonies, and those endowed members made up the Holy Order or Anointed Quorum. Finally, in 1844, Joseph organized the Council of Fifty to act as the political arm of the church and to promote his presidential campaign. Even the Relief Society, organized two days after the Masonic lodge in 1842, had some characteristics of a secret society, and can be compared with the female auxiliary lodges that began to appear in the 1850s. With the exception of Nauvoo Freemasonry, each of these groups had no direct relationship with national secret societies. Also, each of these groups developed for disparate reasons. However, in spite of their very different purposes, participants, and actions, each of these groups was essentially a secret society with initiation rituals, oaths of secrecy, and signals of recognition.

This parallel rise of secret societies provides an opportunity to compare the phenomenon of Mormon secret groups with a larger national trend. This paper will discuss Carnes's functional model of secret societies and compare it to the Danites, the Council of Fifty, and the Holy Order. The paper will also examine claims that the Relief Society was a secret organization by comparing it to women's auxiliaries to fraternal orders. A close analysis of the function of these groups and the ideology behind their actions suggests that the phenomenon of Mormon secret societies diverged decidedly from their American counterparts. Furthermore, this analysis affirms the uniqueness of the temple endowment and its central role in Mormon ritual.

Carnes's Functional Model of Secret Societies

For scholars like Carnes, the key to understanding the appeal of secret societies lies in the lodge ritual. The initiation and degree ceremonies were some of the most important attractions for prospective members. Granted, some secret societies had other appeals, like life insurance or a temperance advocacy, but the most popular groups, especially the Odd Fellows and Freemasons, spent much of their time inducting initiates and obtaining higher degrees.
Lodge rituals were often revised as new secret societies were established (and Stevens counted six hundred different secret societies in the nineteenth-century.) and as existing groups tried to attract more members. These revisions often produced innovative ceremonies that appealed to men and their social concerns, even if the ritual writers did not know it. Carnes explains, "The ritualists were probably not consciously aware of the psychological needs of American men, but they did understand that certain dramatic themes could 'give satisfaction' or 'fully gratify' the desires of members." As this marketplace of ritual developed, writers searched for appealing imagery in modern and ancient sources (everything from the Cabala and Indian Vedas to contemporary literature like Ben Hur), and they felt free to borrow or adapt other's rituals. Since Freemasonry was the largest and one of the oldest secret societies, the lodge rites of various groups often had a Masonic feel.

Fraternal Ritual and the Function of Brotherhood. The Improved Order of Red Men was one group whose revised rituals addressed men's social concerns. The Red Men, whose membership in the 1840s and 50s lagged behind Masons and Odd Fellows, revised their rituals five times between 1850 and 1868. The 1868 revision finally succeeded, and the society that only had 3,000 members in 1850 was initiating 10,000 per year by the 1870s. The 1868 ritual was more elaborate than the previous ones, and, unlike the 1864 ritual, the new version required the "pale-face" initiate to prove himself fearless. In the initiation ceremony, lodge members, who acted the part of braves, called the initiate a squaw and an intruder and threatened him with torture and death until a brave intervened and declared the pale-face courageous. Given an eagle feather as a token of his valor, the initiate was led on a metaphorical journey around the lodge and ultimately found himself at the tent of the Sachem, or lodge leader. In the ritual, as the Sachem emerged from the tent, he would begin to throw a tomahawk at the unrecognized pale-face before being stopped by the braves, who vouched for the initiate's courage. Only then could the pale-face become adopted into the tribe and be reconciled with the Sachem. In his analysis of this 1868 revision, Carnes notes that the ceremony was popular because "the paternal character of the Sachem ... had become explicit." The ceremony was relevant to the lives of the members because in the larger society young men were alienated from fathers who held diminishing influence in the home. This condition changed in the lodge, where "the emotional orientations instilled by maternal nurture would give way to the sterner lessons of ... savage chieftains."< Significantly, these chieftains ultimately reconciled with their metaphorical sons. Thus, through brotherhood, the Red Men initiation enabled its new members to cope with anxieties about their own absent fathers.

Fraternal Ritual and a Revised Theology. An 1845 revision of the Odd Fellows's ritual also produced a masculine ceremony, one that subverted the feminized liberal theology of contemporary Protestantism. While early forms of Odd Fellows ritual were in line with liberal Protestantism, the 1845 ritual distanced itself from that ideology. At the same time liberal theologians were leaving behind Calvinistic themes of depravity and sin by emphasizing Christian forgiveness and charity, the 1845 Odd Fellow ritual omitted several key references to Christ. The revised rituals also reversed the softening of liberal theology by emphasizing one's inevitable death, the difficulty of life's journey, and the distant and solemn nature of God. The portrayal of God especially moved away from the nurturing, feminine, God of liberal thought. Carnes explains, "the easy-going God . . . had been replaced by a 'Supreme Intelligent Being' whose 'holy name' was to be mentioned only with 'that reverential awe which is due from the creature to the Creator.' Thus as religion lost some of its masculine appeal, lodge ritual produced an alternate theology that imagined the cosmos in masculine terms.

Mormon Secret Societies Compared National Trends

The rapid expansion of secret societies in the 1840s also manifests itself in Mormonism. This was true most obviously when a Masonic lodge was organized in Nauvoo, and Mormon men became Masons in large numbers. However, other Mormon organizations were also essentially secret societies. The Danites, the Council of Fifty, and the Holy Order all initiated new members and administered oaths of secrecy. Even the Relief Society was an exclusive group that voted in new members and was asked to keep secrets like "good Masons." Still, focusing on these similarities conceals important differences between Carnes's portrayal of fraternal organizations and the way Mormon secret groups functioned. One reviewer has suggested that Carnes's conclusions may need modification for the complexities of local variation, and Mormon groups are a good example of this need. Also, Carnes's analysis is most helpful for a narrow range of secret fraternal groups, and Mormon groups don't fit nicely into Carnes's portrayal of secret groups. Other secret societies also vary from Carnes's model. Some nineteenth-century secret societies modified the focus on brotherhood by including women, such as the Order of Patrons of Husbandry, or the National Grange. Other groups, like the National Farmer's Alliance, spent more of their energies on political or economic issues and de-emphasized the primacy of lodge ritual. Therefore, the example of Mormon secret groups may suggest ways in which localized groups strayed from the norms of groups like the Freemasons.

The Danites and the Council of Fifty. Even if on the surface Mormon secret groups resembled other American secret societies, their purposes, activities, and structures were very different. The Danites and the Council of Fifty are two important secret Mormon groups (Mormon even though three of the Council of Fifty were not LDS). In sensationalized accounts, their sinister and subversive nature may represent the epitome of what Anti-masonry was fighting against. However, both groups had little in common with Freemasonry or other ritual societies. Granted, both groups initiated new members and learned secret gestures, and like Freemasonry, both groups borrowed imagery from the Old Testament. However, the Danites, which were organized as a reaction to internal dissent and external threats in Northwest Missouri, were more concerned about the state of the Mormon War than enacting ancient myths. They are better compared to a militia group than a ritual society. Similarly, the Council of Fifty's reason for being, especially in the early 1840s, was to act as the political arm of the Church and to support Joseph Smith's presidential campaign. One historian compared this group to present-day special interest lobbies. With both of these groups, comparisons are superficial at best to fraternal societies and their hierarchy of degrees, benevolent rhetoric, and esoteric ideology. Rather than participating in recreational, evening activity at the lodge, members of the Danites and the Council of Fifty worked to promote and defend what they saw as the Kingdom of God on the earth.

The Holy Order and the Endowment. The Holy Order, which was made up of the first individuals to receive their endowments, has been compared to American secret societies most often because of the temple ceremony's similarities with Masonic ritual and because Joseph began giving endowments six weeks after becoming a Master Mason. However, the endowment also differs significantly from the fraternal ritual of Masonry and other groups, and the temple ordinances especially resist Carnes's masculine reading of the function of secret ritual.

Carnes's model depends on the assumption that fraternal members lived in an industrializing culture where men worked outside of the home and where a feminized liberal Protestantism held social power. However, Mormon men in the 1840s were largely farmers or artisans who worked near the home and influenced the upbringing of their children, including their sons. Furthermore, Mormonism was patriarchal and at odds with liberal Protestantism, and by virtue of the priesthood, Mormon men presided over their homes and were deeply involved in the Church. In sum, Carnes's assumptions are not relevant to Mormonism in the 1840s. Therefore, it should come as no surprise that Carnes's conclusions reflect Protestant men's experience with Odd Fellowship in Boston rather than Mormon men's experience with the endowment in Nauvoo.

Several differences make the temple ceremony essentially different from American secret societies. By definition, secret fraternal societies were composed entirely of men. The Holy Order, however, was made up of both men and women who had received their endowments. By June 1844, sixty-five men and women been endowed, and that number grew to over five thousand men and women by February 1846. Clearly, many women participated alongside the men in these rituals. Furthermore, not only were women allowed access to the secret and sacred ritual, but thirty-six women also performed ritual ordinances that were part of the endowment in Nauvoo. More differences are evident as well. While in Carnes's model, the secret ritual was designed to reconcile fathers and sons in brotherhood. On the other hand, the endowment was designed to unite couples and families, and as part of the temple rituals in Nauvoo, three thousand living couples were sealed in celestial marriage. The contrast between Carnes's model and the Mormon experience here is stark. Carnes's research into American secret societies shows that initiation was a symbolic rebirth of the man's soul into a life without feminine influence, a type of alternative domesticity. Conversely, the temple ordinances, the most significant rituals for Mormons, sealed men and women together and made eternal, those social conditions that other secret societies were resisting.

The Relief Society in Relation to Secret Women's Auxiliaries

A fourth distinctively Mormon group, the Relief Society is occasionally seen as a type of secret society or as a Masonic auxiliary, even though the best comparison is to nineteenth-century women's benevolent societies. Mormon historian Jill Derr posits the soft version of the secret society thesis. Although not directly connecting Masonry and the Relief Society, she points out that "the organization of priesthood quorums, Masonic lodges, and the Nauvoo Legion strengthened brotherhood among Latter-day Saint men, and the women may well have felt the need for a sisterly counterpart." Other scholars connect the Relief Society with Masonry more directly. For example, Durham argues, "there are few significant developments in the Church that occurred after March 15, 1842 [the day in which the Nauvoo Masonic lodge was established], which did not have some Masonic inner dependence. . . . [The Relief Society] was the Prophet's intentional attempt to expand Masonry to include the women of the Church."

Scholars like Durham who take this position, can find at least four pieces of circumstantial evidence to bolster their claims of a relationship between Masonry and the Relief Society. First, the Relief Society was organized two days after the Nauvoo lodge was formed and a day after Joseph Smith became a Master Mason. Second, the Relief Society was organized in the upper room of the Joseph's Red Brick store, the same room that had served as the Masonic lodge room the day before. Third, some of the procedures of the Relief Society resemble Masonic procedures—women were admitted by unanimous vote and the group was exclusive, beginning with only twenty-six women, many of whom were among the elite of Nauvoo. Finally, Joseph's rhetoric in the meetings he held with the women contained what some have seen as Masonic terminology. One example is his statement that "the Society should grow up by degrees."

However, each of these arguments can be countered. First, the correlation of the organization dates may be a red herring. The Relief Society had its start in early March 1842 and began with the efforts of Sarah Granger and Margaret Cook to combine their talents to provide help to Temple workers; thus Joseph had nothing to do with the organization of the Relief Society, just in its reformulation as part of the Church's structure. On the other hand, Masonry in Nauvoo was being planned eight or nine months earlier, as early as the summer of 1841, when a group of Mormons first petitioned the Quincy lodge for permission to start a lodge in Nauvoo. If one accepts that John C. Bennett and James Adams were driving forces behind introducing Masonry to Nauvoo, then the impetus may even be earlier, since they both joined the church in 1840. Second, the significance of meeting in the same room as the Masons may have more to do with the room being the best space for meetings rather than it being significant Masonic space. Indeed, the Freemasons in Nauvoo soon began construction of a Masonic hall, whose space would have been more uniquely Masonic. Third, although some of the procedures of the Relief Society seem similar to Masonry, significant differences in ideology and activities exist. In Relief Society meetings, there were no elaborate rituals or a hierarchy of degrees. The Relief Society spent more time in benevolent work than enacting mythic scenes. Finally, terminology like "grow up in degrees" must be considered in context, and thus various interpretations are possible. For example, the phrase "growing up by degrees" could refer instead to the doctrine of receiving line upon line.

Fraternal Auxiliaries and the Relief Society. Just as the Relief Society doesn't reflect an "effort to expand Masonry to include the women of the Church," it is also differs from the secret women's auxiliaries that began appearing in America a decade after Emma Smith began leading the Relief Society. Beginning in the 1850s many secret societies, which admitted only men, began organizing separate and dependant orders for women. These groups include the Order of the Eastern Star, a Masonic auxiliary, and the Degree of Rebekah, an Odd Fellow auxiliary. Eventually, the Red Men also formed such a group, named the Degree of Pocahontas. According to Carnes, this development was concession to growing criticism of secret societies from the National Christian Association, a liberal Protestant group, and from women in general. Schuyler Colfax, the writer of the Degree of Rebekah, confessed that he developed the 1851 ritual to "lessen and ultimately destroy the prejudice felt against the Order by many of the fairer sex." Carnes argues that these auxiliaries were "founded upon an elaborate but seemingly transparent deception," even if these female degrees were popular. Thus, he titles his section on auxiliaries, "Deceiving the Ladies." Clawson takes a less conspiratorial view, but still argues that auxiliaries "were [designed] to reconcile the claims of domesticity and brotherhood."
The auxiliaries, which were often merely shells of the richer male organizations, shared common characteristics. The auxiliaries were decidedly dependant on the male lodges. A woman could join only if her husband or father was already a member of the male lodge, and if that man was expelled from the lodge, his daughter or wife was automatically expelled as well. Even though women could still not attend Odd Fellow meetings, ceremonies of the Degree of Rebekah were presided over by the Worshipful Master of the male lodge. Furthermore, one book review's synthesis of Clawson's and Carnes's auxiliary discussion explains that women's degrees were non-hierarchical, with limited if any degrees to obtain. Thus, Royal Arch Masonry had thirty-three degrees, while their auxiliary, the Order of the Eastern Star had only five. Also, the auxiliaries omitted the "testing element" in the initiations that required neophytes to prove their bravery and ability to be a trustworthy member. Rather, entry into membership was effected, in the words of Carnes, through "dull recitations of Biblical parables." Finally, the rituals were more "word-oriented." There were more discourses and less enactment of mythic pasts.

The Relief Society and the Endowment. Again, the Relief Society in Nauvoo, with its female leadership and largely independent status, does not closely resemble secret auxiliary groups, and thus the argument that the Society was a Masonic auxiliary also falls short. This being true, however, there was some conflation of the Relief Society and Freemasonry (consider the comment about women being admonished to be good Masons in keeping secrets). Seeing the Relief Society as inhabiting a liminal position between service organization and secret society lends credence to the idea that the group's formation, in the words of Mormon historian Carol Cornwall Madsen, "was but another step toward preparing the women to receive the fullness of the gospel" in the temple endowment. As seen above, in the temple, the most significant Mormon rituals took place, and these rituals defied the gender-exclusive rites of most secret societies.

Conclusion

Carnes's depiction of secret societies as a construction of masculinity works with the evidence that Carnes marshals. However, a significant variation on his thesis comes from Mormonism in Nauvoo. Carnes is at least acquainted with Mormonism, because he spends a paragraph of his prologue on Nauvoo, pointing out the well-worn argument that Joseph borrowed Masonic ritual for the endowment. He concludes, "quasi-Masonic ritual figured prominently in the lives of most Mormon men." With this statement, Carnes misses the important fact that "quasi-Masonic" ritual also played an important function for Mormon women. This omission is symptomatic of the way Carnes's model fails to account for 1840s Mormon organizations, which ultimately revolved around temple ordinances and celestial marriage. The Odd Fellow maxim, "each son of Adam is my brother," which invokes the imagery and the brotherhood of many nineteenth-century secret societies does not apply to the most important Mormon secret society. In the endowment the imagery includes not just Adam, but also Eve. The ultimate aim is not brotherhood, but eternal families.

Endnotes

2 Stevens, The Cyclopædia of Fraternities, xvi.

5 D. Michael Quinn draws several comparisons between the Danites, the Council of Fifty, the Holy Order, and Nauvoo Freemasonry, including shared purposes, participants, and ideology. D. Michael Quinn, Mormon Hierarchy: Origins of Power (Salt Lake City: Signature, 1994), 113-17, 130-133. For example, he points out how the membership in these groups often overlapped: "At least 15 percent of Smith's [Council of] Fifty were bound by four different oaths of secrecy: Danite, Masonic, endowment, and Council of Fifty." Quinn, Mormon Hierarchy, 131.

6 The Mormon participation in Freemasonry makes this group unlike the others, since Masonry originated outside of Mormonism. However, Durham points out that Joseph's use of Masonry was innovative and was at odds with mainstream American Freemasonry. Reed C. Durham, "Is There No Help for the Widow's Son," typescript of MHA Presidential Address, 4, 6, 20 April 1974, Nauvoo, Illinois, 3, L. Tom Perry Special Collections, Harold B. Lee Library, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah.

7 Stevens, The Cyclopædia of Fraternities, xvi.

8 Carnes, Secret Ritual and Manhood, 123.

10 Clawson, Constructing Brotherhood, 128. Seen as part of this larger secret society movement, the temple endowment's similarity with Masonry is not surprising.

12 Carnes, Secret Ritual and Manhood, 99-101. In many ways, this Red Men initiation is similar to other group's initiations. Carnes summarizes common motifs in fraternal ritual: "In every major order at least one ritual developed each of the following themes: (1) an initiate at the outset of his task was portrayed as immature or unmasculine, (2) he overcame obstacles as he embarked on a difficult journey through the stages of childhood and adolescence, (3) the journey or ordeal reached a climax when he was killed (or nearly killed) by angry father figures, (4) he was reborn as a man into a new family of approving brethren and patriarchs." Carnes, Secret Ritual and Manhood, 125.

18 Godfrey shows that "within five months the Nauvoo lodge initiated 256 candidates and raised 243 more, six times the number of initiations and elevations from all the other lodges in the state combined." Kenneth W. Godfrey, "Joseph Smith and the Masons," Journal of the Illinois Historical Society 65, no. 1 (1971): 85. By the time the Saints left Nauvoo, they had initiated well over a thousand men. Durham lists the number as 1366. Hogan gives an even higher number-1529. Durham, "Is There No Help for the Widow's Son," 3; Mervin B. Hogan, The Official Minutes of Nauvoo Lodge U. D. (Des Moines: Research Lodge No. 2, n.d.), 81. By way of comparison, Godfrey reports that in 1840, United States Masonic membership stood at 2,072. Godfrey, "Joseph Smith and the Masons," 84. It should be noted that by the summer of 1842, the Masonic hierarchy in Illinois was moving to suspend all Masonic activity in Nauvoo for alleged irregularities in procedures. Thus, this rapid influx of Mormon Masons was invalid in the eyes of Freemasonry.

20Masur writes, "One must wonder about the age of these initiates, about regional variations in membership, and about the meaning of initiation to members of the separate auxiliary female orders." Louis P. Masur, review of Secret Ritual and Manhood in Victorian America, by Mark C. Carnes, The American Historical Review 96 (April 1991), 592.

22Stevens, The Cyclopaedia of Fraternities, 385-88. Additionally, Carnes's model doesn't leave room for spiritualists and occultists, groups whose ideology sometimes merged with secret societies. These groups experienced great growth in the nineteenth-century and were also reactions against Protestantism. Sydney E. Ahlstrom, A Religious History of the American People (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1972), 488-89, 1044-45. Despite being part of a similar reaction against Protestantism, spiritualism and Masonry have significant differences. For a discussion of some differences, see Moore, "The Masonic Lodge Room," 35.

The spring of 1842 figures in the history of several of these secret groups. Joseph Smith became a Mason on March 15 and two days later organized the Relief Society. The next month, on April 7, he received the revelation about the Council of Fifty. A month later, on May 4, he began performing endowments. While being suggestive, this chronology does not provide conclusive proof of a direct relationship between these four organizations.

Much has been written about the similarities between the temple endowment and Freemasonry. However, many scholars admit that significant differences exist. For example, Quinn has written, "the Mormon endowment or Holy Order had the specific purpose of preparing the initiate for 'an ascent into heaven,' where as Freemasonry did not." Quinn, Mormon Hierarchy, 115, 352-53. See also Kenneth W. Godfrey, "Freemasonry and the Temple," Encyclopedia of Mormonism, ed. Daniel H. Ludlow, 5 vols. (New York: Macmillan, 1992): 2:528-29.

Derr also sees the influence of Masonry in the Nauvoo Temple, polygamy, prayer circles, the Council of the Fifty, and the Jupiter talisman Joseph owned. Durham, "Is There No Help for the Widow's Son," 1-7. Interestingly, Roger D. Launius has also questioned whether Carnes's model for secret societies could be used to explain the acceptance of polygamy in Nauvoo. Roger D. Launius, "From Old to New Mormon History: Fawn Brodie and the Legacy of Scholarly Analysis of Mormonism," Reconsidering No Man Knows My History: Fawn Brodie and Joseph Smith in Retrospect, ed. Newell G. Bringham (Logan: Utah State University Press, 1996), 214.

40 Madsen, "Mormon Women and the Temple," 80; Derr, Women of the Covenant, 27. This room would also be the venue for initiations into another secret society, the endowment, six weeks later. See Roberts, History of the Church, 5:1-3. Elizabeth Rollins Lightner even called it the Masonic Lodge Room. Mary Elizabeth Rollins Lightner, Article-Relief Society, 17 March 1914, 1, Mary Elizabeth Lightner Collection, L. Tom Perry Special Collections, Harold B. Lee Library, Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah.

42 Relief Society Minutes, quoted in Buerger, The Mysteries of Godliness, 51. Buerger writes, "During the organization of the Female Relief Society [. . .] Smith filled his address with Masonic allusions: 'Let this Presidency serve as a constitution'; Smith 'proposed that the Society should go into a close examination of every candidate. . . that the Society should grow up by degrees. . . he was going to make of this Society a kingdom of priests as in Enoch's day' [. . .] [Buerger also quotes] an epistle signed by Joseph smith [sic], Brigham young [sic], and four others: 'there may be some among you who are not sufficiently skill'd in Masonry to keep a secret. . . Let this Epistle be had as a private matter in your Society, and we shall learn whether you are good Masons.'" Buerger, The Mysteries of Godliness, 51.

44 Godfrey, "Joseph Smith as a Mason," 83.

45 Quinn Mormon Hierarchy, 537; Walgren, "James Adams," 127. Walgren suggests that Adams could have joined the church as early as 1835, but that he most likely joined in 1840.

48 Carnes, Secret Ritual and Manhood, 85.

49 Carnes, Secret Ritual and Manhood, 81, 88.

50 Clawson, Constructing Brotherhood, 193.

51 Carnes, Secret Ritual and Manhood, 86.

52 Carnes, Secret Ritual and Manhood, 86.

A Brief Description of the Christian Examiner
David Allred
9 July 2002

The Christian Examiner and General Review (as it was called from 1829-1844) was an important religious periodical and served as a leading voice for Unitarianism. Founded in 1813 by William Channing, the Christian Examiner (then known as the Christian Disciple), ran until 1869. For the years 1841-42, the editor was either Rev, William Ware or A. Lamson and E. S. Gannett. Published in Boston, the periodical was closely allied with Transcendentalism and often waged war with The Spirit of the Pilgrims, an anti-Unitarian periodical. (American Periodicals, 1741-1900: An Index to the Microfilm Collections, ed. Jean Hoornstra and Trudy Heath [Ann Arbor: University Microfilms International, 1979]).

The articles in the periodical were often book reviews in which the author took a recently published book, commented on it, and used it as a springboard for what he wanted to say on the subject. Some of the reviews were as short as a paragraph, and others were 20-30 pages long. As a religious periodical the Christian Examiner was deeply interested in religious topics, and perhaps half of the articles deal with theology in general or Unitarian doctrine. Often the articles responded to a sermon that had recently been delivered and published.

Still, the Christian Examiner by no means focused only on religion, strictly defined. Reading the periodical, one gets the sense that its function was to be a source of intellectual stimulation for its readers. Or better yet, that its readers looked to it not only for doctrine and devotions (an emphasis that at times was lacking), but also for literature, science, politics, history, and so forth. In the years I examined, the periodical included articles on geology, horticulture, politics, poetry, fiction, philosophy, and others disciplines. Often the inclusion of subjects from this expansive list was justified by an appeal to "civilization." For example, an article about China and Great Britain begins, "The English war with China is an object of interest to the civilized world, on political, commercial, and philanthropic grounds" (Vol 33, July 1842, pg. 281). This rhetorical stance is not surprising since one can easily argue that Protestantism and "Civilization" were conflated in nineteenth-century America.

Some assumptions of the Christian Examiner were very clear. One was an emphasis on reason and a distrust of emotion. In an article critiquing the writings of those advocating the Oxford Movement, the editor writes, "We might even wish, that they had less faith; for an excess of faith seems, after all, to play fool with their reason. (Vol 30, March 1841, pg 42). Furthermore, the periodical had a definite Unitarian bias. Several articles were critiques of where other denominations were going wrong (often denominations outside mainstream Protestantism) or responses to attacks on Unitarianism. At times, however, there is a tolerance for other Christian faiths in the sense that the periodical at times presented other doctrines in a relatively objective fashion. One catches glimpses of the ideal of disinterested scholarship in the Christian Examiner.

In the issues published in 1841-42, there are no direct references to Mormonism, but as my archive entries show, there were several points of common concern. Still, these points are often on topics that concern many religions (but topics that Mormons understood fairly uniquely). Therefore, there are no references to topics like Kolob, magic, Mother in Heaven, or temple rituals. Rather, the points of common interest are more often on subjects like sacrament, scripture, authority, or Atonement.

---

Index Entry

Topic(s): One true church, Basis of authority, Revelation
Author: N/A (see Nature of Source below)
Title of Book: -
Title of Article: "Reasons for becoming a Roman Catholic; addressed to the Society of Friends. By Frederick Lucas, Esq., of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law, London. Cincinnati: Published by the Catholic Society for the Diffusion of Religious Knowledge. 1840."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Examiner and General Review (vol 30, no. 34)
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Company
Date of Publication: March 1841
Library Location: American Periodical Series, BYU Microfilm, FILM 051 B #453.
Nature of Source: This article appears in a scholarly religious periodical published every two months. The periodical focuses on a variety of topics: the 1841 volume includes discussions of poetry, the history of Harvard, medieval church history, geology, and Emerson's writing. Each issue tends to includes 4-5 articles, which are often long reviews of works published elsewhere, followed by several "Critical Notices," which are shorter reviews of books. Thus, the articles have no definite author and are summaries and responses to the writings of others.
Comment: The discussion of Lucas' book reveals the reasons why one man changed religious affiliation and highlights two issues that Lucas used to used to justify one faith as superior to another. His argument hinges on the idea that Catholicism and Quakerism are very similar and that they avoid the pitfalls of Protestantism. Interestingly, this discussion of the merits of Catholicism (and Quakerism) is discussed in a Unitarian periodical. The writer seems to value the argument itself, but is also defending Unitarianism. The writer comments that Lucas' "remarks are ingenious and plausible, but we should suppose little likely to satisfy any one but himself: They are however novel so far as this point is concerned, and on that account perhaps, their appearance is worthy of being chronicled" (110). The pronoun references in the passage are unclear, and there seems to be contradictions in the second quoted excerpt.
Researcher: David Allred
Excerpt (pages): Passage on the one true church: "According to him [Frederick Lucas], the Quakers and Catholics, although they differ as to what the true church is, agree that there is but one true church. Quakerism, like Catholicism, does not regard itself as a fragment of the Christian body, one among other sects, but as the one true church. . . .
The same reasons which caused the Friends to reject the lifeless forms of Protestantism, would have led them, had they understood their nature, to adopt those of the Romish church. . . ." (110).

Passage on the basis of authority: " . . . . The Friends differ from all Protestants not merely in believing them in error as to their creeds, but in the conviction that they fundamentally in the means they adopt to arrive at truth. Not less than the Catholics, they utterly reject the right of private judgment as an arrogant pretense to make the human understanding the judge and censor of the divine counsels. With the Catholics, they reject as absurd and monstrous this great fundamental principle of Protestantism. They agree with the Catholics in recognizing the necessity of an infallible guide in faith and practice.
But where shall this be found? Whatever may be the value of the Scriptures as an instrument or means, they cannot, in their estimation, be regarded as the ground rule of faith. With them the infallible rule is the testimony of the spirit within,- divine, inward revelations from God. This, and this only, is the infallible guide to each individual and to the church in all ages, and if its teachings be sincerely obeyed, it will infallibly lead the seeker after divine knowledge into all truth. The Friends and Catholics, according to the author of this work, do not begin to differ in fundamental principles, till the question arises as to how true revelations are to be distinguished from false - the inward teachings of God's spirit, from the mere imaginations of man. The Quaker answers; 'By their conformity with the Holy Scriptures.' The Catholic answers 'By their conformity with the faith and discipline of the Catholic Church'" (111).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Index Entry
Topic(s): Revelation
Author: -
Title of Book: -
Title of Article: "Transcendental Theology."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Examiner and General Review (vol 30, no. 35)
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Company
Date of Publication: May 1841
Library Location: American Periodical Series, BYU Microfilm, FILM 051 B #453.
Nature of Source: This article appears in a scholarly religious periodical published every two months. The Christian Examiner was a strong advocate for the Unitarian faith and often opposed the anti-Unitarian paper Spirit of Pilgrims. The periodical focuses on a variety of topics: the 1841 volume includes discussions of poetry, the history of Harvard, medieval church history, geology, and Emerson's writing. Each issue tends to includes 4-5 articles, which are often long reviews of works published elsewhere, followed by several "Critical Notices," which are shorter reviews of books. Thus, the articles have no definite author and are often summaries and responses to the writings of others.
Comment: This passage represents, in some respects, a very different model of revelation than was viewed by early Saints. The impersonal, highly rational concept of Deity revealing information to humans is at odds with the visions of Joseph Smith (i.e. accounts of the First Vision when he sees God and Jesus and is told his sins are forgiven.)
On the other hand, the emphasis on believing the authority of others fits with what some Mormons would have felt in regards to Joseph's teachings or the witnesses of the Book of Mormon, for example. At any rate, this idea of revelation suggests how, in Unitarian circles at least, the concept revelation would carry a different connotation.

Researcher: David Allred
Excerpt (pages): "We now come to the second mode in which the proposed problem may be solved; that is, the supposition, that the Deity may announce through some fact in the external world, that he is the author of the moral law within us. Such an announcement would constitute a revelation properly so called, and the system of religion founded upon it may be far more comprehensive than the natural scheme already explained, since it is at least conceivable, that through the same external fact may be communicated to us, not merely the primal truth respecting the origin of the moral law, but a multitude of others, relating both to doctrine and practice. It may be necessary to remark again, that the principles to be laid down are not meant to be applied specially to Christianity, or to any other revelation in particular, but to all possible revelations.

To reveal is to make known. By the very idea of a revelation, therefore, it is supposed, that something is to be made known to us which we did not know before. Now all knowledge that exists a priori,- in other words, all knowledge obtained without the aid of experience,- such as the theorems of the geometer and the original dictates of conscience,- is derived, or pointed out; it cannot be revealed. All propositions, the truth of which, depending on the very constitution of our minds, may be demonstrated, rest on the evidence of that demonstration, and can in no proper sense be said to be made known to us. Only historical knowledge, or facts perceived by sense, can be made known, since the evidence here rests [page 202 ends] upon authority; that is, upon our confidence in the veracity and the means of observation of the individual who discloses them to us. And farther, it is not the perception itself that is revealed, but the fact that another has experienced that perception. If, for instance, another person gives me a rose to smell of, he does not reveal to me the truth that the rose smells sweet; I find that out myself. But if there be no means of getting the flower in question, and he assures me from his previous experience that the odor is pleasant, then the fact is revealed to me, since I receive it on his authority. Such an assurance may be handed down from one person to another in long succession, and the fact revealed is then said to rest upon tradition." (202-203).

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp. (Entire article 34 pgs)
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Company
Date of Publication: September 1840
Library Location: American Periodical Series, BYU Microfilm, FILM 051 B #453.
Nature of Source: This article appears in a scholarly religious periodical published every two months. The Christian Examiner was a strong advocate for the Unitarian faith and often opposed the anti-Unitarian paper Spirit of Pilgrims. The periodical focuses on a variety of topics: the 1841 volume includes discussions of poetry, the history of Harvard, medieval church history, geology, and Emerson's writing. Each issue tends to include 4-5 articles, which are often long reviews of works published elsewhere, followed by several "Critical Notices," which are shorter reviews of books. Thus, the articles have no definite author and are often summaries and responses to the writings of others.

Comment: This article, which is a review of two recent publications on missionary work, makes the case that the religion in the modern world is flourishing by using evidence of missionary work in foreign lands. The article also reviews some of the problems of missionary work throughout the world, especially the financial costs of such an undertaking. Several themes seem especially relevant to the Restoration, including the discussions below about conversion by violence, the relationship of evangelizing to the Second Coming, and locations in which missions were being established. The Restoration differs in missionary ideology from this article in the lack of ecumenical cooperation. Many of the early missions of the Church went to locations which are mentioned in this article, but several years later. In 1840, Great Britain was receiving the bulk of Mormon foreign missionary efforts.

Researcher: David Allred

Excerpts (pages):

"It [foreign missionary work] is in a singular degree a work of faith,-faith in religion,-or less abstractly, the promises of God. . . . It is no longer the work of the church as such, acting with unquestioned views and authority; it is the spontaneous effort of the mass of the Christian world, at least in protestant countries, and is essentially a popular movement. Thence it affords an obvious proof not only that religion has not suffered any decay in its spirit and essence, but that it acts with greater power, and that man's need of it is felt more deeply than ever" (52).

"The very magnitude of the object, which is nothing less than to convert the whole world simultaneously, and which by its vastness and grandeur, recommends itself so powerfully to many minds, will be found, we believe, to be in a great degree a source of disappointment and defeat, unless the Deity should choose by some irresistible influence to renovate the world at once without human instrumentality. The means to be used are comparatively very limited, while the object is not so. If it were proposed only to convert the world by slow stages, in conformity with the law of progress by which society has always been governed, the case might not seem so hopeless; but "the coming of the Lord" must be hastened, and the regeneration of every part of the globe must go on with equal steps. And not only is it proposed to make disciples of the Jew, the Mohammedan, and the Pagan, but strenuous efforts are making to convert the doubtful Christians of Asia and even to re-christianize, or as it is termed evangelize some of the most refined nations of Europe" (54).

In a report from the Madura Mission: "... 'Does not the providence of God point the church to India as a promising field to cultivate? But alas, we have neither the means nor the men to occupy it, and the prospect is that, in spite of all we can do, another generation, ready for the reception of gospel must go down to the grave before the land will be fully occupied" (55).

"Something [conversions in Europe] also was accomplished by the sword, far more indeed than the Christian world has ever been willing to acknowledge" (60).

"With the missionary of our times the case is widely different. He is the representative of a vastly more intelligent an refined age. He cannot use the sword, nor, except in the very feeble and imperfect manner, the civil power. Interpreting Christianity in the light of a highly cultivated period, if he is faithful to his trust, he can tolerate none of the immoral practices of paganism, much less make use of any. He demands more of the pagan than the ancient missionary did, because he carries with him not only a severer code of morals, but one which extends to a greater variety of social relations, while he is himself forbidden to in that hard ascetic mode, by which his predecessor of the olden time frequently recommended himself as being the model of mortal sanctity (61).

Length of Relevant Material: 12 pgs.

Index Entry

Topic(s): Baptismal covenant, Mode of baptism
Author: -
Title of Book: -
Title of Article: "Tracts for the Times, by Members of the University of Oxford. Vol II.
Part II., IV., and V. 1839, 1840. London." Title of Periodical: The Christian Examiner and General Review (vol 30, 3d series, volume 12)
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Company
Date of Publication: March 1841
Library Location: American Periodical Series, BYU Microfilm, FILM 051 B #453.
Nature of Source: This article appears in a scholarly religious periodical published every two months. The Christian Examiner was a strong advocate for the Unitarian faith and often opposed the anti-Unitarian paper Spirit of Pilgrims. The periodical focuses on a variety of topics: the 1841 volume includes discussions of poetry, the history of Harvard, medieval church history, geology, and Emerson's writing. Each issue tends to includes 4-5 articles, which are often long reviews of works published elsewhere, followed by several "Critical Notices," which are shorter reviews of books. Thus, the articles have no definite author and are often summaries and responses to the writings of others.
Comment: This review of the doctrine of baptism as set out by the Oxford movement is valuable because it reveals the Oxford argument (at least hints of it) and a reaction of a Protestant, "low church" view. The scorn with which the reviewer treats the Oxford tracts is comparable to the tone of only a few of the other reviews in the periodical, and the allusion to electric shocks from Dr. King's machines seems to be a rhetorical attempt to further dismiss the tracts. One wonders if the tract was so badly written that it deserves such a stinging treatment; if this is not the case the rhetoric of this review may be the most interesting aspect of it. Furthermore, it is interesting to note that the fragments quoted contain Old Testament allusions (i.e. Holy of Holies, the flood) to explain the importance and meaning of baptism. Reading the tract itself would make it clearer whether the author is using a typological approach or perhaps locating Christian ritual in the Old Testament. Finally, in 1841 Joseph Smith has expanded the importance of baptism in Mormon theology by revealing the ordinance of baptism for the dead. The emphasis on the ordinance places closer to the Oxford school than the Unitarian school.

Researcher: David Allred

Excerpts (pages): "The only one of the tracts, which bears the name of its author, is that by Dr. Pusey, on "Scriptural Views of Holy Baptism." It extends to four hundred octavo pages and we use no figure of speech when we say, that more than two-thirds of its contents are positively unintelligible to us. That the human souls are regenerated from the effects of their original sin by baptism, is the point from which the argument of the tracts proceeds to pile up texts of Scripture, and extracts from the Fathers, which, when thus printed, page after page, have no more meaning to us than would so many sheets printed from types arranged for Walker's Dictionary, but thrown into confusion by an electric shock from one of Dr. King's best machines. That baptism is essential to salvation is the only intelligible statement of doctrine contained in the volume. Some of the other propositions, for which Scripture and tradition are adduced, as proofs of these; "baptism acts on implanted feeling, to guard what we have;" "baptism the source of an illumination;" "a life-giving mark in the name of the Trinity;" "our approach to our Holy of Holies, and High Priest;" "miracle of the iron axe in Jordan typical;" "the flood, the type of the restoration of man and destruction of sin, by baptism." After this, there will be no need of a tract to vindicate "Reserve in communicating Religious Knowledge."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg (entire review of the Oxford tracts is 8 pgs).

Index Entry

Topic(s): Prophets, Christianization of the Old Testament
Author: -
Title of Book: -
Title of Article: "A Discourse on the Transient and the Permanent in Christianity; preached at the ordination of Mr. Charles C. Shackford, in the Hawes Place Church in Boston, May 19, 1841. By Theodore Parker, Minister of the Second Church of Roxbury.
Title of Periodical: The Christian Examiner and General Review (vol 31, 3rd series, no 1)
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Company
Date of Publication: September 1841
Library Location: American Periodical Series, BYU Microfilm, FILM 051 B #453.
Nature of Source: This article appears in a scholarly religious periodical published every two months. The Christian Examiner was a strong advocate for the Unitarian faith and often opposed the anti-Unitarian paper Spirit of Pilgrims. The periodical focuses on a variety of topics: the 1841 volume includes discussions of poetry, the history of Harvard, medieval church history, geology, and Emerson's writing. Each issue tends to includes 4-5 articles, which are often long reviews of works published elsewhere, followed by several "Critical Notices," which are shorter reviews of books. Thus, the articles have no definite author and are often summaries and responses to the writings of others.
Comment: The author of this article argues against the secular position of Parker, who believes that the scriptures are not always derived from prophecy. The author/reviewer writing in the Christian Examiner makes a conservative argument for the reality of Old Testament prophecy of Christ and his mission. His assertion of the "gospel of the prophets" compares with how Joseph imagined the Old Testament. However, one should not that the author's statement is qualified with the phrase "we have sometimes imagined" and the conditional verb "could." After the excerpted discussion of the Old Testament, the article soon turns to the supposed "transitoriness" of the New Testament.

Researcher: David Allred

Excerpts (pages): "After some general and on the whole just remarks concerning the changeableness of theological doctrines from age to age, Mr. Parker selects two from "many instances," in illustration of "this transitoriness of doctrines." "First, the doctrine respecting the origin and authority of the Old and New Testament." The Old Testament is first spoken of; and so lamentable are the evils, that have flowed from a belief in its infallible inspiration, "that it makes one weep to think of the follies deduced therefrom"! Praecipe lugubres cantus, Melpomene. These authors in fact, "had only that inspiration which is common to other men equally pious and wise." But widely and sadly different has been the general faith of the Christian church. "The most distant events, even such as are still in the arms of time, were supposed to be clearly foreseen and foretold by pious Hebrews several centuries before Christ. It has been assumed at the outset, with no shadow of evidence, that those writers held a miraculous communication with God, such as he has granted to no other man." We are amazed at the rashness of this assertion. What? Has it been with no shadow of evidence, that the church universal have believed in the spirit of prophecy? Have the vast labors, which have been expended by so many of the choicest minds of our race upon the visions of Isaiah and of Daniel, upon the divine mission of Moses, and the higher than human [page 100 ends] origin of the Jewish law, amounted to no more than baseless assumption? Did Jesus assume at the outset without a shadow of evidence, that the Scriptures testified of himself, that things were written concerning him "in the Law, and in the Psalms, and in the Prophets?" For it surely will not be pretended that those old writers knew intuitively that Jesus would come, or that they could have had any knowledge of him except by "miraculous communication with God." Is it modest, is it ingenuous to treat alleged fulfillems of prophecy, which so many generations of holy men have regarded as the pillar and groundwork of the faith, as if they were the mere day-dreams of irresponsible fanatics? For ourselves, we have not yet come out of the darkness. We are still so superstitious as to suppose ourselves reading of the veritable Jesus of Nazareth in books written centuries before he was born; nay we have sometimes imagined that we could select and arrange a gospel according to the prophets, which should agree marvellously with the narratives of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John" (100-101)

Length of Relevant Material: 17 pgs.
Title of Article: "A Sermon preached before the First Congregational Society in Burlington, Vt. By their Minister, George G. Ingersoll, and published at their request. Burlington: Chauncey Goodrich. 1841. 8vo. pp.32."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Examiner and General Review (vol 31, 3rd series, vol 13, no. 1)

Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Company
Date of Publication: September 1841

Library Location: American Periodical Series, BYU Microfilm, FILM 051 B #453.

Nature of Source: This article appears in a scholarly religious periodical published every two months. The Christian Examiner was a strong advocate for the Unitarian faith and often opposed the anti-Unitarian paper Spirit of Pilgrims. The periodical focuses on a variety of topics: the 1841 volume includes discussions of poetry, the history of Harvard, medieval church history, geology, and Emerson's writing. Each issue tends to includes 4-5 articles, which are often long reviews of works published elsewhere, followed by several "Critical Notices," which are shorter reviews of books. Thus, the articles have no definite author and are often summaries and responses to the writings of others.

Comment: The reviewer in the Christian Examiner quotes at length Ingersoll's sermon and approves of it. The excerpt below are Ingersoll's quoted words. The emphasis on the true nature of God in this metaphor reminds one of the King Follett discourse. Ingersoll presents with metaphor a very anthropomorphic conception of God as a being with feelings, offspring, moral dilemmas, etc. In some respects, this passage matches Joseph's teachings of the Fatherhood of God. However, one wonders how much Ingersoll's statements are meant to be taken figuratively. If he is not speaking literally, here he diverges from Joseph's teachings. Furthermore, Ingersoll, unlike Joseph does not deal with what happens when the children of God "grow up." Joseph's teaching of deification takes surpasses Ingersoll's anthropomorphism.

Researcher: David Allred

Excerpts (pages): The "popular doctrine of the atonement" is a false one that relies on pagan ideas of God: "The Pagan trembled before his god, and sought to win his favor or avert his anger. So he built his altar, and brought his sheaf, or slaughtered his victim; and as the flame ascended and the cloud of incense rolled, he felt happy in the thought that he had secured the goodwill of his deity. He went to him, as among men the feeble go to the strong, with a gift in his hands-to conciliate, to propitiate, to buy protection and kindness. He went to his God as the slave to his master, the subject to his king, and kneeled, and sung his song of praise, and offered his present, believing in his heart that his god would smile, even as the master and the king would smile. . . ."

". . . here is my answer to this doctrine. Our Father in Heaven. I ask each parent, for a moment, to imagine his child before him. That child has offended, but he, now, kneels to him for forgiveness. With streaming eyes and lifted hands, he says, Father forgive me. He weeps over his past disobedience, he promises amendment-nay, he says, take me on trial, and if I do not reform, then cast me out to die. What human parent would spurn from him a child like this? What human parent would say, I cannot forgive you; but if one of my long tried, dutiful, innocent children, will come and give his limbs to the fetters, his back to the scourge, and suffer the punishment which you deserve, then, I will forgive you and grant you my blessing. And now I ask, what child on earth would accept a parents' blessing on terms like these? What man, with the true feelings of a man, would see his brother groan, and bleed, and faint, because, in his affection, he was willing to endure it all to save him from his father's [end of page 132] curse? Shall we dare to imagine such a situation for our Heavenly Father?" (132-33).
churches, many would feel that they have a part and an interest in religion, which they now consider as denied to them. I do not say that this is a good reason for abandoning the ordinance; but I say it is a good reason for considering most seriously the views that are entertained of it. And I do say also, that so it was not in the beginning. It is observable, indeed, that in the founder of this institution there was none of that extreme sensitiveness about its profanation, that has prevailed in later days; for he did not forbid Judas from partaking in it, though he knew that murder and betrayal were in his heart. And when it fell into the hands of the Apostles, when the early Christian congregations were gathered, we know that all who believed in Christ, and desired to place themselves under his discipline,-that is to say, that the entire company of Christian worshippers,-were communicants; that they as much and as freely participated in the act of communion, as in the act of prayer. The table of the Lord's Supper was spread; and the only condition of approach to it was faith in Christ,-a hearty reception of him as heaven-commissioned Master and Saviour. There is no evidence that there was any church vote, or any exertion of Apostolic will, in the matter. A credible expression of faith was the unquestioned passport. And when the children of these primitive confessors grew up, and took the places of their fathers, they all succeeded to the inheritance of their privileges. So it continued to be, till the time of the Reformation; so it is in the Catholic church to this day" (194-95).

After several pages describing the significance of the sacrament, the author finishes with a poem/lyrics:
"Guide me, O thou Great Jehovah!
Pilgrim through this barren land:
I am weak, but thou art mighty;
Hold me with thy powerful hand.
Bread of Heaven! Bread of Heaven!
Feed me till I want no more." (208)

Length of Relevant Material: 14 pgs.
5 articles, which are often long reviews of works published elsewhere, followed by several "Critical Notices," which are shorter reviews of books. Thus, the articles have no definite author and are often summaries and responses to the writings of others.

Comment: This review quotes a passage from Waterston's book, which is described as a volume "that may be used in the closet, by him who would fan the devotional flame on his heart's alter, or abroad, as a manual by the Christian who would carry his piety into action" (126). The treatment of children's death is comparable to the Mormon view of infant baptism because of the way the writer assumes the salvation of children, or at least their going to a "spiritual world" or the "home of the soul." However, the writer does not mention the necessity of baptism for children over age 8.

Researcher: David Allred

Excerpts (pages): "The last piece, on the "Death of Children," will go to the heart of every parent who reads it, and not of parents only. There is a principle of human nature which it will reach, a deep-seated sympathy with all holy affections, which such an eloquent appeal must touch. We cannot refrain from quoting one or two of the reflections. "If, then, a child is taken away and others are left, it throws a degree of sanctity around those who remain. They are not simply connected with this world, but with another. One has gone, and they also may go. This idea makes every child a monitor pointing to the spiritual world, and unless parents are insensible to spiritual things, they will, by these means have their strengthened, and their thoughts often led to the home of the soul. But even the parent does not lose a child, the fact that children may and do die, tends to call out the affections. If it were a fact, that no child had ever been known to die, all children would be looked upon as future men and women. But now there is uncertainty, there are vague possibilities, and the present is valued the more, because the future is unknown. Fear make Hope more beautiful."-p.289" (128).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg.

---

Index Entry

Topic(s): Book of Mormon, Translation; Bible Revision, Translation

Author: A. P. P.

Title of Book: -

Title of Article: "On Inspiration"

Title of Periodical: The Christian Examiner and General Review (vol 32, 3rd series, vol 14, no. 2)

Place of Publication: Boston

Publisher: James Munroe and Company

Date of Publication: May 1842

Library Location: American Periodical Series, BYU Microfilm, FILM 051 B #454.

Nature of Source: This article appears in a scholarly religious periodical published every two months. The Christian Examiner was a strong advocate for the Unitarian faith and often opposed the anti-Unitarian paper Spirit of Pilgrims. The periodical focuses on a variety of topics: the 1841 volume includes discussions of poetry, the history of Harvard, medieval church history, geology, and Emerson's writing. Each issue tends to includes 4-5 articles, which are often long reviews of works published elsewhere, followed by several "Critical Notices," which are shorter reviews of books. Thus, the articles have no definite author and are often summaries and responses to the writings of others.

Comment: This article on the reality of inspiration frames itself with questions of Biblical accuracy and truth. While there are portions of the Bible that seem to be mundane and common writings rather than spiritual truths (the writer does not fully delineate what constitutes each category), the record, they maintain, is still inspired from God.

The author acknowledges that God can on occasion inspire men (and women?), and presents a model of revelation that can be compared to how Joseph produced scripture. One can assume that the author of this piece would not consider Joseph Smith a "sacred writer," but Joseph's claims to know the mind and will of God fit within the framework of inspiration below. Still, this article does not mention the use of seer stones or the Urim and Thummin. Additionally, Joseph's revision of the Bible could be seen as an attack on the inspiration of the scriptural writers, even if others would see it as only an attack on translators and scribes.

Researcher: David Allred

Excerpts (pages): "But what is inspiration? We mean by this word, in its application to the Scriptures, a divine influence exerted upon the minds of the sacred writers, to aid them in the exhibition of truth, and to save them from hurtful error. No one we presume, at the present day, would maintain that the very words of Scripture were dictated by the divine spirit; that the genealogies in the first book of Chronicles were breathed by heaven into the author's mind; that there was anything supernatural in Paul's sending for his cloak and parchment; in fine, that the sacred writings were the mere channels of revelation. . . ." (205).

"But, while we believe that the sacred writers wrote each in his own style, and with a large degree of freedom, we maintain that they were inspired, that their minds were preternaturally enlightened and guided, that holy men wrote as they were moved by the Holy Spirit. For, in the first place, the idea of inspiration is in strict accordance with reason and intrinsic probability. We cannot deny to the Father of man's spirit that power of direct and recognized communication with it, which he has granted to fellow men. We cannot suppose that God has opened the soul to the inbreathings of other souls, and left us no avenue for the entrance of his own voice. No; if man has a soul, God must have the key to its every apartment, and must needs have at his command even those modes of access and forms of speech, which, for good reasons, he rarely sees fit to use." (206).

Length of Relevant Material: 14 pgs.

Index Entry

Topic(s): Second Coming, Preparations of the earth and preceding events

Author: -

Title of Book: -

Title of Article: "A Critical and Historical Interpretation of the Prophecies of Daniel.
By Nathaniel S. Folsom. Boston. 1842. 12mo."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Examiner and General Review (vol 33, 3rd series, vol 15, no. 1)

Place of Publication: Boston

Publisher: James Munroe and Company
Comment: This review of Folsom's book treats Millerism and millennialism with scorn. However, the author seems to imply that millennialism is "perplexing" or even influencing some Unitarians, which calls forth questions of how millennialism was a folk belief, existing, perhaps, in some cases outside of the official doctrines of established religions.

Researcher: David Allred

Complete Excerpt (pages): "This is not a book for critics and theologians, and the author does not claim, we believe, to have made any discoveries in the difficult art of interpreting Prophecy. He was induced to undertake the work of exposition, it would seem, in consequence of the new interest awakened on the subject of Scripture prediction, in a portion of the community, by the foolish fancies recently broached, and which, strange to say, find advocates, about the approaching end of the world, and personal advent of Christ, to take place in 1843. The common reader, who sits down to study the book of Daniel, we think, will find the volume a help, and we commend it especially to the attention of such as allow themselves to be perplexed by those who are [page 123 ends] crying, lo here, or lo there, and who confidently predict that the world is to speedily end" (123-24).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 paragraph (quoted completely above) in a discussion of the meaning of the atonement of Jesus Christ. Their discussion argues for a finite atonement, applicable only to the elect, and not to all.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "The atonement . . . when by that term is intended the ground, or meritorious cause of actual reconciliation, was frequently spoken of in the bible as the righteousness of one, which came upon all men that ever were justified, unto justification of life, and any obedience unto death, which had not secured unto all for whom that obedience was rendered actual justification unto life, would not have been any efficient, adequate, or real atonement" (30).

"Since I arrived in heaven I have learned, that to represent the atonement as having been sufficient for purposes for which it was never intended by God, is derogatory to the wisdom of our Heavenly King. . . (31).

Length of Relevant Material: 6 pp. (28-33)

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Afterlife; Three degrees of glory

Author: Ann Phillips

Title of Book: A vision of heaven & hell

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Barnard, Vt.

Publisher: Dix, Joseph

Date of Publication: 1812

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Early American imprints. Second series; no. 26456 (Shaw & Shoemaker): [080 Sh64a no. 26456]

Nature of Source: An account of a vision experienced by the author, in which she is shown heaven and hell.

Comment: This is largely a traditional account, with a view of heaven as a place of eternal worship of deity and hell as a site of endless torment. Where this narrative is unique is in Phillips' declaration that the condemned "said Amen to their own Condemnation, for they knew they had Justice done them" (2), and in a brief mention of differing glories. In the latter case, the reference is not completely clear, as it could be interpreted as referring either to actual stars or to the "Scripture Worthies" (Enoch, Elijah, etc.).

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "From this I was taken to Heaven, where I say a winged Seraph flying through the midst of HEAVEN crying, HOLY, HOLY, HOLY, LORD GOD ALMIGHTY; and my Soul joined the whole HEAVENLY ARMIES in Amen, and Amen." (2-3)

"I saw GOD's Throne, and the GLORY that issued from it. I also saw the HEAVENLY HOSTS continually falling before the Throne, crying, Worthy, Worthy is the LORD GOD ALMIGHTY. I had a desire to see Enoch and Elijah, and a number of other Scripture Worthies, and was indulged so far as to see them. I saw that one Star differeth from another in Glory, although every vessel was full." (3)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Afterlife; Three degrees of glory

Author: Ann Phillips

Title of Book: A vision of heaven & hell

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Barnard, Vt.

Publisher: Dix, Joseph

Date of Publication: 1812

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Early American imprints. Second series ; no. 26456 (Shaw & Shoemaker): [080 Sh64a no. 26456]

Nature of Source: An account of a vision experienced by the author, in which she is shown heaven and hell.

Comment: This is largely a traditional account, with a view of heaven as a place of eternal worship of deity and hell as a site of endless torment. Where this narrative is unique is in Phillips' declaration that the condemned "said Amen to their own Condemnation, for they knew they had Justice done them" (2), and in a brief mention of differing glories. In the latter case, the reference is not completely clear, as it could be interpreted as referring either to actual stars or to the "Scripture Worthies" (Enoch, Elijah, etc.).

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "From this I was taken to Heaven, where I say a winged Seraph flying through the midst of HEAVEN crying, HOLY, HOLY, HOLY, LORD GOD ALMIGHTY; and my Soul joined the whole HEAVENLY ARMIES in Amen, and

Amen." (2-3)

"I saw GOD's Throne, and the GLORY that issued from it. I also saw the HEAVENLY HOSTS continually falling before the Throne, crying, Worthy, Worthy is the LORD GOD ALMIGHTY. I had a desire to see Enoch and Elijah, and a number of other Scripture Worthies, and was indulged so far as to see them. I saw that one Star differeth from another in Glory, although every vessel was full." (3)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Afterlife

Author: James Richards
Title of Book: A discourse, delivered 14th January, 1810, at Newark [microform] : occasioned by the death of Lewis Le Conte Congar, A.M., a member of the Theological Seminary at Andover : who died at that place 6th January, 1810 / by James Richards.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Newark, N.J.
Publisher: E.B. Gould
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Selected Americana from Sabin's Dictionary of books relating to America ; fiche 29,279: [Z 1201 .S32 Unit 213 29279]
Nature of Source: A Presbyterian funeral sermon delivered in Newark, N.J. in 1810.
Comment: This sermon argues that heaven is a social paradise of sorts, where souls who have had meaningful relationships in mortality continue those associations as they spend the eternities worshiping God. Richards also postulates that deceased spirits may be assigned as ministering spirits or guardian angels over those with whom they had relationships before death.
Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "It is but a little while and we shall follow them. Our dust will soon mingle with their dust, and our spirits join with their spirits. We shall meet them on a deathless shore—meet them refined from the dross of this world; and ... we shall tread the fields of light and glory together. We shall stand with them on Zion's everlasting hills, to look back on the course we have held across this wilderness, to converse of all the events, which have befallen us in our pilgrimage state, and to shout together in one eternal song, the praises of him, who loved us and washed us in his own blood." (13)
"Who knows but he [the deceased] may be employed as a ministering spirit, or a guardian angel to those whom he loved? Who can tell but he may be present in this assembly, or be looking from the battlements above, to witness the manner in which his departure affects the church and congregation once so dear to him?" (15)
Length of Relevant Material: 6 pages
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife
Author: S.C. Pomroy
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Augusta (Me.)
Publisher: Eaton and Severance
Date of Publication: 1831
Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Selected Americana from Sabin's Dictionary of books relating to America ; fiche 26,484: [Z 1201 .S32 Unit 205 26484]
Nature of Source: A Congregational funeral sermon delivered in Bangor, Maine in 1831, attempting to console friends and family with the promise that the righteous dead enjoy a blessed state with Christ in the afterlife.

Comment: This sermon posits heaven as a place of release from sin and tribulation, but primarily as a site for the worship of deity. As such, it is a firmly traditional interpretation of the heavenly state.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "they who have died in the Lord are blessed, because they are with Christ, and shall live and reign with him forever and ever. I might speak of the general assembly and Church of the first born—the spirits of the just made perfect—the glorious company of the redeemed. I might point you to the countless multitude of heavenly angels-sons of the morning, who never sinned—for the Christian, at death, goes to be a companion of these shining ones. But I pass by these, and simply say, that such as have fallen asleep in Christ, have gone to be forever with the Lord their Saviour. . . . The amazing, ineffable glories of divinity are seen concentrated in, and beaming around, his person; softened, familiarized, brought near to the delighted converse of saints and angels, by his glorified humanity. Around his throne all his saints, and angels gather; clothed in the bright and spotless and illustrious robes worn at the marriage supper of the Lamb." (9)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Eternal progression

Author: John Pierce

Title of Book: Address at the funeral of Hon. Thomas A. Davis [microform] : delivered in Central Church, on Tuesday, November 25, 1845 / by John Pierce.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Boston

Publisher: J. H. Eastburn

Date of Publication: 1845

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Selected Americana from Sabin's Dictionary of books relating to America ; fiche 26263: [Z 1201 .S32 Unit 205 26263]

Nature of Source: Funeral sermon for the former mayor of Boston, Thomas A. Davis.

Comment: During his sermon, the author recounts various events from the deceased mayor's life, including a period of sickness, just prior to his death. During this time, according to the pastor, the mayor was particularly moved by the prospect of new "discoveries" which he would be "continually making" during the afterlife—an echo of Joseph Smith's doctrine of eternal progression.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "he dwelt with great delight on the new and ever increasing discoveries, which he hoped to be continually making of the works and ways of God, and of the wonders of redeeming love." (15)
The same instant I saw a man in the room with a bright shining light around him, which appeared brighter than the sun, shining in his full strength; and he spake to me and said he knew all my vain thoughts before I told them to him; and in a moment my spirit left my body and followed my Guide, who conveyed me beyond the moon and starry regions: Then instantly I was carried to the most glorious City, which shone with such brightness that it dazzled my eyes to behold it. . . ." (4)

"... Christ turned to me with a smiling face, and said, Your sins are forgiven, and your transgressions I will remember no more. Then he shewed me, and bid me look and see the prints of the nails in his hands; this, said he, I bore for you: And at those words of his, the heavenly host sung for joy, and Christ said I was welcome as any to all the joys and pleasures of the New Jerusalem, and I could not forbear to sing among the rest." (5-6)

"The people sung after the manner of the christian churches on earth; Christ died, seemed to lead their song. I saw there, men, women and children, and heard them sing together; the little children sung a verse of the Gospel Sonnet. . . ." (6)
Comment: This vision contains the typical bright angelic guides and descriptions of heaven as a glorious place wherein the saved worship God and are happy, but it is also unique in its discussion of different "circles" of spirits, among which glory differs, depending on the spirits' various "Growths in Grace" (11). This gradation, she learns, is according to the spirits capability to receive glory, and each is "fully satisfied" with the glory s/he receives, which echoes Joseph Smith's teachings of the persistence of acquired intelligence and sociality (D&C 130). It also contains a detailed account of Miss Field's mortal acquaintances in their heavenly states, indicating a perception of heaven as a social paradise, and not only a theocentric place of worship.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "I then saw Thousand Thousands of the heavenly Host, ministering unto our God, and Ten Thousand Times Ten Thousand standing before him, singing, Worthy is the Lamb, in such rapturous strains, that I longed to join with them, but found myself unable. They all appeared to be clothed in transparent Garments resembling Silver, coming down to their Feet." (8)

"I then saw a Circle of Spirits, who appeared more glorious than the rest, not far from the Throne. On which I said to my Guides, What is the Reason, that These appear far more resplendent than the other Spirits? They told me, that They were such as had gone through much Tribulation. . . . We then went on, till we came to a Place that was a little upon a Descent, where appeared a Number of Souls less glorious than the others. I asked my Guides the Reason why They did not appear so beauteous as the Rest? They told me that They had as much Glory as they were capable of receiving. Whereupon I thought within myself, I had rather be nearer my God, than with those Spirits; yet they all appeared fully satisfied with what they enjoyed." (9-10)

Length of Relevant Material: 14 pages

Hard Copy:
Topics: Afterlife; Eternal progression; Three degrees of glory
Author: J.J. Kerr
Title of Book: Future Recognition; or, The Blessedness of Those Who Die in the Lord
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: Herman Hooker
Date of Publication: 1847
Library Location: Not in BYU Library
Nature of Source: A discussion by an Episcopal minister of the future life and the prospect that friends and associates from this life will recognize each other in the hereafter.
Comment: As part of his discussion, Kerr includes an argument that the heavenly state is progressive, and that the saved will spend the eternities in a continual progress of intellectual and spiritual growth. Additionally, he argues that in heaven there are different degrees of glory among the different types of beings and saints (actually, he quotes from an earlier, unknown writer, who had himself been quoted by Thomas Dick and Isaac Watts).
Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "Another element in the happiness of the redeemed is its progressive character. The saints above, beholding with unveiled face the glory of the Lord, 'are changed into the same image from glory to glory.' Thus they make perpetual advances towards the perfection of the great Supreme." (60)
"Man, then, is destined to unceasing advances, and innumerable stages of existence. Having attained to the resurrection, is no reason why he should advance no farther and higher. There are some infinitely lofty mansions in our Father's house; and we may rise from one to another through infinity, thus continually approximating to the nature of Jehovah, without ever attaining to his absolute perfection." (61-62)
"'That cherubim, which now appears as a god to a human soul, knows very well that the period will come about in eternity, when the human soul shall be as perfect as he himself now is; nay, when she shall look down upon that degree of perfection as much as she now falls short of it. It is true the higher nature still advances, and by that means preserves his distance and superiority in the scale of being; but he knows how high soever the station is, of which he stands possessed at present, the inferior nature will at length mount up to it, and shine forth in the same degree of glory.'" (62-63)
Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed: __________________________
Nature of Source: Account of a series of visions experienced by the author, most significant among them being an angelically-guided journey through the heavens, in which she not only sees the celestial and hellish realms of the afterlife, but also a vision of the history of man and the life of Christ.

Comment: Cish's conception of heaven is firmly grounded in the heaven-as-worship tradition of the eighteenth century, though her visions incorporate the increasing emphasis on heavenly sociality that would reach its peak in the mid- to late nineteenth century in England and America. Important connections to Mormon thought in her visions include dressed-in-white angelic visitors (primarily her deceased mother), the ineffability of the heavenly state, a vision of human history (as in Moses and Abraham) and mandates from her guides not to relate certain aspects of the things which she sees.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "We passed through [illegible] tracts of enlightened space, through many bright and glorious worlds, through many hosts of innumerable angels and [illegible] that seemed to be inexpressibly happy, and employed in celebrating the praise of their beneficent creator. We passed on to the highest heavens, where inexpressible scenes of glory opened to my view. There appeared to be an immense space or ocean, filled with glory, which appeared like substantial light. Here we stopped, and my guide left me. I stood in awful suspense, and heard and saw things which I have not liberty to relate." (5-6)

"There [Jesus] hung in the most exquisite torture, and while mortals mocked and reviled him, hosts of devils hovered around him, triumphing in malignant joy.

"Many of the inhabitants also of heaven were viewing him, and wondering at the mystery of redeeming love." (9)

Length of Relevant Material: 14 pages
Mr. Yeamans. Late student at Yale College. To and with Mr. H. Goodwin, his friend and class-mate. : Tending to astonish, edify, and instruct. : [Three lines of quotations], 2nd ed.

Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Amherst, N.H.
Publisher: Nathaniel Coverly and Son
Date of Publication: 1800
Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Early American imprints. First series ;
no. 37533: [080 Sh64 EVANS 37533]
Nature of Source: An account of a vision experienced by the author, in which is visited by a former classmate, who instructs him and describes to him his current post-mortal state.
Comment: This narrative contains many elements typical of the genre, including the angelic/spirit visitor's "garments white and dazzling" (6), a description of heaven as a place where "the spirits of just men made perfect join the innumerable company of Angels and Arch-angels, in singing anthems and doxologies of eternal praise to GOD and CHRIST" (7), and the promise of "the blessed company and society" (15) of deceased friends that are typical of the genre. (The wording here, in fact, is in parts exactly the same as that in another vision from the same period: Thomas, Eliza. A Vision; Tending to Edify, Astonish, and Instruct. Stonington, Conn.: Printed [by Samuel Trumbull], 1800.).

Unique to this vision is a discussion of the deceased visitor's status as a disembodied spirit. He claims communion with all the heavenly beings (angels, etc.), but qualifies his statement by saying that "they are concealed" (10). Hence, the spirit world, in this account, shares the same locality with the eternal realm of angels and God, but not the same existence.
Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "True, said I . . . but are you indeed in heaven? He replied, Is this the habit of hell? . . . If I instruct you in any thing, contrary to what Christ and his apostles taught; then judge me accursed. No sir, I am now surrounded with the heavenly host, though they are concealed." (10)

Length of Relevant Material: 15 pages
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Spirit world; Three degrees of glory; Glory; Throne of God (Kolob); Plural worlds; Adam
Author: George De Benneville

Title of Book: A true and remarkable account of the life and trance of Doctor George De Benneville, late of Germantown, Pennsylvania ... [microform] : including what he saw and heard during a trance of forty-two hours, both in the regions of happiness and misery :
together with a short account of his cruel persecution in France for preaching the Gospel / translated from the French of his own manuscript ; to which is prefixed, A recommendatory preface, by E. Winchester
Title of Article:
Comment: The section cited here is an account of one of De Benneville's many visions, this one being one of heaven and hell, received during a particularly acute sickness. As part of his visionary journey, the author visits both the seven habitations of hell and five different "mansions" in heaven. Of significance to Mormonism is his discussion of different states/amounts of glory received by varying inhabitants of heaven's many mansions. The narrative is quite Universalist, as it describes groups of souls being intermittently taken out of hell and given glorified grace in heaven. It also includes discussion of retained social connections, multiple worlds (32), the importance of Adam (34) and a perfected form of (non-verbal) language (33).

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "Presently [a multitude of the heavenly host] passed through the seven habitations of the damned, and a multitude were delivered from each, and being cloathed in white robes, they followed the heavenly host, praising and glorifying the most high for their deliverance; one might know them amongst the others: they all retired by a different way than that which they came. The messenger then came and conducted us into a most wonderful place, and ordered my two guardians to conduct me into five celestial mansions, where the Lord's elect abide. . . ."

"After that my guardians conducted me into five celestial habitations, where I discovered many wonders. Some had greater brightness, glory, and majesty than others, and as the places were, so were the inhabitants; some were clothed in garments whiter than snow; others had transparent bodies, and others again had white bodies resembling chrystal."

"After that we were conducted into all the five celestial habitations, (that I was to see) where I saw many wonders, impossible to describe. First many thrones lifted up of inexpressible beauty and magnificence; upon one of these thrones I beheld the Royal High Priest, surrounded with exceeding great brightness, & clothed in most excellent majesty, being employed in kind intercession before his father, for all the human species, pleading the sufficiency of his blood-shedding to deliver and sanctify a thousand such worlds as ours. All the elect, with the heavenly spirits, joined their intercession with that of their Royal High Priest . . . this mutual intercession appeared like incence ascending on high into the sanctuary of the Lord."

Length of Relevant Material: 15 pages (24-39)

Topics: Afterlife; Hell
The theology is strongly Calvinist, and much of the discussion is aimed at debunking Universalism. Despite its polemics, it is at times highly imaginative and includes a number of interesting ideas about heaven and hell.

Comment: Ely describes hell as a place wherein the eternal punishment is a lack of liberty (and unlimited freedom as a blessing in heaven). He also includes the notion that the blessed have the choice to visit the damned, if they so choose, in a similar fashion to the inter-kingdom visitation structure of Joseph Smith's heavenly theology.

Excerpt (pages): "The inhabitants of this dreadful department of woe [hell] had the power of moving from one relative position in immensity to another; but not the same liberty which was accorded to the saints; and so are denominated 'spirits in prison;' for while the saints could transport themselves wherever they chose . . . the damned could only accomplish their desires in part, being subject to restraints and frequent disappointments. This was part of their punishment." (5)

"If any saint, moreover, desired to see a child of wrath, he could instantly be near enough to him to converse with him; and from the knowledge thus obtained of the misery of the lost, and of the justice of God in their damnation. . . ." (9)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Afterlife; Three degrees of glory; Eternal progression

Author: Ezra Stiles Ely

Title of Book: Retrospective Theology, or the Opinions of the World of Spirits.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: A. Finley.

Date of Publication: 1825

Library Location: Special Collections (Americana): [AC 901 .A1 no.1617]

Nature of Source: A speculative depiction of the afterlife by a Presbyterian minister. The theology is strongly Calvinist, and much of the discussion is aimed at debunking Universalism. Despite its polemics, it is at times highly imaginative and includes a number of interesting ideas about heaven and hell.
Comment: Ely speaks of "different degrees of honour and felicity" based on righteousness and knowledge. He also describes the afterlife as a state of continuing progression, as the blessed gain more knowledge as time goes on.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "Among the happy saints in heaven, no one of whom felt the least pain of any sort, there were different degrees of honour and felicity, which corresponded exactly with the measure of each one's piety and good works, performed after he became a pardoned sinner; and among the children of the world of woe, no one of whom experienced the least particle of happiness, some were more miserable than other, exactly according to their respective degrees of criminality in the sight of the holy God." (8)

"The more eminent in knowledge and power, were ever ready to communicate, and it was the delight of all to receive streams of pleasure from the God of love, thought the instrumentality of their companions." (9)

"Those who had been longest with Jesus in the world of spirits, other things being equal, possessed the largest share of knowledge. All but God, were ever learning in glory, and ever coming to the knowledge of truth." (11)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Redemption; Infant baptism

Author: Ezra Stiles Ely

Title of Book: Retrospective Theology, or the Opinions of the World of Spirits.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: A. Finley.

Date of Publication: 1825

Library Location: Special Collections (Americana): [AC 901 .A1 no.1617]

Nature of Source: A speculative depiction of the afterlife by a Presbyterian minister. The theology is strongly Calvinist, and much of the discussion is aimed at debunking Universalism. Despite its polemics, it is at times highly imaginative and includes a number of interesting ideas about heaven and hell.

Comment: Ely argues that children who die "before they had actually transgressed" (25) are heirs of salvation.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "As the apostle uttered these words I heard the voices of an approaching heavenly host, and lo! a choir of infant saints, innumerable as the stars in the milky way, passed before us, on a celestial tour to the new heaven and the new earth which had taken the place of the planet of their nativity. In sweet responses they sung, "Hallelujah to the Lamb, for he redeemed us from earth; and fitted us for heaven.

"I gazed with rapture on them as they passed, and when I saw my own seraphic babes were there, and sweetly smiled on me as they passed, I wished myself at the foot of" the throne again; and instantly was there, praising him who, in his pilgrimage on earth, took little children in his arms, blessed them, and said, 'of such is the kingdom of heaven.'" (22-23)

"All infants, who had died before they had actually transgressed, I found were in the same happy situation; so that it was really a favour to them, that God made Adam their representative in the state of probation, condemned them as falling in him, and then provided for their salvation in Christ; and I could clearly see, that had any infants died in their infancy who had not been reckoned by God to have fallen in Adam, they could not have bene saved by Christ, for he came to seek and save none but those whom God reckoned to be lost. This imputation of guilt to infants, therefore, in consequence of the original sin of Adam their representative; and this actual suffering of death in consequence of their being accounted by God liable to it, is in every case overruled by God for the full and final salvation by Christ of all who die before they have been chargeable with criminality in their own personal conduct. Thus our God brings good out of that which is in itself evil, and makes the wrath of man to praise him." (25)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife
Author: Ezra Stiles Ely
Title of Book: Retrospective Theology, or the Opinions of the World of Spirits.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: A. Finley.
Date of Publication: 1825
Library Location: Special Collections (Americana): [AC 901 .A1 no.1617]
Nature of Source: A speculative depiction of the afterlife by a Presbyterian minister. The theology is strongly Calvinist, and much of the discussion is aimed at debunking Universalism. Despite its polemics, it is at times highly imaginative and includes a number of interesting ideas about heaven and hell.

Comment: Ely's afterlife includes the continuation of sociality, intelligence, and personality, much in the same way that Joseph Smith's does (D&C 130:2,18; D&C 76).
Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "The happy and the miserable immortals of the world of spirits, appeared to me to possess every mental faculty which they had in their previous state of existence. They all remembered the past, and could converse with each other concerning the events of time, and their own conduct in passing to eternity. I observed, in particular, that those in heaven and in hell who had read the Bible more or less in life, were still able to refer to its sacred contents, but while the memory of the saints was perfected, so that they could quote any part with accuracy, the wicked seemed to possess about the same knowledge of it which they did before their decease, and consequently were frequently chargeable with such misrepresentations and erroneous views as added new energy to their hatred of God and his Christ." (6-7)

"There was a constant intercourse between heaven and hell, like that attributed by Jesus to a rich man and Lazarus, after they had both died; and I learned that the inhabitant of each state continued to possess their intellectual, sensitive, social, voluntary, and active nature. The good always found happiness to belong to all their agency; but the wicked never could obtain the least satisfaction, or respite from their pains, by any kind of activity, society, or retirement." (7)

"While the work of every citizen of the new Jerusalem was intellectual, cordial, voluntary, unintermitted, and full of praise to Jehovah, I still found that every one had some peculiarity of mental disposition; and each enjoyed and glorified God according to his former mental habits and acquirements." (9)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Resurrection
Author: Ezra Stiles Ely
Title of Book: Retrospective Theology, or the Opinions of the World of Spirits.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: A. Finley.
Date of Publication: 1825
Library Location: Special Collections (Americana): [AC 901 .A1 no.1617]
Nature of Source: A speculative depiction of the afterlife by a Presbyterian minister. The theology is strongly Calvinist, and much of the discussion is aimed at debunking Universalism. Despite its polemics, it is at times highly imaginative and includes a number of interesting ideas about heaven and hell.
Comment: As a part of his discussion, Ely asserts a traditional, immaterial concept of the saints' resurrected bodies.
Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "I learned by the most delightful experience that our Redeemer, seated in a body, like the bodies of his people, on a great white throne, at will passed from one planet and sun, throughout immensity, to another, with the rapidity of the light. His redeemed ones also, without weariness, could follow him . . . so that they had only to choose to be present in body with him, and their spiritual bodies were before him in an instant." (4)
Length of Relevant Material: 1 page
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Theology is strongly Calvinist, and much of the discussion is aimed at debunking Universalism. Despite its polemics, it is at times highly imaginative and includes a number of interesting ideas about heaven and hell.

Comment: Ely posits that heaven as a place in the traditional sense is perhaps incorrect; he claims heaven to be comprehensively part of the great cosmos, and without a specific locality. For him, heaven and hell are separated spiritually, but there is not one place for either.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "Over all animated matter the law of gravitation still continued in force; and the systems of suns, planets and inferior satellites, still moved on in their accustomed orbits, displaying the wisdom, power and goodness of the creator. Not one of these orbs could be said, exclusively, to be heaven; not one hell." (4-5)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Visions, dreams, revelations; Angels; Afterlife; Spirit World; Glory

Author: Eliza Thomas

Title of Book: A vision; tending to edify, astonish, and instruct; [microform] : experienced by Miss Eliza Thomas, a young lady of respectable parents in the town of Old Fort Schuyler, state of New-York, on the night of the 16th of September, 1799.--in which she saw a departed friend, who described the pleasures of the Christians and torments of the wicked experienced in the other world, also, gave her to understand that she must soon bid an eternal adieu to all worldly and transitory things. God speaketh once, yea twice in a vision of the night. / By William Billings & Thomas Pitnam [i.e., Pitman], respectable inhabitants, who received the foregoing from Miss Thomas's own mouth just before her death. ; --To which is added--a number of excellent hymns.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: [Stonington, Conn.].

Publisher: Printed [by Samuel Trumbull]

Date of Publication: 1800

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Early American Imprints 1st Series. Evans Microfiche collection, no. 36968, 38627. [080 Sh64 EVANS 36968, 38627]
Nature of Source: Account of a vision experienced by the author, in which she is visited by a deceased friend, who opens a vision of the heavens to her and admonishes her to remain worthy and righteous.

Comment: Similar to Moroni's bedroom visit to Joseph Smith, this account includes a description of the visitor's white, "dazzling" clothing and prophetic counsel, along with a description of the afterlife. Significantly, this description emphasizes glory, not only that of deity, but also that bestowed upon heaven's inhabitants (see D&C 76). Ms. Thomas' vision also incorporates both the tradition of heaven as a site of eternal deity-worship and the Victorian concept of heaven as a social paradise.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "as I lay meditating in my bed on various subjects of a worldly nature, I was suddenly alarmed by the opening of my chamber door; wither turning my eyes, to my great surprize and wonder, I beheld the appearance of a former friend and companion, Miss Polly Hunt, (who had been dead about twelve months) coming in at the door; her person seemed to be celestial and angelic, her countenance illustrious and shining, her garment white and dazzling starred with glittering wold, with a crown of unsullied gold upon her head. . . ." (3)

"In heaven my dear Eliza, the righteous enjoy the most perfect freedom and communion with the blessed and unchangeable God; there the spirits of those of the second birth, join the innumerable company of angels and arch-angels in singing anthems and doxologies of eternal praise to God and Christ our redeemer. There we are crowned with crowns of eternal honor, and decked with robes of brightest lustre, forever shining forth like so many suns in the kingdom of our heavenly father. Oh the glories, the ravishing glories of the heavenly world." (4)

"Eliza, I hope ere long to meet you in heaven, where we shall spend an eternity in the blessed company, and society of each other; and swim in those rivers of pleasure which issue from the throne of God, and flow at his right hand forever more. . . ." (6)

Length of Relevant Material: 7 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: visions, dreams, revelations; angels; conversion

Author: Elias Smith

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Portsmouth, N.H.

Publisher: Beck and Foster

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Shaw & Shoemaker microfiche collection:

[080 Sh64a no. 38947]
Nature of Source: Autobiography of well-known Vermont/New England preacher Elias Smith (1769-1846). Smith's autobiography is listed in antiquarian book dealer Grunder's "The Mormons" catalog (List 9, No. 21) as being pertinent to the study of Mormonism largely because Smith had a number of experiences parallel to those of Joseph Smith: a vision wherein he saw Jesus and the visitation of angels being most prominent among them. The book also includes Smith's reminiscences about doctrinal debates he engaged in during his life, concerning the nature of the godhead, baptism, infant baptism, and other topics.

Comment: This section is Smith's report of his childhood vision of Jesus and a dream in which he is visited by an angel. In the vision, he sees a light, similar to that reported by Joseph Smith, though in Elias' case, the light not only rests upon his body, but in his heart, as well (59). In the dream, Elias is troubled that he has been assured of his salvation, while two other boys from the area are prophesied to falter, but the visiting angel reassures him with an arm on his shoulder and with a promise that "the Lord has a great work for [him] to do in the world" (76).

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "I went into the woods one morning after a stick of timber; after taking it on my shoulder to bring it to the house, as I walked along on a large log that lay above the snow, my foot slipped and I fell partly under the log, the timber fell one end on the log and the other on the snow, and held me, so that I found it difficult at first to rise from the situation I was then in. While in this situation, a light appeared to shine from heaven, not only into my head, but into my heart. This was something very strange to me, and what I had never experienced before. My mind seemed to rise in that light to the throne of God and the Lamb, and while thus gloriously led, what appeared to my understanding was expressed in Rev. xiv. 1. 'And I looked, and, lo, a lamb stood on the mount Sion, and with him an hundred forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads.' The Lamb once slain appeared to my understanding, and while viewing him, I felt such love to him as I never felt to any thing earthly. My mind was calm and at peace with God through the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. The view of the Lamb on mount Sion gave me joy unspeakable and full of glory. It is not possible for me to tell how long I remained in that situation, as every thing earthly was gone from me for some time. After admiring the glory of the Lamb for some time, I began to think of the situation my body was in, and rose up to return home. Looking around me, every object was changed, and a bright glory appeared on every thing around me. All things praised God with me" (58-59).

"There were two young men who professed to be converted, and who gave me a very clear evidence that they were born of God; they often prayed and spake in public meetings. O, thought I, if my evidence was like theirs, my hope would be forever firm! About this time, I dreamed, that an angel came to me, and said, 'you often doubt whether you have passed from death to life, and think if you were as certain of your own conversion as you are of others, you should doubt no more. I am sent to try you and the other two young men, that you may know what your situation is. You and they are to be tried by fire, and those who endure the trial are right, and those who do not will not stand.' This gave my mind a shock; yet in my dream told the angel, my wish was to be right, and if I was not so, it was best to know it now. I dreamed that he put two sticks into the ground, and laid a pole across the top of the two, and made a fire under the pole he laid across. After doing this, he took three long pieces of bark, that would go over the pole, and each end lie on the ground; when he had done this, he made a fire under one of the pieces which reached it and burnt it off. As it fell he said, such an one is gone, he will fall away. This was one of the young men which gave me such an evidence of being converted. After this, he put a fire under the second, which was the way the other young man was to be tried. This soon burnt off, and as it fell he said, the other one would not endure long. This in my dream filled me with great trouble, as I concluded, if these two failed, there was no hope for me; and that I was gone forever. He then put the fire under the third; I stood and saw the blaze touch the bark, so that it was considerable scorched;
but before it burnt, the angel threw water on, which kept it in that situation till the fire was gone out. When the fire was done, I was in my dream so affected with what had taken place, that I rose from the place where I sat, and wept much at the thought of being the only one of the three that should endure. While in this weeping situation, I dreamed that the angel came to me as I sat weeping, and putting his right hand on my shoulder, he mildly said, 'Weep not at this, the Lord has appeared for you, and will preserve you, for he has a great work for you to do in the world.' This affected me more than all I had seen before. Being much agitated with what was said and done, I awoke, and was in the same situation that I dreamed of being in. My face was bathed in tears, and my pillow was wet with my weeping" (75-77).

Length of Relevant Material: vision: 5 pp. (56-60); dream: 4 pp. (74-77)

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: three separate beings; infant baptism

Author: Elias Smith

Title of Book: The life, conversion, preaching, travels, and sufferings of Elias Smith.
Vol. I/ written by himself.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Portsmouth, N.H.

Publisher: Beck and Foster

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Shaw & Shoemaker microfiche collection:
[080 Sh64a no. 38947]

Nature of Source: Autobiography of well-known Vermont/New England preacher Elias Smith (1769-1846). Smith's autobiography is listed in antiquarian book dealer Grunder's
"The Mormons" catalog (List 9, No. 21) as being pertinent to the study of Mormonism largely because Smith had a number of experiences parallel to those of Joseph Smith: a vision wherein he saw Jesus and the visitation of angels being most prominent among them. The book also includes Smith's reminiscences about doctrinal debates he engaged in during his life, concerning the nature of the godhead, baptism, infant baptism, and other topics.
Comment: Here, Smith makes brief mention of some of his biblically-based beliefs, including his rejection of the trinity and infant baptism.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "For the instruction of others, particularly young preachers, I here observe, that many words are now in use to describe some principal part of doctrine, which are not in the scriptures . . . . If the word and doctrine are both unscriptural, it is in vain to undertake to prove from the bible that which is not once named there. The word trinity is an unscriptural word, and so is the doctrine, and we may as well prove purgatory from the bible, as the trinity; for neither of them are mentioned there . . . . [Baptism] is in the bible; but there is no account of baptising infants there; and all said in favor of that is invention" (141).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 page.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: infant baptism

Author: Elias Smith

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Portsmouth, N.H.

Publisher: Beck and Foster

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Shaw & Shoemaker microfiche collection: [080 Sh64a no. 38947]

Nature of Source: Autobiography of well-known Vermont/New England preacher Elias Smith (1769-1846). Smith's autobiography is listed in antiquarian book dealer Gruder's "The Mormons" catalog (List 9, No. 21) as being pertinent to the study of Mormonism largely because Smith had a number of experiences parallel to those of Joseph Smith: a vision wherein he saw Jesus and the visitation of angels being most prominent among them. The book also includes Smith's reminiscences about doctrinal debates he engaged in during his life, concerning the nature of the godhead, baptism, infant baptism, and other topics.

Comment: In Chapter VIII of the autobiography, Smith relates an early concern about the doctrine and practice of baptism, particularly that of infant baptism. He includes a recollection of a discussion with his uncle regarding the matter, in which the two disagree fundamentally, the uncle being satisfied with infant baptism as a practice, the nephew being opposed. In response to this conversation, Smith decided to study the New Testament, and found that infant baptism was not there. After this point, Smith became a strong opponent of the practice for the rest of his ministerial career, as we see in the second example, wherein he and one Nancy Burgin, in agreement in opposition to infant baptism, argue with another preacher concerning the practice.
Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "I searched the new-testament carefully, and found infant baptism was not there. Being convinced that believer's baptism was the only one mentioned in the bible, I went again to converse with my uncle. After some conversation, I asked him where the place was that spake of infant baptism. He said he did not then remember. I desired him to see if he could find it . . . . I then told him that infant baptism was not in the new-testament, and that I did not believe it was in the bible, for if it was, he would at least know one place. He said he could prove it, if he had time. This he had till he died, but never told me where to read it in the bible" (79-80).

"His next subject was baptism. He made many objections against baptism as described in the new-testament, which Nancy answered in a scriptural manner. He said considerable against new-testament baptism, and in favor of sprinkling children. She urged him to produce a command or example from the new-testament, that an infant was ever sprinkled or baptised. This he could not do; but undertook to prove it from circumcision . . . . This kind of false argument looked so glaring to me, that I thought it duty to let him and the family know I was awake, and . . . stated to Mr. Remington that his propositions respecting infant baptism were false, and that they could not be supported by the scriptures, nor the rules of logic" (189-90).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages (78-80); 3 pages (189-91)

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: millennial conditions; mode of baptism

Author: Elias Smith

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Portsmouth, N.H.

Publisher: Beck and Foster

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Shaw & Shoemaker microfiche collection: [080 Sh64a no. 38947]

Nature of Source: Autobiography of well-known Vermont/New England preacher Elias Smith (1769-1846). Smith's autobiography is listed in antiquarian book dealer Grunder's "The Mormons" catalog (List 9, No. 21) as being pertinent to the study of Mormonism largely because Smith had a number of experiences parallel to those of Joseph Smith: a vision wherein he saw Jesus and the visitation of angels being most prominent among them. The book also includes Smith's reminiscences about doctrinal debates he engaged in during his life, concerning the nature of the godhead, baptism, infant baptism, and other topics.

Comment: Here, Smith relates a sermon he delivered in the summer of 1792 on Ezekiel 43:10-11, in which he originally argued that the house referred to in that passage (which Ezekiel must show and describe in detail to Israel) was a proto-Christian model for discipleship. In the book (published in 1816), he recants, arguing that the house is "one to be built in Jerusalem when Christ reigns on the earth one thousand years" and admitting to being at fault in his original interpretation (219).

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "My manner of speaking upon the text was this: 1. To describe the house, which I considered the church of God. 2. The pattern, which I considered the order laid down in the new-testament. 3. The coming in, which was by baptising persons giving an evidence of being born again. 4. The goings out, which was turning a person out for not walking in newness of life. 5. The ordinances of the house, which were considered to be baptism and the Lord's supper . . . . 6. The design of all this, which was that they may observe and do them.

"My propositions were in general correct; yet I do not now think that any such things were meant in the text, though many of these things are contained in the new-testament. The house spoken of in the text, is one to be built in Jerusalem when Christ reigns on the earth one thousand years. And whoever reads and understands all said of the house by the prophet, will see that it does not mean the house of God in the new-testament" (218-19).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: three separate beings

Author: Elias Smith

Title of Book: The life, conversion, preaching, travels, and sufferings of Elias Smith. Vol. I/ written by himself.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Portsmouth, N.H.

Publisher: Beck and Foster

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Shaw & Shoemaker microfiche collection: [080 Sh64a no. 38947]

Nature of Source: Autobiography of well-known Vermont/New England preacher Elias Smith (1769-1846). Smith's autobiography is listed in antiquarian book dealer Grunder's "The Mormons" catalog (List 9, No. 21) as being pertinent to the study of Mormonism largely because Smith had a number of experiences parallel to those of Joseph Smith: a vision wherein he saw Jesus and the visitation of angels being most prominent among them. The book also includes Smith's reminiscences about doctrinal debates he engaged in during his life, concerning the nature of the godhead, baptism, infant baptism, and other topics.

Comment: In this section, Smith relates the sermon of another preacher, one "Elder John Waldo, who lived in Vermont, or New-York." Waldo's discussion, as reported by Smith, articulates a non-trinitarian godhead and endeavors to show how the Father and the Son are one, while being distinct personages.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "He undertook first, to shew how God and Christ were one. 1. They were one in creating the world. 2. One in ruling the world. 3. One in the work of redemption. 4. One in election, or in choosing a few to the exclusion of all others" (149-50).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; eternal progression; three degrees of glory
Author: J. Edmondson
Title of Book: Scripture Views of the Heavenly World
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: Lane & Scott
Date of Publication: 1849
Library Location: HBLL 5th Floor [BT 846 .E34x 1849]
Nature of Source: A Methodist discussion of the afterlife, based primarily on the Bible.
Comment: Edmondson argues that heaven will primarily consist of a beatific vision of deity, but he also argues that the afterlife will include Smith-esque elements, including sociality among the saints, individual progression, and different degrees of glory (the habitations of the "lowest order" will be "perfectly glorious," as is similarly the case with Smith's Telestial Kingdom). In contrast to Joseph Smith, however, he does not postulate that access to the divine will be dependent on one's achieved glory; in his view, all the saved enjoy equal, perfect visions of God. His "degrees of glory" are not architecturally distinguished, as they are in D&C 76, for in his heaven, "every happy spirit will have a visible display of the Deity before his eyes" (52).

Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "there will be different degrees of glory; some apartments being vastly superior to those of others. In the heavenly house, there is room for ever soul of man. . . . But as our Lord prepares the mansions, they will be exactly suited to our circumstances; and those of the lowest order will be perfectly glorious." (41)
"But the knowledge of angels and saints will be progressive. How they acquire knowledge is not easy to determine; but it mus be progressive, because they are finite beings. . . . Angels know more at present than they knew six thousand years ago; and saints will know much more than they do at present, after the lapse of six thousand years to come." (152)
"Some spirits may be commissioned by the Lord to explore the remote parts of his vast empire; and they may return with most astonishing discoveries, which will enlighten all the sons of glory." (152-3)
"In the acquisition of knowledge there will be an eternal approximation to God, the fountain of wisdom; and still we shall stand at an infinite distance from his all-perfect knowledge, as well as his other infinite perfections." (153)

"There will be various ranks and orders in the heavenly society. As men who have been eminent in knowledge and holiness in this world will be rewarded according to their works, it is certain that they will be advanced to high honour and glory in the world to come." (176)

Length of Relevant Material: entire book
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Throne of God (Kolob)
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Glasgow; London
Publisher: William Collins.
Date of Publication: 1827
Library Location: Special Collections (Rare): [BT901 .D5 1827]
Nature of Source: A discussion of the afterlife by a fairly well-known Scottish theologian/philosopher, attempting to reconcile Christian theology with Enlightenment knowledge about the universe and the natural world. An important document, as it contains a number of parallel doctrines to Mormonism, and was quoted in the Messenger and Advocate. Fawn Brodie claims it to be the source for many of Joseph Smith's radical doctrines, including the eternal nature of matter, eternal progression, and his cosmological theology (No Man Knows My History 172-3).
Comment: Dick postulates that at the center of the universe, there must be a "common centre" which he calls the "throne of God" and which he also refers to as "the Capital of the universe' (242). Similarities with Joseph Smith's Kolob are numerous: all other systems revolve around it, the closer one is to it, the more holy is one's state, and Dick at one point calls it "the third heaven" (243).
Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "It is now considered by astronomers as highly probably, if not certain, from late observations, from the nature of gravitation . . . that all the systems of the universe revolve round one common centre. . . . It may, with the most emphatic propriety, be termed the throne of God.

. . . This grand central body may be considered as the Capital of the universe. From this glorious centre, embassies may be occasionally despatched to all surrounding worlds. . . . Here, too, deputations from all the different provinces of creation, may occasionally assemble. . . . Here, may be exhibited to the view of unnumbered multitudes, objects of sublimity and glory, which are no where else to be found within the wide extent of creation. Here, intelligences of the highest order, who have attained the most sublime heights of knowledge and virtue, may form the principal part of the population of this magnificent region. Here, the glorified body of the Redeemer may have taken its principal station. . . . In fine, this cast and splendid central universe may constitute that August mansion referred to in the Scripture, under the designation of the third heavens, the throne of the Eternal, the heaven of heavens, the high and holy place, and the light that is inaccessible and full of glory." (242-43)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Three degrees of glory; Eternal Progression
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Glasco; London
Publisher: William Collins.
Date of Publication: 1827
Library Location: Special Collections (Rare): [BT901 .D5 1827]
Nature of Source: A discussion of the afterlife by a fairly well-known Scottish theologian/philosopher, attempting to reconcile Christian theology with Enlightenment knowledge about the universe and the natural world. An important document, as it contains a number of parallel doctrines to Mormonism, and was quoted in the Messenger and Advocate. Fawn Brodie claims it to be the source for many of Joseph Smith's radical doctrines, including the eternal nature of matter, eternal progression, and his cosmological theology (No Man Knows My History 172-3).
Comment: During his discussion of the future state, Dick speculates about the nature of man's intellect in the hereafter. Among his thoughts on the matter are speculations on the likelihood of different degrees of intellectual stature and on the probability that intellectual growth will continue through the eternities. He also mentions the fact that the issue of "degrees of glory" "has frequently been a subject of discussion among theologians" (191), and part of his reasoning in favor of different degrees of glory/stature is the concept that "we carry with us the moral and intellectual faculties, of which we are now conscious, and . . . all that knowledge which we acquired in the present state" (188; see D&C 130).
Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "When we enter that world, we carry with us the moral and intellectual faculties, of which we are now conscious, and, along with them, all those ideas and all that knowledge which we acquired in the present state. To imagine that our present faculties will be essentially changed, and the ideas we have hitherto acquired totally lost, would be nearly the same as to suppose, that, on entering the invisible state [between death and resurrection], men will be transformed into a new order of beings, or be altogether annihilated. And, if our present knowledge shall not be destroyed at death, it must form the groundwork of all the future improvements we may make, and of all the discoveries that may be unfolded to our view in the eternal state."
"Again, the superior intellectual views which some individuals shall possess beyond others, will constitute the principal distinction between redeemed men in the heavenly state." (188)

"In this point of view, 'the saints in light' will make improvement in holiness throughout all the ages of eternity, though, at every stage of their existence, they will enjoy pure and unmingled bliss. Every science they cultivate, and every stage to which they advance in intellectual improvement, will enable them to discover new glories in the Divine character, which will raise their affections to God still higher, and render their conformity to his moral image more complete.

"It has frequently been a subject of discussion among theologians, 'Whether there shall be degrees of glory in heaven.' This question may easily be settled, if there be any wight in the remarks and considerations now stated. In so far as there is a difference in the vigour and expansion of the intellectual powers, and in the amplitude of objects they are enabled to embrace, in so far may there be said to be 'degrees of glory;' and a superiority, in this respect, may be considered as the natural reward which accompanies the diligent improvement of our time and faculties upon earth, though such a distinction can never be supposed to produce any disposition approaching to envy, as so frequently happens in the present state." (190-91)

"As finite intelligences, from their very nature, are progressive beings, and, therefore, cannot be supposed to acquire all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, and to comprehend all the multifarious displays of Divine perfection, during the first stages of their existence; there may be an admirable diversity of modes, corresponding to their peculiar circumstances and stages of improvement, by which the Creator may gradually unfold to them the glory of his nature, and enable them to take a more extensive survey of the magnitude and order of his dominions. Some may be . . . but a few degrees beyond the sphere of knowledge which bounds the view of man; others may have arrived at a point where they can take a more expansive survey of the order, economy, and relations, of material and intellectual existences; while others, after having contemplated, for ages, a wide extent of creation, in one district of the empire of God, may be transported to a new and a distinct province of the universe, to contemplate the perfections of Deity in another point of view, and to investigate and admire a new scene of wonders." (223)

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pages (50-55; 188-192; 223)

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Plurality of Worlds
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Glasgow; London
Publisher: William Collins.
Date of Publication: 1827
Library Location: Special Collections (Rare): [BT901 .D5 1827]
Nature of Source: A discussion of the afterlife by a fairly well-known Scottish theologian/philosopher, attempting to reconcile Christian theology with Enlightenment knowledge about the universe and the natural world. An important document, as it contains a number of parallel doctrines to Mormonism, and was quoted in the Messenger and Advocate. Fawn Brodie claims it to be the source for many of Joseph Smith's radical doctrines, including the eternal nature of matter, eternal progression, and his cosmological theology (No Man Knows My History 172-3).

Comment: Here, Dick discusses the probability that many worlds throughout the universe are inhabited by various groups of God's children, and speculates as to their natures.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (Pages): "The Deity, being a spiritual uncompounded substance, having no visible form, nor sensible quantities, 'inhabiting eternity,' and filling immensity with his presence, his essential glory cannot form an object for the direct contemplation of any finite intelligence. His glory, or, in other words, the grandeur of his perfection, can be traced only in the external manifestation which he gives of himself in the material creation which his power has brought into existence; in the various orders of intelligences with which he has peopled it; and in his moral dispensations towards all worlds and beings which now exist, or may hereafter exist, throughout his boundless empire." (202)

"Besides the magnificence and variety of the material structures which exist throughout the universe, the organized and intelligent beings with which they are peopled, present a vast field of delightful contemplation. On this general topic, the following ideas may be taken into consideration:

"1. The gradations of intellect, or the various orders of intelligences which may people the universal system. . . ." (211)

"2. Not only is there a gradation of intellect among superior beings, but it is highly probably, that a similar gradation or variety obtains, in the form, the organization, and the movements of their corporeal vehicles. . . ." (215)

Length of Relevant Material: 15 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Afterlife; Resurrection; Spirit world; Eternity of matter; Spirit, Soul and body; Spirit and matter

Author: Thomas Dick

Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Glasgow; London

Publisher: William Collins.

Date of Publication: 1827

Library Location: Special Collections (Rare): [BT901 .D5 1827]

Nature of Source: A discussion of the afterlife by a fairly well-known Scottish theologian/philosopher, attempting to reconcile Christian theology with Enlightenment knowledge about the universe and the natural world. An important document, as it contains a number of parallel doctrines to Mormonism, and was quoted in the Messenger and Advocate. Fawn Brodie claims it to be the source for many of Joseph Smith's radical doctrines, including the eternal nature of matter, eternal progression, and his cosmological theology (No Man Knows My History 172-3).

Comment: In this section Dick claims that the resurrected bodies of the saints will be physical bodies, and that during the intermediate spiritual state between death and the resurrection, the disembodied spirits of men will be in a "state of imperfection, and in some respects, an unnatural state.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "All that are in their graces shall be raised to life; and that, however different the constitution of these new-modelled bodies may be from their present state of organization, they will still be material vehicles, furnished with organs of sensation as the medium of perception to the immaterial spirit. In what manner the disembodied spirit views material objects and relations, and applies the knowledge of them which it acquired while united to an organical structure, we can have no conception, whatever, till we be actually ushered into the separate state . . . . The observations already made . . . are not intended to apply to the intermediate state of the spirit of good men. That state, whatever may be the modus of perception and enjoyment in it, is a state of imperfection, and in some respects, an unnatural state, if we suppose that the spirit is not connected with any material vehicle." (180-1)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Afterlife; Renewal of the earth
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Glasgow; London
Publisher: William Collins.
Date of Publication: 1827
Library Location: Special Collections (Rare): [BT901 .D5 1827]
Nature of Source: A discussion of the afterlife by a fairly well-known Scottish theologian/philosopher, attempting to reconcile Christian theology with Enlightenment knowledge about the universe and the natural world. An important document, as it contains a number of parallel doctrines to Mormonism, and was quoted in the Messenger and Advocate. Fawn Brodie claims it to be the source for many of Joseph Smith's radical doctrines, including the eternal nature of matter, eternal progression, and his cosmological theology (No Man Knows My History 172-3).

Comment: Here, Dick speculates as to the location of the "new heaven and a new earth . . . 'wherein the righteous shall dwell.'" One of his possibilities is that the earth will simply be the original in a redeemed state, but he also considers other planets as a possible location for heaven and/or an exploratory, progressive heaven wherein the righteous, when they have spent a time in one spot, move on to another one.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "... while we are informed that the elementary parts of our globe shall be dissolved, we are at the same time assured, that 'new heavens and a new earth' shall be prepared, 'wherein the righteous shall dwell;' that is, a world purified from physical and moral evil, and fitted to the renovated faculties of the redeemed, will be prepared in some part of the universe, for the residence of the just. In reference to the locality, and circumstances of our future destination, there appear to be only four or five suppositions that can be formed. Either, 1. The world we now inhabit will be new modelled, after the general conflagration, and furnished as a proper place of residence for its renovated inhabitants; or, 2. Some of the globes now existing in other regions of space, to which the holy inhabitants of our world will be transported, may be allotted as the more permanent habitation of the just; or, 3. Some new globe or world will be immediately created, adapted to the circumstances of redeemed men, and adorned with scenery fitted to call forth into exercise their renovated powers; or, 4. The redeemed inhabitants of heaven may be permitted to transport themselves from one region or world to another, and be furnished with faculties and vehicles for this purpose; or, 5. After remaining for a certain lapse of ages in that particular world to which they shall be introduced immediately after the resurrection, they may be transported to another region of the universe, to contemplate a new scene of creating power and intelligence, and afterwards pass, at distinct intervals, through a successive series of transportations, in order to obtain more ample prospects of the riches and glory of God's universal kingdom.

"In all these cases, what ever supposition we may adopt as most probably, the general laws which now govern the universe, and the general relations of the great bodies I the universe to each other, will remain, on the whole, unchanged. . . ." (181-82)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Hell; Eternal punishment; Three degrees of glory

Author: Thomas Dick

Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Glasgow; London

Publisher: William Collins.

Date of Publication: 1827

Library Location: Special Collections (Rare): [BT901 .D5 1827]

Nature of Source: A discussion of the afterlife by a fairly well-known Scottish theologian/philosopher, attempting to reconcile Christian theology with Enlightenment knowledge about the universe and the natural world. An important document, as it contains a number of parallel doctrines to Mormonism, and was quoted in the Messenger and Advocate. Fawn Brodie claims it to be the source for many of Joseph Smith's radical doctrines, including the eternal nature of matter, eternal progression, and his cosmological theology (No Man Knows My History 172-3).

Comment: In his discussion of hell and its torments, Dick argues that one of the primary limitations of hell will be the fact that its inhabitants will be limited in their capacity to move, to progress, or to enjoy the contemplation of the universe that the saved will enjoy. This description bears a minor resemblance to Smith's concept that the terrestrial kingdom will not include access to the divine.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "From the preceding details we may also learn, what will form one constituent part of the misery of the wicked in the future world. As one part of the happiness of the righteous will consist in "seeing God as he is," that is, in beholding the Divine glory as displayed in the physical and moral economy of the universe; so it will, in all probability, form one bitter ingredient in the future lot of the unrighteous, that they shall be deprived of the transporting view of the Creator's glory, as displayed in the magnificent arrangements he has made in the system of nature. Confined to one dreary corner of the universe, surrounded by a dense atmosphere, or a congeries of sable clouds, they will be cut off from all intercourse with the regions of moral perfection, and prevented from contemplating the sublime scenery of the Creator's empire." (251-52)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Native Americans as Israel; Ten Tribes

Author: Charles Crawford

Title of Book: An essay on the propagation of the gospel : in which there are numerous facts and arguments adduced to prove that many of the Indians in America are descended from the ten tribes. The 2d ed.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: James Humphreys

Date of Publication: 1801

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Shaw & Shoemaker microfiche collection:

[080 Sh64a no. 370]

Nature of Source: This essay in an attempt by the author to prove that many Native Americans are descendants of the lost ten tribes of Israel.

Comment: Crawford's arguments are largely borrowed from other sources (descriptions of Indian life, other tracts arguing the same thesis, etc.), and center primarily on Native American ceremonial practices, such as sacrifice and female isolation during menstruation and after childbirth. He also discusses possible links between Africans and ancient Israel.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "Some customs seem also well authenticated among some Indians that appear to be remains of the Jewish religion, as roasting a fawn, and eating it with blankets girded around them, and carefully not breaking a bone of it through religious devotion; which seems clearly to be the Hebrew Passover, though they cannot explain it, but say 'their forefathers did so, and all good Indians ought to do so.' Some of them also report that their forefathers had books to read. Another custom, in which they resemble the Jews is, 'that they have women mourners for the dead . . ." (20).

Length of Relevant Material: 25 pp (1-25).

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Afterlife; Glory

Author: Charles Buck

Title of Book: Serious enquiries, or, Important questions relative to this world and that which is to come [microform] : to which are added, reflections on mortality, occasioned by the death of the Rev. Thomas Spencer ... / by Charles Buck..

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: Printed for and sold by W.W. Woodward, 1813 ([Philadelphia] : A. Dickinson)

Date of Publication: 1813

Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Early American imprints. Second series ; no. 28040. Shaw & Shoemaker 28040 [080 Sh64a no. 28040]

Nature of Source: A funeral sermon, in which Buck argues against the contemporary notion of heaven as a place for "the enjoyment of sensual, rather than spiritual pleasures" (99).

Comment: Buck argues for a more traditional concept of heaven, in which worship is the primary activity. He also incorporates, though, emerging theories about the social aspect of the afterlife, combining eternal praise of the divine with social interaction. Additionally makes it a point to illustrate the Revelation-derived concept of the elect as "kings and priests unto God" and as inheritors of glory. In this sense, his vision of the afterlife correlates with Joseph Smith's early doctrine of heaven, minus the three degrees of glory and Smith's notion of eternal progression.

Researcher: Brigham Bowen

Excerpt (pages): "There, not only the Saviour reigns in all his glory, but the saints sit on his throne with him. . . . [There,] it is said, they shall be kings and priests unto God forever. Never shall they be conquered again, nor disinherited of their crown. . . . the saints, in a better world, shall be arrayed with the righteousness of the Redeemer; and purified by the divine Spirit; they shall shine forth as the sun for ever." (99-100)

". . . our sun will never decline; our atmosphere will be perpetually serene; our prospects unbounded; our treasures inexhaustible; our society delightful, and our liberty secured forever.
"... Here all the citizens of heaven unite in adoring and praising their glorious king." (101)
"There, too, shall the saints hold communion with each other, and with the angels of God. . . . With the patriarchs and prophets, martyrs and confessors, apostles and ministers, and all the useful servants of the Most High, shall we dwell for ever. There we shall mingle our services with theirs, and ascribe glory and praise to him that sitteth on the throne, and to the Lamb for ever." (105)

Length of Relevant Material: 8 pages (99-106)
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Afterlife
Author: Richard Baxter
Title of Book: The saints everlasting rest: or, A treatise of the blessed state of the saints, in their enjoyment of God in glory. [microform] / Extracted from the works of Mr. Richard Baxter, by John Wesley, M.A. late fellow of Lincoln College, Oxford.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: Printed by Henry Tuckniss, for Ezekiel Cooper, no. 118, North Fourth Street, near the Methodist Church.
Date of Publication: 1800
Library Location: BYU HBLL Microform area; Early American imprints. First series ; no. 36910 (Evans); [080 Sh64 EVANS 36910]
Nature of Source: First published in 1650, this popular treatment of the afterlife is one of the first major texts to argue that the saints will recognize each other in heaven. For Baxter, the afterlife consists primarily of worshiping and singing hymns to God, but he also says that the saved will enjoy each other's company in a blessed social state.
Comment: Baxter's discussion includes a comment about the nature of our physical bodies in the resurrection. Here, Baxter argues for a traditional "spiritual body," fundamentally different from the "frail, noisome, diseased lumps of flesh that we now carry."
Researcher: Brigham Bowen
Excerpt (pages): "We may then say much more, This is not the body I had, and not the senses I had. Yet because we have no other name for them, let us call them senses: call them eyes and ears, seeing and hearing: but conceive, that as much as a body spiritual, above the sun in glory, exceedeth these frail, noisome, diseased lumps of flesh that we now carry about us; so far shall our senses of seeing and hearing exceed these we now possess." (19-20)
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Topics: Bible - revision of

Author: Richard Brothers

Title of Book: A Revealed Knowledge of the Prophecies and Times
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Charles R. and George Webster
Date of Publication: 1796
Nature of Source: This is a work of scripture explication based primarily on the author's revelations. It was also published in London, Philadelphia, and West-Springfield, MA. The Albany edition was distributed in Albany, Schenectady, Hudson, Johnstown, Lansingburgh, and in Cooperstown (by E. Phinney).
Comment: The author quotes lengthy passages from the prophetic books of the Bible, often interjecting his own interpretations. He establishes a time for the Restoration of Israel to Jerusalem (1798) and advances his claim that he will reign as the latter-day David in this restored Jerusalem. He also makes a detailed comparison between the prophecies in the Book of Revelation and the political scene of his time. In the following excerpt Brothers indicates that he had made some inspired revisions in the Bible passages he quoted. The researcher may wish to compare Brothers' Bible quotes with the King James Version and also with the Joseph Smith Translation.

Excerpt (pages): "The alteration I have made in copying some of the prophecies, is by the direction and command of the Lord God" (47).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 sent. (and many pages of quoted prophecies)
Hard Copy (pages): 47
Researcher: Don Bradley
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ______________

Topics: Consecration

Author:

Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Missionary Cause"
Title of periodical: Recorder and Telegraph
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jan. 1, 1825
Nature of Source: Founded as the Recorder in 1816, this Congregationalist magazine presented moral exhortations, religious news, including the proceedings of religious societies, and nonreligious news. The magazine's name varied over time. The Recorder and Telegraph superseded the Boston Recorder and later carried other names, including the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Comment: The article "The Missionary Cause" expounds the doctrine of Christ's Atonement and uses the doctrine to exhort Church members to proselyte.

Excerpt (pages): "Can we allow of apathy and indifference in a cause in which the Son of God saw fit to make a sacrifice of himself? Can we withhold a portion of our time, our talents or our property, for that object for which our Savior poured out his blood?"

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages): 1

Researcher: Don Bradley

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: corruption of the biblical text; Bible - revision of

Author: Richard Brothers

Title of Book: A Revealed Knowledge of the Prophecies and Times

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Albany, NY

Publisher: Charles R. and George Webster

Date of Publication: 1796

Nature of Source: This is a work of scripture explication based primarily on the author's revelations. It was also published in London, Philadelphia, and West-Springfield, MA. The Albany edition was distributed in Albany, Schenectady, Hudson, Johnstown, Lansingburgh, and in Cooperstown (by E. Phinney).

Comment: The author quotes lengthy passages from the prophetic books of the Bible, often interjecting his own interpretations. He establishes a time for the Restoration of Israel to Jerusalem (1798) and advances his claim that he will reign as the latter-day David in this restored Jerusalem. He also makes a detailed comparison between the prophecies in the Book of Revelation and the political scene of his time.

Excerpt (pages): "Length of time, change of countries and governments, corruption of language, and hasty copies in writing . . . has been the means of not only introducing, without design, into the Hebrew Bible, an insertion of some new words, but likewise an expulsion of some of the old, which produces disagreement in some few parts, and makes it differ now from what it originally was in the times of David, Solomon, and at the commencement of the Babylonian captivity: some parts of the English translation are, consequently, erroneous: but they are so immaterial, as not to affect, in the least, the truth of its sacred Records, or the tendency of its divine instruction."

"The few parts of the English translation, which I am instructed to alter in my writings, the propriety will be allowed by every person that has discernment to perceive, or conviction to believe: beyond the limits of my own authority, for it is prescribed, I am not suffered to proceed in any word or in any way whatever."

"The following are the words which the Lord God spoke to me in a vision . . . - There is no other man under the whole heaven that I discover the errors of the Bible to,
and reveal a knowledge how to correct them, so that they may be restored as they were in the beginning, but yourself."

Topics: corruption of the biblical text; Bible - revision of

Author: Richard Brothers

Title of Book: A Revealed Knowledge of the Prophecies and Times

Place of Publication: Albany, NY

Publisher: Charles R. and George Webster

Date of Publication: 1796

Nature of Source: This is a work of scripture explication based primarily on the author's revelations. It was also published in London, Philadelphia, and West-Springfield, MA. The Albany edition was distributed in Albany, Schenectady, Hudson, Johnstown, Lansingburgh, and in Cooperstown (by E. Phinney).

Comment: The author quotes lengthy passages from the prophetic books of the Bible, often interjecting his own interpretations. He establishes a time for the Restoration of Israel to Jerusalem (1798) and advances his claim that he will reign as the latter-day David in this restored Jerusalem. He also makes a detailed comparison between the prophecies in the Book of Revelation and the political scene of his time.

Excerpt (pages): "

Topics: Ephraim; Israel - descent from

Author: Richard Brothers

Title of Book: A Revealed Knowledge of the Prophecies and Times

Place of Publication: Albany, NY

Publisher: Charles R. and George Webster

Date of Publication: 1796
Nature of Source: This is a work of scripture explication based primarily on the author's revelations. It was also published in London, Philadelphia, and West-Springfield, MA. The Albany edition was distributed in Albany, Schenectady, Hudson, Johnstown, Lansingburgh, and in Cooperstown (by E. Phinney).

Comment: The author quotes lengthy passages from the prophetic books of the Bible, often interjecting his own interpretations. He establishes a time for the Restoration of Israel to Jerusalem (1798) and advances his claim that he will reign as the latter-day David in this restored Jerusalem. He also makes a detailed comparison between the prophecies in the Book of Revelation and the political scene of his time.

Excerpt (pages): "I am not in the least acquainted with the man I have mentioned ["Ponsonby"] . . . but although our names are different, he is, as well as myself, descended from David, king of Israel. The Countess of Buckinghamshire, whom I am no more acquainted with than the stranger I mentioned before, is likewise descended from David, king of Israel: the family she is married into are also of the Hebrews, and are descended from Joseph, the once president of Egypt."

"There are many families of the same origin as those three I have named, made known to me by revelation, but I am forbid to mention any of them at present for public knowledge" (50).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 49-50

Researcher: Don Bradley

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: latter-day David

Author: Richard Brothers

Title of Book: A Revealed Knowledge of the Prophecies and Times

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Albany, NY

Publisher: Charles R. and George Webster

Date of Publication: 1796

Nature of Source: This is a work of scripture explication based primarily on the author's revelations. It was also published in London, Philadelphia, and West-Springfield, MA. The Albany edition was distributed in Albany, Schenectady, Hudson, Johnstown, Lansingburgh, and in Cooperstown (by E. Phinney).

Comment: The author quotes lengthy passages from the prophetic books of the Bible, often interjecting his own interpretations. He establishes a time for the Restoration of Israel to Jerusalem (1798) and advances his claim that he will reign as the latter-day David in this restored Jerusalem. He also makes a detailed comparison between the prophecies in the Book of Revelation and the political scene of his time. In the following excerpt, Brothers quotes Ezekiel 34:22-24 and adds parenthetical comments by way of explanation.
Excerpt (pages): "... I will save my flock ... And I will set up one shepherd over them and he shall feed them, and he shall be their shepherd."

"24 And I the Lord (meaning Christ) will be their God, and my servant David (meaning his descendant) a Prince among them: I the Lord have spoken it" (33)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 para.
Hard Copy (pages): 32-33
Researcher: Don Bradley
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Missionary Work - Reasons for

Author:

Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Missionary Cause"
Title of periodical: Recorder and Telegraph
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jan. 1, 1825
Nature of Source: Founded as the Recorder in 1816, this Congregationalist magazine presented moral exhortations, religious news, including the proceedings of religious societies, and nonreligious news. The magazine's name varied over time. The Recorder and Telegraph superseded the Boston Recorder and later carried other names, including the Congregationalist and Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Comment: The article "The Missionary Cause" expounds the doctrine of Christ's Atonement and uses the doctrine to exhort Church members to proselyte. The following excerpt should be compared to D&C 18:10-15.

Excerpt (pages): "If it was the Son of God that suffered on the cross, it must have been to accomplish an end of infinite importance, or infinite means would not have been used; and the end accomplished must have been of infinite value, or it would not have required an infinite sacrifice. ... We are bound to estimate the worth of the soul as he estimated it, and like him, make the salvation of our fellow creatures the business of life."

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.
Hard Copy (pages): 1
Researcher: Don Bradley
Date When Photocopying Was completed:

Topics: Restoration of Israel; Aaronic Priesthood

Author: Robert Adam
Title of Book: The Religious World Displayed; or, A View of the Four Grand Systems of Religion, Judaism, Paganism, Christianity, and Mohammedism . . .

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: Moses Thomas
Date of Publication: 1818

Nature of Source: This lengthy work provides a Christian (Episcopal) view of Judaism, "paganism," Christianity, Islam, Deism, and atheism.

Comment: The following excerpt presents the views of Christian ministers on the nature and timing of the restoration of the Jews. "Mr. Faber's" use of Daniel 7:25 and 12:7 to predict the timing of the Millenium should be compared to Joseph Smith's similar use of these passages.

Excerpt (pages): "Most Christian divines suppose that they will be actually called to inhabit their own land, and their opinion is well founded on several texts of scripture:*
others, as Dr. Dodd, & c. contend, that there shall be only a general conversion of the Jews in the countries where they respectively dwell, without emigration"

"*[footnote:] Among others, see Jerem. xvi. v.15 Ezek. xxxvii. v.21.25. and chap. xxxix. v.28. Dr. Priestley, in a work published in 1800, announced the restoration of the Jews in about fifty years; but Mr. Faber, in his Dissertations on the Prophecies, and in his work just published, entitled, A General and Connected View of the Prophecies, & c. supposes that Daniel's grand period of 'time, times, and an half," (chap.vii. v.25 and xii. v.7.) or 1260 years, will expire in 1866; - that the 30 years immediately succeeding that era will be occupied in the restoration of Judah, and that other 45 years will be taken up in that of Israel; - after which, i.e. in the year 1941, will commence the reign of the Millenium, when Palestine will again be occupied by the Jews . . . " (109-110).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 109-110
Researcher: Don Bradley
Date When Photocopying Was completed: ________________________________

Topics:Visions
Author: Richard Brothers

Title of Book: A Revealed Knowledge of the Prophecies and Times
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Charles R. and George Webster
Date of Publication: 1796
Nature of Source: This is a work of scripture explication based primarily on the author's revelations. It was also published in London, Philadelphia, and West-Springfield, MA. The Albany edition was distributed in Albany, Schenectady, Hudson, Johnstown, Lansingburgh, and in Cooperstown (by E. Phinney).

Comment: The author quotes lengthy passages from the prophetic books of the Bible, often interjecting his own interpretations. He establishes a time for the Restoration of Israel to Jerusalem (1798) and advances his claim that he will reign as the latter-day David in this restored Jerusalem. He also makes a detailed comparison between the prophecies in the Book of Revelation and the political scene of his time. In the following excerpt Brothers reports two visions. These visions occurred shortly after he received a revelation announcing the imminent destruction of London. Brothers also reports many other visions, which I have not included in this database. I included these because they are visions of Deity.

Excerpt (pages): "After intreating for the persons I have set down . . . I was . . . carried up to heaven in a vision, and saw on my right side, at a small distance, a beautiful silver white bird in shape of a Dove, but a little larger; it was the Holy Ghost, and was the very same that descended on the head of my blessed Saviour, when he came up from being baptized in the river Jordan; he kept between me and Satan, who was then revealed that I might witness it, and great power given him to visit the earth. - The Lord God then spoke to me from the middle of a white shining cloud.

... [Thirteen days later] I was in a vision, and being carried up to heaven, the Lord God spoke to me from the middle of a large white cloud, and said in a strong clear voice - All, All, I pardon London and all the people in it for your sake: there is no other man on earth that could stand before me to ask for so great a thing" (50-52).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 para.
Hard Copy (pages): 50-52
Researcher: Don Bradley
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: agency
Author: Editor
Title of Book: "Extract from Appendix."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 3, 1829
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Campbell arguing against the position of a Mr. Robert Own that man is not a moral agent. Campbell believes that it is absurd to equate the actions of inanimate things, such as a tree, with those of humans. Compare with the Book of Mormon's teachings on the moral agency given to man. (2 Nephi 2:26, Alma 12:31).
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "From the whole scope of Mr. Owen's discussion, and most unequivocally from his appendix, it appears that his whole scheme of things is founded upon one fundamental position. This position is; - MAN IS NOT A FREE AGENT. That no man forms his own character but that every man's character is formed for him, is one of his consequences from this position - Another is, that merit and demerit, praise and blame, reward and punishment belong not to man, nor, in truth, to any being in the Universe. Such is the soul or life of his whole system. . . That there is no moral difference on Mr. Owen's hypothesis between the actions of a machine and those of King Solomon, sir Isaac Newton, and the apostle Paul; that a man, a fish, an oyster, a tree, a watch, are equally voluntary agents, alike praiseworthy, blameworthy, virtuous, vicious, good or evil, was repeatedly shown during the discussion. The tree that cools us with its shade, that refreshes us with its fruit, and that kills us by its fall, is neither praiseworthy nor blameworthy. So the patricide, the matricide, the homicide, and the philanthropic, the affectionate, kind, and benevolent son, daughter, brother, neighbor, are alike praiseworthy, alike blameworthy - in truth, neither to be praised nor blamed at all. . . . The materialist, or philosophic necessarian, who says that the earth is an immense prison, and the laws of nature so many jailors, and all mankind prisoners bound in chains which cannot be dissolved; or, to speak without a figure, who says that the actions of all men are as unavoidable as the ebbing and flowing of the sea, or the waxing and waning of the moon, can never rationally be a reformer. For what could he reform? He could not pretend to reform nature, nor any of its laws. On Mr. Owen's principles the present state of the world is perfectly natural and unavoidable" (576-577).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: angels; premortal existence

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Christian Morality. -- No. I."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 9)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Apr. 3, 1826

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Within the context of discussing human alienation from God, author believes that reconciliation cannot be coerced through fear, only through love. He uses as an example the fallen angels referred to in Jude 1:6 "which kept not their first estate."

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "All the terrors of the Lord cannot produce love in any creature alienated from him, else those evil spirits which kept not their first estate would long since have been reconciled to him. Nothing but the exhibition of love can destroy enmity" (56 or 226).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: apostasy; new scripture

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "A more minute History may yet be given."

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 5)

Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA

Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)

Date of Publication: May 3, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: Author mentions the "Great Apostacy" which had expelled pure New Testament teachings from Christianity. There is a great optimism behind the restoration effectuated by Campbell that is also seen in the early LDS Church: what God has begun cannot be stopped by human efforts.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "My theological system is the Sacred Writings of the Apostles and Evangelists of Jesus Christ. It is an old system; but because the Man of Sin, during the Great Apostacy, banished it from Christendom, it is now called a new system. This old thing has, indeed, become new; and from an endemic in its influences, it is fast becoming an epidemic. All the Doctors of Divinity on the continent cannot stop its progress. It is now spreading with incredible rapidity over this country" (227).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

---

Topics: apostasy; restoration

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Concluding Remarks."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 12)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Jul. 5, 1830

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: In his closing statement, Campbell recounts his personal history and efforts to preach and live according to the New Testament Primitive Church. He rejoices over his successes to reform the christian churches from their apostasy.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "The success attendant on this effort has produced a hope which once I dared not entertain, that a blissful revolution can be effected. It has actually begun, and such a one as cannot fail to produce a state of society far surpassing in the fruits of righteousness, and peace, and joy any result of any former religious revolution, since the great apostasy from christian institutions" (661).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):
Topics: apostles, bishops; office of bishop; lay priesthood and preaching, call to preach, educated ministry; paid clergy; principles of church government

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "A restoration of the Ancient Order of Things. No. XII. The Bishop's Office. --No. 1."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 9)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Apr. 3, 1826

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Author comments on the office of bishop, its origin, function, and the necessary qualifications for a bishop. Campbell views the office of bishop as fundamentally different from the preacher or minister. The former is chosen by the congregation to teach and preside over them, and thus deserves financial renumeration. Campbell equates preachers and ministers of various denominations and sects with "hirelings," those who learn the art of preaching as a trade and make their living in this way, which he vigorously opposes. He views the office of bishop as a temporary position to which one is called by "the brethren." In contrast, preachers call themselves, through an inward call and education. Compare with Joseph Smith's concept of the office of bishop and lay priesthood (D&C 20:67; 51; 107:68-74; 114:1-2).

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "the apostolic writings are as plain as the dictates of common sense upon this subject. They teach us that the office of bishops was the last thing instituted, or, in other words, that the apostles and evangelists, had fulfilled their commission, I. e. had proclaimed the gospel, made disciples, baptized them, convened them, and taught them the christian doctrine, before they suggested them the necessity, utility, and importance of the office of a bishop. Thus we find the apostles in their subsequent or last visits to the congregations which they had planted, instituting, appointing, and giving directions concerning the bishop's office. . . . necessarily the bishop's work is different from that of a missionary, a preacher, an evangelist, in the New Testament import of these terms. That the work of a bishop is different from every other work requisite to forming a congregation is self-evident from one fact, viz: That this work or office did not originate until congregations existed.

. . . . The apostles and evangelists had converted, baptized, and convened the disciples in those places, had opened to their minds the christian doctrine. In process of time they had so far progressed in this doctrine, as to be able to edify one another; some, as in all societies, progressed faster and farther than others. Some were better qualified to preside, to rule, and to teach, than others; and the constitution of man as an individual, and of men in society, is such as to require, for the sake of intelligence, order, peace, harmony, and general good, that there be persons set apart or appointed to certain functions, which are necessary to the good of the whole associate body. The exigencies of the congregations required this, both with regard to themselves and to others. Thus originated the bishop's office. . . . The qualifications which the bishop must possess show what was expected from him. He must be qualified to teach, and be able by sound teaching both to convince and exhort those who oppose the truth. He must feed the flock of God with all those provisions which their exigencies require, or with which God has furnished them in the christian institution. He must preside well. . . .
. . . . The bishop of a christian congregation will find much to do that never enters into the idea of a modern preacher or 'minister.' The duties he is to discharge to Christ's flock in the capacity of teacher and president, will engross much of his time and attention.
Therefore the idea of remuneration [sic] for his services was attached to the office from its institution. This is indisputably plan, not only from the positive commands delivered to the congregations, but from the hints uttered with a reference to the office itself. Why should it be so much as hinted that the bishops were not to take the oversight of the flock
'for the sake of sordid gain,' if no emolument or remuneration [sic] was attached to the office? The abuses of the principle have led many to oppose even the principle itself. . . .

A hireling is one who prepares himself for the office of a 'preacher' or 'minister,' as a mechanic learns a trade, and who obtains a license from a congregation, convention, presbytery, pope, or diocesan bishop, as a preacher or minster, and agrees by the day or sermon, month or year, for a stipulated reward. . . . He intends to make his living in whole, or in part, by making sermons and prayers, and he sets himself up to the highest bidder. . . . But there are other hirelings not so barefaced as these, who pretend to be inwardly moved by the Holy Spirit to become ministers. . . . I do not think we will err very much in making it a general rule, that every man who receives money for preaching the gospel, or for sermons, by the day, month, or year, is a hireling in the language of truth and soberness -- whether he preaches out of his saddlebags, or from the immediate suggestions of the Holy Spirit.

The christian bishop pleads no inward call to the work, and never sets himself to learn it.
The hireling does both. The christian bishop is called by the brethren, because he has the qualifications already. The minister says he is inwardly called, and prepares himself to be called and induces others to call him. . . . The former [the christian bishop] considers himself the overseer or president of the one congregation only who called him to the office, and that when he leaves them he resigns the office and is no longer president. The latter [the hireling] views himself as a bishop all his life. He was one before he got his present charge, and when he abandons it he is one still. He has been called by God as Aaron was, and remains a priest for ever. The christian bishop was chosen and ordained from his outward and virible [sic] qualifications which the apostles described and required. The 'minister' is licensed because of some inward impressions and call which he announces; or because he has been taught Latin, and Greek, and divinity. . . . (61-63 or 231-233).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

_______________________________________________________
Topics: baptismal covenant; Christianization of the Old Testament

Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Ancient Baptisms."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 6)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jan. 4, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Author traces two events in Old Testament history that provide types of the Christian ritual of baptism. Author argues that baptism is such an important and crucial institution that God provided "resemblances of it" before even the birth of Christ.

Compare Campbell's notion of Christian types with Joseph's revelation that the gospel of Christ, along with its ordinances and institutions, existed from the beginning of the earth, long before the birth of Jesus.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "those great events which the Mosaic history records, are, of all others, the most instructive, if we except the eventful history of the New Testament. But there is one peculiarity in the characters and events recorded in the Mosaic history which I wish to notice here, because it proves the authenticity of the sacred volumes, while it greatly illumines the pages of the apostolic writings. I allude to their emblematic reference. No pencil but that guided by an eye which penetrates all futurity, could have in ten thousand instances painted out the Christian institution, with all its influences, moral and religious, ages before its author was born - Adam the first, and Adam the second - the Fall, and the Resurrection of man - Hagar and Sarah - Ishmael and Isaac - Jacob and Esau - Elijah and John - Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and Jesus - circumcision and baptism - the passover and the Lord's supper - and a hundred other allusions, symbols, and emblems, need only be mentioned to revive the remembrance of the exact adaptation of Jewish and patriarchal history to the development of the divine philanthropy in the Christian scriptures. . . . The first preacher, not only of the New Testament, but of the Old, was what some now call a Baptist. I allude to Noah and John. Noah preached reformation or drowning to the Antediluvians. John preached reformation or burning to his contemporaries. Noah was saved by water, and the old world was baptized in water without a resurrection, because it would not reform. . . . After the resurrection of the earth Noah was born of water. The waters which drowned the sinners saved the righteous Noah, and made him the father of a new world. The heavenly proclamation believed brought him into the ark, and God's promise brought him out. After his baptism, or second birth, God promised him life, and enlarged his privileges. Water translated him from the old world into the new; and while it purified the earth for him, it fitted him for the earth. But he was born of promise too. . . . As water saved Noah, so baptism saves us. He had faith in the resurrection of the earth; and we have faith in the resurrection of Jesus. He believed God's promise of bringing him out of the water, and we his promise of raising us from the dead. . . . As Noah entered a new world by being born of water and the promise, so we enter the kingdom of heaven by being born of water and the Spirit. . . . The baptism of the Israelites is the next event of this sort to which we now allude. . . . Faith in God's promise had brought the Israelites from their houses and their homes into one assembly, on the coast of the Red Sea. Faith in the divine call and mission of Moses, had induced them to put themselves under his conduct and guidance. But notwithstanding this faith, they could not leave the land of their nativity and get on the way to Canaan until they were baptized into Moses and born of water as Noah was. Hence they could not cross the Red Sea in ships. They must descend into the bottom of the Red Sea before they could ascend into the relation of the saved people. . . . But the water which saved Israel drowned the Egyptians. . . . The christian institutions were thus pictured out to us by the pencil of Omniscience ages before the founder of our religion was born. We should not have ventured to trace these analogies had not the apostles Peter and Paul directed us. Following their guidance, we cannot but see that the one baptism of christians is an institution of so great moment as to have had two resemblances of it in the two most extraordinary events in Jewish and Patriarchal history - the one baptism of the fathers of the once baptized earth, and the one baptism of the once baptized fathers of the Jewish people" (616-617).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: basis of authority
Author: Christian Union
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Christian Union. - No. II."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 1, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: The basis of authority for religious creeds is Christ alone. Humans have no authority or right to establish creeds, thus all sectarian creeds are wrong. The New Testament is the only authoritative source for statements of Christian doctrine.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "...in his church he [Christ] is himself the only sovereign and head; that he only has power to decree articles of faith and the authority thereof, and that he alone has a right to ordain rites and ceremonies, and to fix the terms of communion and of church membership; and consequently that no ecclesiastics or earthly princes have power to make laws in his kingdom. . . . the very existence [of human creeds] is an abomination: they produce divisions, and are to be opposed every where" (2 or 172).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Author, with the stated intent of defending the society of Friends, believes that revelation as personal inspiration exists and that humans do not have the authority to effectuate salvation, hence missionary work is useless. Compare with Joseph's belief in revelation and his emphasis on the salvific human role in the plan of salvation through both missionary and temple work.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "But, sir, many think that you go too far, and condemn all, because you do not, as such ones cannot, agree fully and exactly with any one of the sects - because, say they, you seem to condemn all the sects, except perhaps the society of the Friends, called Quakers; and that you seem rather to bear on them, by suggesting that revelation is full (by which I understand you to confine your ideas essentially to scripture revelation, or the like,) whereas they avow a belief that they are, by times, under the monitions of the Spirit, which I am inclined to believe of some of them. . . . For I fully believe that, in this respect, God is the same, to his true and faithful followers, at least, as he was in the days of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, Joseph and others, and that he still, by times, reveals certain things to some men and women, and points out to their understandings certain things which are, and things which shall come to pass - I say, I believe this, because my experience has proved it . . . priestcraft is at its very wit's end and in the very raving paroxysms of desperation, for fear of the loss of its empire over the understandings of the multitude. It fears that people will begin to use their brains properly, and to thing and reflect on the nonsense of their arrogant pretensions, as though God had given them a power which mortal never had, namely, to be the real and efficient cause of the salvation of others, which would leave this plain and horrid inference as an inevitable result, namely, that if by their presence and exertions many souls would actually be saved, that it is hence most clearly and fairly deducible that, by their absence or remissness, many souls would be lost. This, although not perceived by many truly honest and religious minded persons (who are therefore zealous to send missionaries out to all the world) is a most horrid and abominable doctrine" (26-27 or 196-197).
Author: Editor
Title of Article: "Reply."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 9)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Apr. 3, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: In a reply to a letter, Campbell denounces preachers receiving payment.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "I have not arrived in my course of essays on "the Restoration" to that place which would lead me to exhibit what I deem the views of the New Testament on the bishop's office, call, ordination, and support. That any man is to be paid at all for preaching, i.e. making sermons and pronouncing them; or that any man is to be hired for a stipulated sum to preach and pray, and expound scripture, by the day, month, or year, I believe to be a relic of popery" (61 or 231).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: bishops; apostles; elders; lay priesthood and preaching; office of bishop; principles of church government
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "A Restoration of the Ancient Order of Things. No. XIII. The Bishop's Office. -- No. II."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 11)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jun. 5, 1826
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Author discusses the nature of the office of bishop, distinguishing it from preachers, ministers, and elders. Although many shrink from the term bishop, because of its Catholic connotations, author believes that the office of bishop is clearly sanctioned in the New Testament. The term elder does not signify any priesthood office, but only refers to the age of an individual. Bishops ought to be elders and reflect a greater maturity. Compare with Joseph's ideas about priesthood offices (D&C 20:38-67; 107:11-12).

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "Some of the populars sneer at the term bishop, as if the Spirit of God had not chosen it to designate the only legitimate 'officer' in a christian congregation, who is, from office, to teach and rule. . . . Some again, because of the impieties of England and Rome in appropriating this term to a man who wore a wig, and a gown, and trappings, have considered it very profane indeed, to call any man a bishop who does not wear a wig and kiss the pope's toe. But to those who have got an apostolic taste, the title or name of office which Paul and Peter adopted and designated is incomparably preferable to the prescriptions of Geneva or Westminster. . . . the fact is, very generally, that few of the leaders of religious assemblies seem to know, or are able to decide, whether they should be called evangelists, preachers, elders, bishops, or ambassadors; but the term minister or divine seems to embrace them all. . . . To many of them it seems but of little consequence to be tenacious of the name. . . . let the names which the apostles adopted be used in their own acceptation, and let those things, persons and offices which the apostles said nothing about, be named or styled as the inventors please, but call not bitter sweet, nor sweet bitter. Let us not call the messenger of a congregation, an elder. Let us not call a preacher, a bishop. Let us not call a bishop, a divine; nor a deacon, a ruling elder. In a word, let us give to divine institutions divine names, and to human institutions human names . . . If they are sent to preach, let them go to preach - but they can plead no right to officiate as bishops under the call to preach. For amongst all the qualifications by which Paul would have a bishop chosen - the modern special call is not to be found. . . . The bishops of apostolic creation are sometimes called elders - because they were generally aged persons, and always amongst the oldest converts in the community in which they officiated. But the office is no where called the elder's office. There is nothing in the term elder, which can designate the nature of any office. . . . While on the term elder, it may be remarked, that there is no greater incongruity than to see a stripling or a young man from twenty to thirty, styled elder; and if the name does not suit his years, it is a very strong reason in favor of the conclusion that the office of a bishop does not" (72-73 or 242-243).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: bishops; elders; order; lay priesthood and preaching; women's role; Primitive Church; basis of authority; plural marriage; principles of church government

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "A Restoration of the Ancient order of Things. No. XXXII. Official Names and Titles."
The religious theatre of public actors is crowded. To find suitable names to designate them all would be a desideratum. We have Ministers, Divines, Clergymen, Elders, Bishops, Preachers, Teachers, Priests, Deans, Prebendaries, Deacons, Arch-Bishops, Arch-Deacons, Cardinals, Popes, Friars, Priors, Abbots, Local Preachers, Circuit Preachers, Presiding Elders, Missionaries, Class Leaders, Licentiates, cum multis alis. I do not know what to do with them all. I would call them all by scriptural names if I could find them. But it is very difficult to find scriptural names for unscriptural things. . . I find the following are the nearest approach I can make: Deacons, Bishops, Preachers, Evangelists, Antichrists. . . The term preacher will hardly apply to any of them, in its scriptural import. Christian mothers who make known to their children the glad tidings, or the facts concerning the Saviour, are the most worthy of this name of any persons now on earth. Evangelists will not strictly apply to any, in its primitive use. Though the printers of the history of Jesus Christ, and those who proclaim the ancient gospel, in the capacity of public speakers, may, of all others, deserve to inherit this name with the most reasonable pretensions. Elders will apply to old men, only, whether they are official or unofficial members of society. Overseers or Bishops will apply to all, and to none but those who have the presidency or oversight of one congregation. Deacons, to those males who are the public servants of the whole congregation. Deaconesses, to those female public servants, who officiate amongst the females. Teacher, is a generic term which will apply to all men in the capacity of public instructors. As for the others, I cannot classify them. The word antichrist covers a goodly number of them. . . The officers of the christian congregations found in the New Institution were overseers and public servants, or bishops and deacons. - Every well ordered congregation was supplied with these. They had one, or more, male and female deacons, who served the congregations in performing such service or ministry to the male and female members of their respective communities, as circumstances required; but all these official duties were confined to one single congregation. Such a thing as a bishop, over two, three, or four congregations, was as unknown, unheard of, and unthought of in the primitive and ancient order of things in the christian communities, as a husband with two, three, or four living wives. There is just as much reason and scripture for one pope and twelve cardinals, as for one bishop and four congregations. A bitter sweet or a sweet bitter is no more incongruous than a young elder, or to see a young stripling addressed as an elder. . .

call no man a bishop or overseer, who has not a flock or an oversight; call no man a deacon who is not the public servant of a community; call those who proclaim the ancient gospel evangelists. . . . the office of evangelist, as a proclaimer of the gospel, was always contingent. He was needed only in some places, and at some times, and was not a permanent office of the Christian church. His office now answers to that of the prophets of old. The prophets as extemporaneous and occasional teachers became necessary. When, then, any congregation has a brother well qualified to proclaim the gospel, and when there is, in the vicinity, a people in need of such a service, let the person so sent by them, be called an evangelist. Perhaps the present distress requires such persons as much as any former period. But when Christian congregations cover the country, and walk in the instituted order of the new constitution, such persons will not be necessary. . . ." (585-586)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Christianization of the Old Testament
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Essays on Man in his Primitive State and under the Patriarchal, Jewish, and Christian Dispensations. - No. X. Jewish Age.- No. II."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 3, 1829
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Campbell comments on the tendency of Christians (in this instance Regular Baptists) to read Christianity into the Old Testament, and make the Old Testament law binding on Christians. For Campbell, the Old Testament is a political constitution or covenant that has no bearing on Christians today.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "I remember well when I was about to be cut off from a Baptist association for affirming that this covenant or constitution at Sinai was not the Moral Law of the whole universe, nor the peculiar rule of life to Christians. . . . But I have said it was a political constitution, though religion and morality are delineated in it" (7 or 575).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Christianization of the Old Testament; baptismal covenant; basis of authority; dispensations
Comment: In arguing against those who desire to read Christianity into the Old Testament, author suggests a dispensational-like reading of biblical history. John ended the Jewish age and thus his baptism is fundamentally different from the Christian baptism in authority, in the name one is baptized into, in the faith on which it is based, and in the kingdom into which it introduces the individual.

Excerpt (pages): "John appeared in the conclusion of the Jewish age to prepare the way of the Lord. . . . Those who confound and jumble every thing to make a system of their own, can never understand these sacred writings. Some make christianity as old as the creation, and teach that Moses was in reality as much a christian as Paul or John. There is infancy, childhood, and manhood in religion, as well as in human life. There is starlight, moonlight, twilight, and sunlight in religion, in the moral, as in the natural world. And he that objects against this economy might as well object that we are infants before we are men, or that Spring must precede Summer, and seed time harvest. . . . [John] immersed in the name or by the authority of God, and not in the name or by the authority of the Lord. No act in religion, from the beginning of the world until Pentecost, was ever done by any other name or authority, than the simple name of God. By the authority of Jesus or the Messiah, no act had ever been performed until in his own person he appeared in Judea, and until he declared that authority was given he commanded no man to perform any act by his authority. He immersed into no name. . . . The Jews at this time had but the knowledge of God common to the nation, and it was therefore simply by the authority of the God of Abraham the Jews were immersed; and as they had always professed that name, there was neither need for, nor propriety in, their being immersed into that name. . . . he did not immerse into the christian faith. . . . To believe that Jesus is the Lord of all, that he died as a sin offering, and that he arose from the dead, was impossible to any of John's cotemporaries [sic]. For Jesus was not made Lord, as Peter imparted on Pentecost, until he ascended into heaven. . . . John's immersion brought no man into the kingdom of heaven. The reason is obvious: no person could come into a kingdom which was not set up. . . . Christian immersion, then, differs from John's in four great and important particulars: - First, in the name, or by the authority, by which it is done. Second, into the name, into which it is done. Third, the faith upon which it is done; and fourth, the kingdom or institution into which it introduces us" (647-648).
Topics: Christianization of the Old Testament; dispensations; baptism for the dead; fate of those without gospel; baptismal covenant Author: C. F.
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "To the Editor of the Christian Baptist."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 7)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Feb. 1, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Author believes that faith in Jesus Christ and his sacrifice forgives the sins of all believers without the necessity of performing any baptism. To make this case, author points out how those living on the earth before the coming of Christ received remission of their sins through faith. Faith in Christ's sacrifice is the only way appointed, in all the dispensations, to redeem humans from sin. Compare with Joseph’s teachings on the salvation of those living before Christ, specifically the retroactive effects of the atonement on those in previous dispensations. Author implies, as Joseph taught, that faithful followers of God whose lives are recorded in the Old Testament, knew of and looked forward to Christ's sacrifice, which belief was the basis for the remission of their sins. However, author believes that such persons did not need to perform any work, contrasting with Joseph's teachings on the essentialness of baptism for all those who have lived on the earth, and thus the imperative to perform baptisms for the dead.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "That Jehovah, in all ages and at all times, under all dispensations, appointed but one way of redeeming guilty man, to wit, the sacrifice of his own Son. He, though pointed out in various manners, was to all, by faith, the only sovereign relief. Abel, and all the descendants of Adam down to John the Baptist, were directed to look forward to the blood of Christ which was to be shed, and the Bible gives the assurance that whoever understood this subject and cordially believed God's testimony concerning it, had their sins pardoned, and all who shall live upon the earth from the day of the resurrection until the last trumpet shall sound to call the dead to life and the living to immortality, who shall believe God's testimony concerning this fact, shall receive the remission of all their sins, peace with God, and the hope of eternal glory. This all without the performance of any work, or without the loss of a moment of time" (628).
Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Author makes the distinction between precepts or commandments governing Old Testament worship and principles that govern Christian worship according to the New Testament. Compare with Mosiah 13:27-32, which suggests that the Jews were given the Law of Moses, "a law of performances and of ordinances," because of their wickedness, while freedom from the law comes through Christian redemption. Christians must follow the three institutions in the Christian economy, namely immersion, the weekly participation in the Lord's supper, and observance of the Sabbath. While only the principles, not precepts or specific commandments on how to perform these institutions, are incumbent on the Christian, following the New Testament will likely create uniformity of practice.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "The Jews were under a government of precepts - we are under a government of principles. Hence all was laid down to them in broad and plain commandments; and the book which contained their worship was a ritual, a manual of religious and moral duties, accurately defined to the utmost conceivable minutia: insomuch that nothing was left to discretion - nothing to principle. There is nothing like this in the New Institution. We have no ritual, liturgy, nor manual. The New Constitution and Law of Love does no more than institute the converting act, the Lord's supper, and the Lord's day. . . . In this christians are left to the discretion of full grown men to the government of principles. All things are to be done decently and in order: but the modes of decency and order in the celebration of these christian institutions are no where pointed out. . . . no code of law, no enumeration of ceremonies, no forms of observance are suggested. There is nothing in the christian economy of the nature of ceremony - nothing for the sake of form. There is a principle in every thing instituted. . . . It is not alleged by me that there are no divinely instituted acts of christian worship nor ordinances in the christian church; nay the contrary I have undeviatingly affirmed. These are a part, an essential part of the Institution of Favor. . . . different communities might, in following up their own sense of propriety attend upon some of the institutions of the christian worship in the christian assemblies differently, and yet be equally acceptable to God and profitable to men. But the great principles of christian morality never can legitimately issue in a different practice no more than the great law of attraction can produce antagonist results or opposing effects at the same time and in the same place. I would also add, that a hearty and unreserved submission to the authority of Jesus Christ, will generally, and, perhaps, universally, issue in a uniformity of practice as respects even those discretionary matters" (655-657).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Christianization of the Old Testament; Melchizedek priesthood; fate of those without gospel

Author: Editor

Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Essays on Man in his Primitive State, and under the Patriarchal, Jewish, and Christian Dispensations. - No. XII. Jewish Age. - No. IV."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Mar. 1, 1830

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds,
and beliefs.

Comment: Author takes position that the Law of Moses was never meant to be the only means toward salvation, either before, during, or after its time. It is a temporal law that no longer serves a purpose now that the spiritual law has been revealed in Christ. Author argues that those living prior to the Mosaic law, such as Melchizedek, or those living in another nation, such as the children of Edom, equally share in salvation. Thus the Mosaic law serves no special salvific purpose. Compare author's comment that Melchizedek was more righteous than Aaron with Joseph's distinction between the Melchizedek and Aaronic priesthods. Author's argument has implications for the question of the fate of those who live without the gospel.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "The Jewish religion as instituted by Moses, as recorded by Moses in the five books, has not a single promise, nor a single curse which looks beyond time.
Whatever previous or subsequent revelations may have taught - whatever the Patriarchs before Moses, or the Prophets after him, may have taught, one thing to me, at least, is certain - that Moses, in originating or instituting the Jews' religion, taught nothing concerning a future state - not a word concerning eternal salvation, or future and eternal punishment in the Jewish religion... then it must follow that the design of the Jewish religion and the design of the Christian are not the same. The former looked exclusively to this present world; the latter primarily, and almost exclusively, looks to the next....
They read these records and consider the history of this people - they study this institution and examine this religion with very little profit, who do not view it thus. To think that the law of Moses, or the institution from Mount Sinai - to think that the whole or any part of this economy had for its object the eternal salvation of the people under it, is not only to think without reason and contrary to authority, but it is to confound the whole oracles of God, and to make christianity a mere continuation of the principle of law amended and improved. There were saints before Moses, cotemporary [sic] with Moses, and after Moses, in the other nations, under the constitution given to Noah and his descendants after the flood. Salvation was accessible to the nations who held fast the traditions derived from the family of Noah, as it was to the Jews, who most exactly complied with all the national institutions. . . . Melchizedek was as illustrious a saint as ever Aaron was, and of a much more illustrious office. The children of Edom and of the surrounding nations long retained the knowledge of God among them, and even down to the days of John the Harbinger, there were men of other nations who feared the God of heaven, many besides the eastern magi who looked for the coming of the Just One. Submission to the institution of Moses was not 'essential,' as some would have it, to the salvation of the world, neither was circumcision the door of salvation to the human race. But this only by the way. We are warranted in saying that the enjoyment of eternal salvation was not derived to the Jews from any thing in their religion but what was prospective in it; and that it was not instituted for that purpose" (633-634).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: common property in the New Testament

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "A Restoration of the Ancient Order of Things. No. X. The Fellowship."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 6)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Jan. 2, 1826

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Exegesis on the word koinonia and its various translations as found in Acts 2:42; 1 Corinthians 1:9; 2 Corinthians 6:14; Galatians 2:9; Philippians 3:10; 1 John 1:3; 2 Corinthians 8:4; 1 Corinthians 10:16; 2 Corinthians 13:14; Hebrews 13:16; 2 Corinthians 9:13; Romans 15:26. Author discusses it in the context of distribution of goods and property.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "the term koinonia imports a joint participation in giving or receiving. . . . As Christians, in their individual and social capacity, are frequently exhorted by the apostles to contribute to the wants of the poor, to distributed to the necessities of the saints; as the congregation at Jerusalem continued steadfastly in this institution; and as other congregations elsewhere were commended for these acceptable sacrifices, it is easy to see and feel that it is incumbent on all Christians as they have ability, and as circumstances require, to follow their example in this benevolent institution of him who became poor that the poor might be made rich by him. The contribution, the weekly contribution -- the distribution to the poor saints, we contend is a part of the religion of Jesus Christ" (39-40 or 209-210).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Apr. 5, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: In this article outlining the essentialness of the Bible to the Christian religious life, the author argues that the Bible is the only basis of authority and is uncorrupted and true. The uniformity of the Bible ensures that all people in all places and in all times, receive the same undiluted message from God. Author argues that each believer is a saint and equally responsible in preaching the gospel and instructing/edifying converts and members of the church.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "God's instrument of instruction is the only one that can be relied on as perfectly fit for its purpose. In it we are sure that there is no deficiency to be found. . . . Its declarations are all true, whether yet accomplished or unaccomplished. Its declarations are clear, just, beneficent. . . . God's instrument of instruction is alone safe. When we resort to any human composition, written or spoken, for religious information, we are in constant and imminent danger of imbibing more or less of that soul-destroying error from which no human production is exempt. . . . God's instrument of instruction is alone authorized. For the employment of any other have neither precedent nor command within the Book of God. . . . Nor under his new institution did God intrust the religious instruction of his perishing creatures to any but men rendered infallible by the gifts of his spirit, till he had caused an inspired system of religious information to be committed to writing, and so rendered permanent, uniform, and transmissible to all parts of the world and to all generations of men: a device by which, as we shall soon see, the continuance of immediately inspired instructors became necessary. As, then, we have no precedent to authorize us to employ any other instrument of religious instruction than that which God has himself directly furnished us; so we have no command. . . . God's instrument secures to inspired instruction both perpetuity and uniformity. By this glorious contrivance the instruction offered to God's ignorant creatures is, in respect of certainty and substance, the same in all places, and at all times. . . . Like its unchangeable author, it is the same today, yesterday, and forever. Here the never changing nature of God shines forth in all its unclouded majesty. How unlike that discordant and ever changing instrument of religious instruction invented by men. It displays the uniformity of the divine conduct towards all God's rational offspring. . . . It qualifies, or rather puts it in the power of the saints to execute the office, and discharge the great and difficult task devolved on them. . . . the saints are charged with the work or labor, called the service, and the building up of the body of Christ, language which figuratively denotes the further instruction of converts already made, and the augmentation of their number. Now who are the saints and faithful men, on whom this great, important, and honorable labor is devolved? . . . Is not every believer one of this happy and honorable number? Is not every believer equally a member of this blessed society? equally entitled to all its privileges, and equally bound to perform all its duties? Has Christ made odious and offensive distinctions among his friends? Is not each dear and acceptable to him in proportion to the zeal which he manifests in his Master's service" (641-642).
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: descent of authority
Author: Christian Union
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Christian Union. - No. II."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 1, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Within the context of a rejection of Protestant creeds (the Westminster), the author believes that Protestants would be more true if they joined to the Roman Catholic church, rather than forming their own creeds based on human authority. Compare with Joseph's rejection of sectarian creeds formulated by humans.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "I am aware of the prejudices which each christian sect feels for their own name and creed, and of the great difficulty there will be in getting them to drop them, or to exchange them for the name of Christian and the word of God. I fear that there are many professing christians among what are called Protestant sects, who, rather than make this exchange, would unite with the Roman Catholics in defense of human authority, in legislating for, and dictating to the consciences of men in religion. . . . They ought, however, in that case to be consistent throughout, and to join themselves to the church of Rome. For if any church or people have authority from God to form creeds and confessions in religion, (and without divine authority there is no right,) the church of Rome had it before, and, as the elder and mother church ought to have been obeyed; and consequently the Reformation, as it has been called, was a rebellion against superiority, a disobedience of the divine authority vested in that church, and caught as such to be renounced by returning to it" (1-2 or 171-172).
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When photocopying Was completed:

Topics: dispensations; Christianization of the Old Testament
Author: A. Campbell
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "To Mr. Eli S. Bailey. One of the Editors of the Seventh Day Baptist Magazine."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 1, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: The primacy of the New Testament over the Old is asserted in response to a letter to the editor.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "But if you ask, Where do the Scriptures of the prophets or apostles declare that the apostolic writings are to be our exclusive guide in the christian religion, I am prepared to say that we are expressly and repeatedly taught, in all the matters of religious observance or of christian obedience, to be guided by Jesus the Messiah, and not by Moses - by the apostles, and not by the Jewish prophets" (7 or 177).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________________________

Topics: dispensations; spiritual gifts
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Reply."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 9)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Apr. 3, 1826
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: In a response to a letter, Campbell clarifies his view that the Old Testament holds the same divine authority as the New, although today Christians are subject only to the New. Campbell draws a distinction between "spiritual gifts" as exercised in the New Testament and devotional practices under the influence of the spirit.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): ". . . . with reference to 'casting off the Old Testament,' I will just observe that I know not of one sentence in the Christian Baptist that holds out such an idea. As to divine authority I have at all times viewed it and represented it as equal to the New. But that christians are not under it, but under the New, I have contended, and must still contend. And as to the present existence of 'spiritual gifts' in the church, in the New Testament sense of these words, I do not believe that any such exist. But if you mean call preaching, teaching, praying, praising, exhorting, and ruling, spiritual gifts, I do believe that such gifts do exist, and there is sufficient room for a very liberal exhibition of them in the present day" (60-61 or 230-231).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
"The fiercest contention between the assembly and parliament arose upon the power of the keys, which the former had voted to be in the eldership or presbytery, in these words: "The keys of the kingdom of heaven were committed to the officers of the church, by virtue whereof they have power respectively to retain and remit sins, to shut the kingdom of heaven against the impenitent both by the word and censures, and to open it to the penitent by absolution; and to prevent the profanation of the holy sacrament by notorious and obstinate offenders, the said officers are to proceed by admonition, suspension from the sacrament of the Lord's supper for a season, and by excommunication from the church, according to the nature of the crime and demerit of the person." The Independents claimed the like power for the brotherhood of every particular congregation. . . .'

'. . . ruling elders are to be joined with the pastors; now in some country villages and congregations, perhaps they may not be very learned, and yet the authority given them is very great; the word elders, amongst the Hebrews, signified men of the greatest power and dignity; so it was amongst the Romans, whose senate was so called, from senes, elders. The highest title amongst the French, Spaniards, and Italians, seigneur and seigniori, is but a corruption of the latin word senior, elder. The same may be observed in our English corporations, where the best and most substantial persons are called aldermen or eldersmen. Thus the title of elders may be given to the chief men of every presbytery; but if the power of excommunication be given them, they may challenge the title of elders in the highest signification" (16-17 or 186-187).
Hard Copy (pages): 16-17 or 186-187
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________________________________________________________

Topics: fate of those without gospel; redemption; baptismal covenant; infant baptism; atonement
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Reply to C. F."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 7)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Feb. 1, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: In his reply to a letter that asserts that faith, not baptism, is the basis for the remission of sins, Campbell responds emphatically that baptism is necessary. Campbell concedes that although many groups of unbaptized people (heathen, infants, etc.) will be saved in the kingdom of God, it is not an excuse for those who understand Divine Will. Campbell does an exegesis of several New Testament passages to prove that the early church understood baptism as necessary for salvation. Campbell is clear to underline the fact that baptism does not replace the sacrificial blood of Christ, nor the exercise of faith, nor grace freely flowing from God to humans. Baptism is a medium. Campbell engages the faith-works dialectic, arguing for the necessity of both. Grace is exhibited and faith shown in the act of baptism. Just as confession and prayer are necessary for forgiveness of sins committed by christians, likewise is baptism necessary for the remission of sins by those who desire to become christians.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "What portion of the human family may attain to the resurrection of the just, I presume not to say. How many Antediluvians, Patriarchs, and Jews - how many of the Pagan nations, before or since the Christian era - how many infants, idiots, and deaf and dumb persons - the testimony of God says not. But the intervention of the Mediator, the 'obedience to death' of the Messiah, whether with faith or without it, whether with circumcision, baptism, or the law, or without them, is declared to be the ground and reasons which will render their salvation possible. . . . Not an instance do I know of the pardon of sin by faith only. Without 'shedding of blood,' without attendance upon the altar, without obedience to the appointed means of pardon, 'there was no remission.' We know that neither animal blood nor the element of water, per se, could take away sin. But under the former economy blood was necessary to forgiveness; and under the new economy water is necessary - faith is the principle of action in both - and they are the means, not 'agents,' through which God imparted remission. . . . the blotting out of sins is not connected simply with faith, but with an act called turning to God, or conversion. . . . no man could be called a disciple or a convert - no man could be said to be discipled or converted until he was immersed. Whatever inward change might have taken place, still the person was not, in the estimation of those who acted under the commission, converted, until he was immersed. That was the act by which the command given to convert the nations was to be obeyed. . . . in one instance in the New Testament, is remission connected with faith alone. . . . The super-excellency of christianity is, that it makes the conscience perfect. The Jews, and the Gentiles too, many of them at least, were saved without any distinct knowledge of the sacrifice of Jesus. And I have much reason to think that infants dying will be citizens of the kingdom of glory, without, in this life knowing, or believing any thing of the sacrifice of Christ, of faith, or immersion. And I doubt not but such Paidobaptists as simply mistake the meaning and design of the christian institution, who nevertheless are, as far as they know, obedient disciples of Jesus, will be admitted into the kingdom of glory. But what has this to do with our obedience who are better instructed? If we profess to know our Master's will, or profess to know it better than others, and do it not, shall we compare ourselves to Jews, Pagans, Paidobaptists, infants, and all other uninstructed persons? To do so would be to prove ourselves hypocrites. . . . the act by which we put on Christ, the act by which we come to Christ, the act by which we confess Christ, the act by which we become disciples of Christ, the act by which we receive the pardon of our past sins, the act by which we come into the actual enjoyment of the salvation of Christ in this present life - is the act of immersion into the name of Christ: which act presupposes faith in him. . . . while I contend that salvation is of grace, proceeding from the pure, unbought, and unsolicited philanthropy of God, exhibited in the mission and gift of his Son, the only begotten, I do not suppose it to be in reason, nor according to scripture, incompatible with the idea of pure favor, that we must receive the salvation, or that we cannot be saved. And as to grace, if we must receive it by any act at all, it matters not what that act be, if it is one which is in the compass of our faculties. . . . To graft religion upon a natural principle was exceeding gracious; but I cannot see the grace in grafting it upon a supernatural principle. - Now it is grafted upon a natural principle that it might be grace. . . . salvation must be received before it can be enjoyed. What then is the action by which it is received? Whatever it may be, it cannot deprive the salvation of the attribute of grace. It is faith, say the, by which we receive the salvation. Then faith ceases to be a principle of action, if it be the action itself. But 'faith, works' and is not itself the work. Faith can receive a promise or a truth, and then the promise or the truth becomes the principle of action. Now if there was a promise that I should be pardoned the moment I believe that promise, then I might have a pardon through faith. But if the promise of pardon is connected with any other action than believing, then it is only when I perform that action that I can be assured of pardon. Pardon is ascribed to the blood of Christ as the worthy cause; but it is connected with, because promised through, certain actions. . . . if neither our confession nor our prayer, nor our forgiving those who trespass against us, precludes the idea of grace, nor impairs the value of faith in obtaining remission, baptism can impair neither the one nor the other, when proclaimed for the remission of sins. Nay, it is an act of grace to appoint some act of ours as a medium of remission, that we might have the assurance of forgiveness, and know when we are forgiven. . . . We do not, then, make water prayer, confession, and faith, saviours - Jesus is our Saviour. 'Tis he forgives our sins. And these are the means through which, by faith, we are forgiven" (629-632).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):
Comment: Author interprets happiness as love for God and fellow man. This is the basis of true Christian morality and exaltation. The degree of human perfection and progression is measured by love. Language of exaltation is couched in terms of rationality and refinement. Author uses word "intelligences" to describe exalted souls.

Excerpt (pages): "To bring man to love God and one another, is the high end of the christian religion. This is happiness. The happiness of heaven is the happiness of perfect love. The intelligent christian expects to be introduced into a society of the most refined and exalted intelligences, whose love to each other will be incapable of augmentation. Hence the standard of christian perfections is graduated by love to the brethren -- and just in so far as we have progressed in the cultivation of complacent affection and benevolence, so far have we obtained a taste for the society of the saved. . . . One leading design of the institution called the church, was to give its members a taste of the society of heaven; for the fact is, but very few have any taste for such a society. . . . They think more upon being safe than upon the high enjoyments, and talk more on escaping the burning lake than on all the rational delights of pure and exalted spirits before the throne of the Almighty. . . . we are to be . . . fellow citizens with all the pure and exalted intelligences in the universe in one enraptured throng forever." (56-57 or 226-227).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: hell; endless punishment; judgment; evil spirits; spirit world; new scripture; visions, dreams, revelations

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Universalism."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 5)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
There is a great deal said in this age upon the universal restoration of all demons and wicked men to the eternal happiness of saints and angels. It is true that the demons are yet in purgatory, and that those that die in their sins are to go through a purgatorial punishment proportioned to the number and magnitude of their sins. We have had for the last year, so many questions proposed to us from correspondents on this system. We can only, in a summary way acknowledge the receipt of them. Some indeed speak with as much certainty upon this subject as if they had just finished and gone through this purgatorial chastisement, and visited our world fraught with intelligence from Hades. They have discovered that all the caveats and threats in the New Testament are like the bugbears, and stories of ghosts and witches, which nurses tell to their peevish children when they would scare them to sleep. They tell lies; but it is with a good intention. They know there are no ghosts nor witches to disturb the children; but it would not be safe to tell them so. It is necessary to lie. Just so, when the apostles and the Saviour spoke of aionion or everlasting punishment, and of aionion or everlasting destruction, they knew there was no such thing; but they found that men could not be governed or managed without those bugbears, and were under the necessity of doing as he nurses aforesaid. They were under the necessity of telling lies from a good intention. They used such words and phrases in representing the duration of the punishment of the wicked, as they used in representing the continuance of the happiness of the righteous; yet they knew that the one was to terminate some fifty thousand years hence, while the other would never end. I have sometimes thought that it was exceedingly ungrateful in those knowing ones to disclose the secret. For if God was so kind to them to disclose the secret. For if God was so kind to them a special revelation for their own comfort, while he evidently holds out tremendous prospects to the wicked in terrorem, it is unkind on their part, to blab out the secret, and thus divest the governor of the world, of the most puissant means of keeping it safe for the righteous to live in it.

I do not, however, think that the Universalists are sinners above all others, in that they have run to one extreme, because some sectaries have run into the opposite. I view them both alike -- each mounted on his winged horse, and attempting to soar beyond the regions of revelation. we are very sure that all the Universalists on earth cannot produce one sentence in all the revelation of God that says any thing about the termination of the punishment of the wicked. The bible often tells us of its commencement; but not once of its end. It is wise for us not to live upon conjectures, nor to build systems upon dreams and visions. " (32-33 or 202-203).
Topics: Holy Ghost; laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Confirmation of the Testimony."
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Jan. 4, 1830

Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: Campbell argues that the confirmation of testimony is only available through visible, audible, or sensible demonstration of the Holy Spirit. The infusion of the Holy Spirit into the heart comes only after belief and obedience, and not as a confirmation of belief. The necessity of tangible evidence or proof for belief stems from Campbell's rationalism, and is fulfilled in the Biblical record. While the many signs and wonders performed by the apostles served as these external proofs for people of the time, Campbell seems to suggest that the Bible serves the same function today. He places a premium on obedience to gospel truth in order to know it. Compare with the distinction Joseph teaches between the Light of Christ given to all in order to accept truth, and the Gift of the Holy Ghost given only to obedient believers. The rational nature of Campbell's proof for belief contrasts with the spiritual witness many early Saints received prior to joining the church.

Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "To those desirous to understand this subject, an examination of this first letter to the Corinthians cannot fail to be instructive; for it most clearly and unequivocally teaches us that the visible, audible, sensible demonstration of the Spirit and of power was that supernatural attestation of the testimony of Christ which made it credible, so that no man could have acknowledged Jesus of Nazareth to be the Almighty Lord but by this demonstration of the Holy Spirit. . . . Some mystics in ancient times, and some of the moderns yet affirm that the infusion of the Holy Spirit into the hearts of disciples as the spirit of adoption - as the Spirit of Christ - is that demonstration of the Spirit which enables men to believe. But this is as unreasonable as it is unscriptural. . . . none of the converts to christianity in the New Testament are represented as converted but by what they saw and heard; and the Spirit of Holiness was a gift promised to them, and to them only when they believe. A demonstration that cannot be seen or heard, is, in our mother tongue, no demonstration at all; and a faith that rests upon any thing called demonstrations of the Spirit and of power which are only felt in the heart, is a faith resting upon itself. . . . The testimony which God has given, or the testimony which the Apostles gave concerning Jesus, as the Messiah, the Son of God, and the all-sufficient Saviour of the World, is a credible testimony, a well confirmed testimony; and as confirmed by the demonstrations of the Spirit and power of God, worthy of all acceptation; and by it men, otherwise without strength, are made able to believe. Hence all who wait for the testimony to be specially confirmed to them, wait for what they have no promise nor right to receive. . . . Peter never commanded any man to narrate his own feelings as a reason of the hope which he had in the Messiah, in preference to, or in competition with, the confirmed testimony. No, the best reason of faith is a well authenticated testimony, or confirmed evidences. . . . As the first christians were convinced by the Holy Spirit and enabled to believe by the attestations which he gave; so, after they believed and obeyed the gospel, they had the Holy Spirit infused into their hearts; and were then, because they were sons enabled by the spirit imparted to them to say, Our Father - so will it be with them who now believe and obey the same gospel upon the same evidences and for the same reasons" (11-14)

Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: infant baptism; mode of baptism; baptismal covenant
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Reply to Robert B. Semple."
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 3)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Mar. 1, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.
Comment: In a reply to a letter, Campbell comments on his beliefs regarding baptism that are in agreement with his correspondent.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "The sprinkling of a speechless and faithless babe never moved it one inch in the way to heaven, and never did change its heart, character, or relation to God and the kingdom of heaven. But not so a believer, immersed as a volunteer in obedience of the gospel. . . . You and I agree that we have righteousness, or pardon; that we have all the blessings of salvation through Christ; that his blood cleanses from all sin; and that the reign of God is righteousness, peace, and joy in a holy spirit" (136).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: justification; atonement

Author: Philip.

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Election. - No. IV."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 3)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Oct. 5, 1829

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: In the context of discussing election and God's foreknowledge, the author discusses the various terms used in the scriptures for forgiveness of sins. He argues that justification is the remission of sins through baptism which is predicated on faith. Faith is the principle of God's election of human beings. Compare with Joseph's understanding of the relationship between justification and remission of sins through baptism.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "the following phrases are used in scripture to mean the same thing: 'justification from sin,' 'righteousness of God,' 'righteousness of faith,' 'forgiveness of sins,' 'remission of sins.' . . . . the same sentiment comes to be varied into five different expressions by the scripture's writers. . . . the phrase 'forgiveness of sins' was the expression used among the vulgar of the Jewish nation. The doctors and teachers of law, more affected and technical, varied from the civil style, for the more learned and juridical expressions, 'justification from sins,' 'remission of sins.' The Doctors, then, in speaking of the officers at the Temple, pronounced them 'justified,' and again they said they were constituted 'righteous' according to law, i.e. in offering they had done just what the letter of the law demanded. . . . Now the Apostle being a Jew, and infinitely skilled by his education in the technia of the Jewish lawyers, adopts their own phrases indiscoursing with them on the subject of forgiveness. . . . And as the lawyers made use of the word 'righteousness' in reference to remission, or to describe a person whose sins had been forgiven: so the Apostle, speaking of the baptized believer whose sins had been forgiven, and was justified by the language of the law, calls this the righteousness of God; because it was a righteousness granted by God; and the righteousness of faith, because it was on the principle of faith in the Son of God, that any one was allowed to approach baptism. . . . Faith is not justification: forgiveness or remission is justification; and faith is the principle, and the only principle too, on which remission can be obtained" (594-596).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Sermons to Young Preachers. - No. III."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 8)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Mar. 1, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: In this anti-clerical rhetoric, author criticizes preachers for their claim of being called and sent by God, and for preaching emotionalism rather than the Bible. Compare with Joseph's criticisms of Protestant clergy.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "Whenever a person is considered as a legate of the skies, he has gained the day. Whenever a preacher appears before a congregation as one specially called by God and sent, he has but little trouble in gaining the implicit audience of the people. How dare they reject the message of God, and what need have they to examine the truth of one acting under the commission of the Omniscient? Would God send a liar, a deceiver, one unacquainted with his will, one unaccomplished for the task? No, most assuredly. He never did, he never will, call, commission, and send one incompetent agent. And therefore all his proclaimers had an authority which it was impious to oppose. But mind, they could all prove their mission not by words, assertions, or protestations, but by works as supernatural as their doctrine.
Neither young nor old proclaimers can, with either reason or scripture to sustain them, make such pretensions now. If, then, we would appear credible, or worthy of the audience of the people, we must appear before them, not under the assumption or pretension of ambassadors from heaven, or as God's special ministers; but as the pious, and humble and devout students of the Bible. . . . No disciple, old or young, can, with any consistency of character, refuse to tell the reasons why he believes in, and loves the Lord Jesus. But all who either tell or proclaim in a pulpit, or on a chair, their own convictions and feelings, doubts, fears, and hopes, preach themselves or their feelings, instead of Jesus Christ. . . .
To make a sermon, and to proclaim the gospel, are two things which are as different as logic and gospel. . . . Statesmen make speeches and Divines make sermons; but there is no difference in the art, and often very little difference in the theme" (632-633).
Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: lay priesthood and preaching; consecration
Author: Editor
Title of Book: "Contributions for the Spread of the Gospel."
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 2)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Feb. 1, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.
Comment: Campbell, although adamantly opposed to the idea of a paid clergy which promotes a "hireling" approach to preaching the gospel, insists that the congregations of Christians may have some obligation to financially support those preaching the gospel. Compare with Joseph's understanding of a lay priesthood and preaching and the idea behind the law of consecration.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "NO where, in all the New Testament, can an instance be produced, that either Christ or the Apostles required the people to give their money or make collections to assist in the promulgation of the gospel.' In the 76th page of this number the above sentence will be found. Now, although we are opposed to the whole monied scheme of converting the world, and to the hireling systems of the clergy, and to the eternal cravings of the insatiable appetite of the mammonite spirit of this age, which seems to have inspired all ranks and degrees of religious teachings; yet I cannot subscribe to the above assertion. In so many words it may be true that no such command can be adduced, but yet it is not true that the New Testament furnished no authority for calling upon the citizens of God's kingdom for aid in promulgating the glad tidings, or in teaching the christian religion. Paul received such aid and commended it" (90-91).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching; new scripture; revelation
Author: Editor
Title of Book: "Review of a sermon on the Duty of the Church to prepare Pious Youth in her bosom for the Gospel Ministry. -- By the Rev. Gideon Blackburn, D. D. Pastor of the Church in Louisville, Ky. --Text, Eph. iv. 11, 12."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 8)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Mar. 6, 1826.
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: In an ironical and polemical review of a sermon by a minister, author criticizes the minister's method of biblical interpretation and the conclusions he reaches regarding the need for the church to train young men for the ministry. Author argues that the minister is reading into the Bible new revelation and mocks the idea of an educated clergy.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "His sermon is intended to proclaim that it is the duty of the church to prepare in her bosom pious youth for the gospel ministry. Now this is really a new message from the skies, for there is not one word, from Genesis to John, which says that it is the duty of the church to prepare pious youth for the gospel ministry. . . . although he conforms to the custom of his modern peers in writing a text at the head of the page, he simply adduces it as a motto, and troubles his head no more about it, but proceeds to something more sublime and glowing from the skies -- no old revelation, but one new and brilliant, occupies his tongue and pen. . . . A pious youth becomes a beneficiary, then a textuary, next a minister or ambassador -- Christ's agent, negotiating with the souls of men!!! a fine picture! an important office! a high calling! . . . . In finding a model for this plan of procedure, the Doctor ransacks the bible in vain" (51-52 or 221-222)
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching; paid clergy
Author: A. Campbell
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Notification"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 1, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Campbell is challenging the Rev. Mr. Blackburn, D. D. (who opposed a statement of Campbell on this point), or any other clergy, to debate him on the divine authorization and constitution of paid clergy preaching.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "it was no part of the revealed design of the Saviour to employ clergymen, or an order of men resembling the priesthood, in the diffusion, spread, or progress of his religion in the world. In brief, the whole Paido-Baptist priesthood is an order of men unauthorized by Heaven. They are neither constituted, commissioned, nor authorized by the Head of the Church to officiate in any one of their assumptions" (6-7 or 176-177).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching; restoration
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Sermons to Young Preachers. - No. IV."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 9)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Apr. 5, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Author argues for making every member of a church a preacher, in the sense of preaching and proclaiming the gospel. Compare with Joseph's ideas of making every male convert an elder and missionary. Author also discusses the need for reformation of every aspect of the church, believing that to be the message of the ancient apostles.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "I know from a little experience, and from some observation, as well as from what the Acts of the Apostles teach, that the most efficient system, ever yet adopted, was that of the founder of the christian institution of making every man and woman in the ranks a preacher in the ancient import of that term. Every church on his plan, was a theological school - every christian a missionary; and every day's behavior, a sermon, either in word or deed. . . . to you, young preachers, I would say, you must, if you would be useful, take John a model - you must proclaim reformation - you must take the acknowledgments and practices of your congregations, as topics from which to urge reformation. You must endeavor to introduce that state of things which will make every man and woman in the christian ranks a preacher in word and deed. This is a prominent part of the reformation now needed; and it will be then, and not until then, when all the citizens of the kingdom of Heaven are citizen soldiers, that the armies of the aliens can be completely routed" (640).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching; sectarian strife; basis of authority
The word of God is wrested to serve the purpose of every sect in Christendom. Hence the members of these sects imbibe a sectarian spirit; and when this spirit is raised, and they get their hearers to fall in love with their systems of religion, they call it 'the pouring out the Spirit of God.' It is a question with me, whether those who impiously ascribe to the Holy Spirit what are the effect of their own spirits, know what the 'outpouring of the spirit' properly means. . . . this rebellious heart of mine disbelieves what he says; for he cannot produce one particle of evidence to support his pretensions to his call. I therefore conclude that all such are deceived, and are imposters, either intentionally or unintentionally. There appears but a shade's difference between a man who says he is specially called by God, and sent to preach the gospel, and his 'Holiness,' who professes to be the successor of Peter. One makes any thing and every thing of the word of God, so that his hearers cannot understand what is its meaning. The other keeps the word from his hearers, save that which falls from his lips. And neither of them can speak infallibly, and say they heard the audible voice of God calling them by name, and work a miracle to prove it to be true. Thus they stand upon an equal footing" (605).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Excerpt (pages): "The word of God is wrested to serve the purpose of every sect in Christendom. Hence the members of these sects imbibe a sectarian spirit; and when this spirit is raised, and they get their hearers to fall in love with their systems of religion, they call it 'the pouring out the Spirit of God.' It is a question with me, whether those who impiously ascribe to the Holy Spirit what are the effect of their own spirits, know what the 'outpouring of the spirit' properly means. . . . this rebellious heart of mine disbelieves what he says; for he cannot produce one particle of evidence to support his pretensions to his call. I therefore conclude that all such are deceived, and are imposters, either intentionally or unintentionally. There appears but a shade's difference between a man who says he is specially called by God, and sent to preach the gospel, and his 'Holiness,' who professes to be the successor of Peter. One makes any thing and every thing of the word of God, so that his hearers cannot understand what is its meaning. The other keeps the word from his hearers, save that which falls from his lips. And neither of them can speak infallibly, and say they heard the audible voice of God calling them by name, and work a miracle to prove it to be true. Thus they stand upon an equal footing" (605).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Campbell discusses the concept of the High Priesthood in connection with Christ's function in that role. He makes the distinction between the Old and New Testaments, and the uniqueness of the New Institution authored by Christ in its forgiveness of sins. Ideas of justification and sanctification (making perfect) are alluded to, both within the context of remission of sins. He criticizes other sects' understandings of baptism, comparing them with Jewish ablutions, and asserts instead that baptism provides the remission of sins through faith and immersion.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "It has been somewhere said that the priesthood of every divine economy was to the whole system what the heart is to the human system. It gives life and energy to it. It is the vital office. So the office of a High-Priest was the active and operative principle in every dispensation. All Priests have been a sort of Mediators, and the High Priest, the great Mediator of the institution under which he officiated. . . . Every High Priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, to offer both gifts and sacrifices for sin. To perfect the conscience as respects sin: to reconcile to the divine government: and to produce a perfect reconciliation among men, is the great object of the High Priesthood of the Christian Economy. . . . to be assured of the pardon of sin - the very essence of happiness from which, as from a fountain of living water, springs up eternal joy. This is the peace of God which passes all understanding, ruling and reigning in the heart. This is, then, just wherein christianity, rightly understood, has the excellency over Judaism, and every other institution, human or divine, which the ear of man has ever heard. . . . by one offering he has made perfect forever them who are sanctified. . . . Something that was wanting in every previous dispensation is supplied in this - a rational and certain pledge of the forgiveness of all sin. . . . Melchisedec, the type of our High Priest, was King of Righteousness and Prince of Peace. Our King of Righteousness and Prince of Peace was anointed with the oil of joy, with the Unction of the Holy One. . . . Many of the preachers laugh at receiving the forgiveness of sins through the obedience of faith - through immersion. They ridicule it. . . . The popular immersion is no better than a Jewish ablution. It is a mere rite, a ceremony, an ordinance, or any thing but a pledge of our pardon and acceptance with God, or the means of our entering into the Kingdom of God" (653-654).

Length of Relevant Material: 4 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: millennial conditions; preparation of the earth and preceding events; great and abominable church; restoration; religion and government; religion and civilization

Author: Walter Scott

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Extract of a Circular Letter, Written by Walter Scott, for the Mahoning Association of last year."
The Christian of the 19th century has been permitted to witness the accomplishment of wonderful events; Providence has stationed him on a sublime eminence, from which he can behold the fulfillment of illustrious prophecies, and look backwards upon nearly the whole train of events leading to the Millennium. Afar off, and upon the back ground of the picture before him, of wonderful extent, and in all the greatness of imperial ruin, appear the three great empires of Babylon, Persia, and Greece. Nearer to hand lays Rome, eternal Rome! terrible in her origin, terrible in her glory, terrible in her decline and fall! Living and acting through a long series of ages, she approaches the very verge of the present scene of things, till she assumes the distracted form of the ten kingdoms spoken of by Daniel, the remains of which now reel to and fro upon the face of Europe like a drunken man, ready to be engulfed in the yawning judgments of Almighty God. Sic transit Gloria Mundi. But from amidst the blaze of her glory, see yet loftier scenes arise - Behold the kingdom of our Lord Jesus, awaking under the eye of the imperial Caesars [sic]; small in its beginning, it rolls forward, it survives all Roman greatness; and that which was yonder, a little stone, is here become a vast mountain. And fills the whole earth. . . Here, too, are the imposters of Mahomet and the Pope, with temples having the lowermost part consecrated to God - the upper to the worship of idols. Arrayed in purple and scarlet, decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, behold the apostate church, mounted upon her imperial beast, holds forth the intoxicated nations a golden cup in her hand, full of abomination and of the filthiness of her fornication; on her fair, but unblushing forehead, is inscribed Mystery - Babylon the Great - the Mother of Harlots, and abominations of the earth. She shall be thrown with the violence of a mill-stone plunged into the midst of the ocean. . . All these things, beloved brethren, have passed in review before the christian of the 19th century; but if we have had to witness schemes of policy and superstition, so wild and enthusiastic, and apparently so unfavorable to the true religion, we have seen many things introduced, also highly conducive to its promulgation and reception among mankind - above all, we have seen the church in America, seated down under a gracious and efficient government, affording her and all men an unprecedented security of life and property - and if her unity be still desideratum, we ought to remember that the saints, for nearly 300 years, have been combatting [sic] tyranny and superstition, with astonishing success, until those who despise every name and every phrase, not found in the scripture, have become probably by far the most numerous party of professors in the United States. But who would have thought it remained for any so late as 1827, to restore to the world the manner, the primitive manner of administering to mankind the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (34-35).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: millennial conditions; preparation of the earth and preceding events; Primitive Church; sectarian strife; new scripture; revelation

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Prefatory Remarks."

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 1)

Place of Publication: Bethany, Brook Co. VA

Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)

Date of Publication: Jan. 4, 1830

Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: Here Campbell links the coming of the millennium with the return to the practices of the earliest Christian communities. Above all, this entails an end to sectarian divisions caused by differing doctrines. Nothing new can or should be established (meaning there is no such thing as new revelation, i.e. scripture): the gospel is old and true, and only needs to be recovered from the false layers of creeds added onto it. Campbell clearly values practices over doctrines. Unity, and hence the millennium, will come through a return to the practices of the Primitive Church.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "In the happiest state which we can ever expect on earth, we can only, as individuals, enjoy as much of the favor of God as the most intelligent and devout of the first converts; and, as communities, we could enjoy no more christian peace and joy than some of the first congregations after the first promulgation of the gospel. . . . Place the whole of any community, or even the great mass of any community, under influences similar to those which governed them, and what he most sanguine expect from a Millennium would in social and religious enjoyments be realized. . . . To see even a few scores of intelligent christians, in whom we confide as fellow-soldiers and fellow-citizens, and joint heirs of the heavenly inheritance, meeting around one and the same Lord's table, and uniting in the praises and adorations of one and the same common Lord and Saviour, imparts to us a joy which we are unable to express. . . . All I wish to remark on this occasion, is, that the first step towards the introduction of this glorious age is to dissipate the darkness which covers the people and hides from their eyes the Sun, the quickening, renewing, animating Sun of Mercy. We expect no new Sun, no new revelation of the Spirit, no other than the same gospel and the same religion, only that it shall be disinterred from the rubbish of the dark ages, and made to assume its former simplicity, sublimity, and majesty. The demons of party must be dispossessed, and the false spirits cast out. The human mind must be emancipated from the bondage of error, and information not only augmented, but extended to all in the community. . . . If all who love the Lord and the salvation of men, would unite their energies and bury the tomahawk of party conflicts, no seer could predict how rapid would be the march and how extensive the triumphs of the gospel. But the might agent, or rather the successful means, of this most desirable revolution, will be the ancient gospel. The gospels of every sect are something different from each other, and something different from the apostolic.
There can be, in truth, but one gospel. . . . One of the two great Reformers attacked the practices, and the other the opinions of the earlier part of the sixteenth century. The former was by far the most useful and puissant reformer. He gave the deadliest blow to the Beast. The other, intent on making men think right, only made converts among the converted. . . . The ancient gospel spoke by facts, and said little about principles of action of any sort. The facts, when realized or believed, carried principles into the heart without naming them; and there was an object presented which soon called them into action. . . .
The ancient gospel left no man in a reasoning mode about any principle of action" (5-8).

Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: millennial conditions; preparation of the earth and preceding events; Primitive
Church; sectarian strife; new scripture; revelation
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Prefatory Remarks."
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brook Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Jan. 4, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander
Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial
Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: Here Campbell links the coming of the millennium with the return to the practices of the earliest Christian communities. Above all, this entails an end to sectarian divisions caused by differing doctrines. Nothing new can or should be established (meaning there is no such thing as new revelation, i.e. scripture): the gospel is old and true, and only needs to be recovered from the false layers of creeds added onto it. Campbell clearly values practices over doctrines. Unity, and hence the millennium, will come through a return to the practices of the Primitive Church.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "In the happiest state which we can ever expect on earth, we can only, as individuals, enjoy as much of the favor of God as the most intelligent and devout of the first converts; and, as communities, we could enjoy no more christian peace and joy than some of the first congregations after the first promulgation of the gospel. . . . Place the whole of any community, or even the great mass of any community, under influences similar to those which governed them, and what he most sanguine expect from a Millennium would in social and religious enjoyments be realized. . . . To see even a few scores of intelligent christians, in whom we confide as fellow-soldiers and fellow-citizens, and joint heirs of the heavenly inheritance, meeting around one and the same Lord's table, and uniting in the praises and adorations of one and the same common Lord and Saviour, imparts to us a joy which we are unable to express. . . . All I wish to remark on this occasion, is, that the first step towards the introduction of this glorious age is to dissipate the darkness which covers the people and hides from their eyes the Sun, the quickening, renewing, animating Sun of Mercy. We expect no new Sun, no new revelation of the Spirit, no other than the same gospel and the same religion, only that it shall be disinterred from the rubbish of the dark ages, and made to assume its former simplicity, sublimity, and majesty. The demons of party must be dispossessed, and the false spirits cast out. The human mind must be emancipated from the bondage of error, and information not only augmented, but extended to all in the community. . . . If all who love the Lord and the salvation of men, would unite their energies and bury the tomahawk of party conflicts, no seer could predict how rapid would be the march and how extensive the triumphs of the gospel. But the might agent, or rather the successful means, of this most desirable revolution, will be the ancient gospel. The gospels of every sect are something different from each other, and something different from the apostolic. There can be, in truth, but one gospel. . . . One of the two great Reformers attacked the practices, and the other the opinions of the earlier part of the sixteenth century. The former was by far the most useful and puissant reformer. He gave the deadliest blow to the Beast. The other, intent on making men think right, only made converts among the converted. . . . The ancient gospel spoke by facts, and said little about principles of action of any sort. The facts, when realized or believed, carried principles into the heart without naming them; and there was an object presented which soon called them into action. . . . The ancient gospel left no man in a reasoning mode about any principle of action" (5-8).

Length of Relevant Material: 6 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Topics: millennial conditions; religion and civilization; dispensations; consecration Author: Philip.
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "On the Millennium.--No. 1."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 12)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jul. 6, 1826
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: This optimistic article describes the progressive move of history through three ages: physical, secular, and evangelical or millennial. The final stage, into which the author believes civilization is moving, is marked by political and economic peace and happiness. The orders of the current world are transforming to bring in God's orders. While no specific political and economic institutions are mentioned, author suggests that new ones will be established. Compare with Joseph's innovations in political and economic matters. Author reads history through the prophecy of scripture, and finds evidence for a type of dispensationalism or periodization of divine history into three ages. In describing the millennial conditions, there is no mention of destruction or wickedness, nor of the Second Coming of Jesus Christ, only his institutions.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "Mankind are certainly moving in the horizon of some great and eventful change, into the center of which all society must inevitably and speedily be carried. The world is in strange commotion; expectation is all aroused - anticipation of something good, splendid, and unknown, is become undoubting and impatient, even to painfulness; and the time is at hand when a plenteous harvest of toil and talent must be reaped from all orders of society, that many run to and fro, and knowledge be increased. The time is certainly arrived, when the great political establishments, the powers and principalities of the world, which have created and fostered those warlike feelings, and mercantile and rival interests, so hostile to the spirit of the gospel, and which have led men so far away from nature, must speedily be dissolved; and when the economy of God, which shall be more in union with the religion of his Son and with nature, shall suddenly make its appearance.
The object of this paper is to show that God has designs of high favor towards man, and will vouchsafe him an age of happiness, in which the entire sum of physical, moral and intellectual good, which can be enjoyed on earth, will be granted. . . .
All men exist under a threefold order of relations; first to the natural world; secondly, to one another; and thirdly, to God; and the history of the world demonstrates, that, to mankind in the aggregate, as to each individual, the knowledge of these relations is slow and progressive. . .the antediluvian period, characterized by the absence of all governmental arrangements, may, with propriety, be called the physical age of the species.
Secondly, the middle period of the world's history is pre-eminently distinguished for a high regard to that more remote order of relations, which subsists in great and populous empires, as the Babylonian, Persian, Grecian and Roman. . . . This may be styled the secular age of our species. . . .

Thirdly, Mankind having nearly exhausted the limits allotted to them for pursuits purely physical and political, and having, by dint of long experience, learnt the inefficiency of commerce and war to secure happiness, are now deeply inspired with a premonition of some great and incomprehensible change, the present nature of which time alone can fully clear up. This is the millennial or evangelical age of the world, during which the human race will enjoy great happiness, and that their order of relations which have been revealed as subsisting between men and their Creator and Redeemer, shall be fully investigated, developed, and enjoyed. . . . this division of the world into physical, secular, and evangelical ages, is neither arbitrary nor fanciful, but is founded in matter of fact, and abundantly supported by divine declaration. . . .

. . . . let the reader bear in mind that history, and especially the holy scriptures, show us that the march of man towards virtue and happiness has been slow and progressive; they show us also that God is exceedingly opposed to, and displeased with, aristocratic and oppressive governments. . . . in the approaching age, political authority will be confined to the regulation of its proper concerns" (80-81 or 250-251).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Topics: mode of baptism

Author:

Title of Book: "Anecdote."

Title of Article: "Anecdote."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 4)

Place of Publication: Buffalo, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Nov. 7, 1825

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Entertaining anecdote that reveals the debates among sects about the necessary mode of baptism. Note reference to "a new sort of christians, called 'Smithites'."

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "During a late revival at Camillus, New-York, a man who had been sprinkled in his infancy wished to be baptized and join the Presbyterian church. The Presbyterian divines would not baptize him, because he had been sprinkled. The Baptists would not immerse him, because he wanted to join the Presbyterians. At length a new sort of christians, called "Smithites," immersed him. He then joined the Presbyterians. The church was satisfied with his sprinkling, and he with his immersion" (28 or 198).
Whatever the disciples practised in their meetings with the approbation of the apostles, is equivalent to an apostolic command to us to do the same. . . . Apostolic example is justly esteemed of equal authority with an apostolic precept. Hence, say the Baptists, shew us where Paul or any apostle sprinkled an infant, and we will not ask you for a command to go and do likewise. . . . What order of worship and of edification did the apostle give to the first congregation they organized? This must be learned from the narrative of the historian who records what they did. . . . Then they who had gladly received his word were baptized. . . and they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, and in the fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and in prayers.' Other things are recorded. . . such as their having a community of goods, and for this purpose selling their possessions of houses and lands. But these are as peculiar to them and as distinct from the instituted order of worship. . . . How are we to distinguish between those things which are as peculiar to them as their vicinity to the Temple, and those things which were common to them with other christian congregations? This must be determined by a comparison of the practice of other congregations. . . . From these we see that no other christian congregation held a community of goods; no other sold their possessions as a necessary part of christian religion; no others met constantly in the Temple. . . . Their being baptized when they gladly received the word, was not a circumstance, neither was their continuing steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine, in fellowship, in breaking of bread, and in prayers. This the order of all the congregations gathered and organized by the apostles, shows" (10-11 or 180-181).
Topics: new scripture
Author: A. Straith
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "To Bengelius."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 7)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Feb. 1, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Author comments on the need for a plain translation of the Bible, yet contends that one should not add to or alter God's word. One wonders how the author conceives of this translation of the Bible that does not alter the existing Bible.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "I have asserted that in my judgment it is an act of gross impiety, of great disrespect to God, to presume to alter in any manner, or by any means, the order, connection, or diction of his instructive message; that the act sets our wisdom above the wisdom of God, and tells that omniscient and all-wise Being, to his face, that his message has not been as well contrived and clearly worded as it might have been, or as we can still render it; in short that we can ameliorate God's best effort to serve us. I have asserted that all that is necessary to render God's message as plain and instructive as he ever intended it to be, or our salvation required it to be, is a correct and perfectly intelligible translation, that is, a translation devoid of all unintelligible words" (623).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: new scripture; corruption of biblical text
Author: A. Straith
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "For the Christian Baptist."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 3)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 5, 1829
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Author describes in vivid language the corruption of the Biblical text by his co-religionists. Dissection and reformulation of the text are some of the particular crimes committed by religious figures in attempts to create creeds. Author believes that the purity of the biblical text should not be corrupted by human additions, deletions, or transformations of meaning. Compare with Joseph's differing conception of the corruption of the Biblical text when it was passed from the Jews to the Gentiles (1 Nephi 13:20-29).

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "to use plain language, the outrage committed on the order, connexion [sic], beauty and power of the divine message, by profane sinners who have broken it into chapters, frittered it into verses, ground it into catechisms, and after falsifying, picking, and completely disjointing it, have sent it forth in the true skeleton guise of confessions and creeds, calls aloud for the severest reprobation of every real friend of Jesus Christ. Shall it be asked, Is not God's intelligence a most hallowed object? Has it not come from the sovereign Lord of all? What mortal, then, will dare to alter, or derange or displace even a jot or tittle found therein? . . . . Surely we ought to remember that all God's ways are perfect, and that to his work nothing can be added, or change performed on it, without manifest impairment of its fitness to answer its purpose. And we ought, also to remember that God is a great economist, a very summary agent, who accomplished in an instant by a single exertion of his will, simultaneously, many objects; and that nowhere is this truth more illustriously displayed, than in the operations of sacred writ on the human mind" (588).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: new scripture; corruption of Biblical text

Author: A. Straith, M. D.

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The Scriptures. - No. 1."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 2)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Sep. 7, 1829

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Author comments on the all-sufficiency of the Bible in knowing God's word and denounces human efforts to substitute their learning with God's wisdom and knowledge. Humans offend God by turning to other sources besides the Bible.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "God has declared expressly, that the writings which he has himself furnished us, and just as he has furnished them, unaltered by the tongue or pen of man, unmixed, undiluted with a single human conception, do contain all the information which our salvation needs. . . . Sacred writ contains all the correct and certain information on the subject of religion, which the world ever enjoyed or will obtain. . . . if we would certainly secure to our minds the ideas which the Spirit of God has communicated to us in sacred writ, we must resort to the very words which he has employed in sacred writ to convey them. For there, and then, alone can we infallibly find them. . . . God's information, as conveyed in his own words, unaltered by man, is alone safe, alone certain, alone entirely exempt from error. . . . When we prefer human to divine means of information, of which vile preference we are incontestably guilty, when we lay down our bibles and take up the written compositions or listen to the religious harangues of men, we grossly insult our Divine Teacher - we tell him flatly, that he is not as capable to teach, inform and instruct us as our uninspired fellow-creatures, and therefore we abandon his offered means of instruction and resort to theirs. . . . when we resort to human means of instruction, we in effect make the Spirit of God a liar. . . . we in reality deny its sufficiency. God has not only not commanded us to resort to any other means of acquiring religious information, than that which he has provided for us in his word; but he has preemptorily forbidden us to resort to any other teacher than himself, which is manifestly equivalent to forbidding us to seek religious instruction from any other source than the bible" (581-582).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: new scripture; millennial conditions; sectarian strife; Primitive Church
Author: "A Lover of Divine Truth."
Title of Book:
Title of Article: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 2)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Sep. 7, 1829
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds,
and beliefs.
Comment: Author links restoration to the Bible and the Primitive Church with the ushering in of the millennium.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "This advice [all-sufficiency of the Bible] followed up by all sects, would soon restore the purity and simplicity of the gospel of Messiah, bring about the millennian [sic] state of the church, and banish from the earth party spirit in the holy religion of Jesus Christ" (584).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: In a response to a critical article, Campbell responds, agreeing with the author's presupposition that the seeds of knowledge have already been revealed in the Bible and thus no other revelation will be had, nor will there be any new apostle or prophet. Campbell reveals his rational method of interpreting the Bible, using the same method as with any other book.

Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "He has too much good sense to expect any new revelation from heaven - any new apostle or prophet. He expects this knowledge will be acquired from what is already written. We think so, and have a hundred times declared that there is a general - an almost universal ignorance of what is written in the oracles of God. . . . Does not every sect suppose that from all others the true meaning of the Scriptures is hid! The secret cause of this ignorance is the general presumption that the Bible is not to be submitted to all the natural and common rules of interpretation to which all other books in the world are to be subjected" (118).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):
periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: In this letter to the editor, the author outlines the history of God's religious instruction and instructors. While during the Old Testament period God authorized prophets to speak his word, after the New Testament writings were compiled by inspired men under the influence of spiritual gifts, there was no longer any need for prophets as religious instructors, because God's word in the New Testament is sufficient and available to all.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "God's instrument of instruction is the only one that can be relied on as perfectly fit for its purpose. In it we are sure that there is no deficiency to be found. . . . God's instrument of instruction is alone safe. When we resort to any human composition, written or spoken, for religious information, we are in constant and imminent danger of imbibing more or less of that soul-destroying error from which no human production is exempt. . . . God's instrument of instruction is alone authorized. . . . During the patriarchal ages we hear of no uninspired teachers, nor means of religious instruction, but the inspired declaration of an unerring and omniscient God. During the Mosaic Institution, before its gross corruption after the Captivity, God employed none but his own inspired teachers, nor means of religious information but his own inspired word. The Prophets who addressed the people in the name of Jehovah, delivered his messages in the very words in which they were communicated to them by the Inspiring Spirit; and the Priests and Levites, who were constituted the national instructors in conformity to God's express command, read for their instruction the written law in the hearing of all Israel. . . . we find the same mode of instruction still in use among the Jews, and among Christians even in the time of Christ and his Apostles, although after the Captivity uninspired men had arrogated to themselves the honor, functions, and authority of God's inspired instructors, and employed their own crude, pernicious, and unauthorized institutions and notions for the edification of the people. . . . Nor under his new institution did God intrust the religious instruction of his perishing creatures to any but men rendered infallible by the gifts of his Spirit, till he had caused and inspired system of religious information to be committed to writing, and so rendered permanent, uniform, and transmissible to all parts of the world and to all generations of men - a device by which, as we shall soon see, the continuance of immediately inspired instructors became unnecessary. As, then, we have no precedent to authorize us to employ any other instrument of religious instruction than that which God has himself directly furnished us - so we have no command" (276-277).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: new scripture; sectarian strife; basis of authority; great and abominable church
Author: Christian Union
Title of Book: "Christian Union. - No. III."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 3)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 3, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Discusses the history of the formation of the Apostle's Creed, the Nicene Creed, the Episcopal and Methodist Episcopal churches, the Westminster Confession/Presbyterianism, and the Baptist Confession of Faith to show that all are based on human rather than divine authority. Joseph similarly rejected these creeds as being the product of human disputation.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "I promised in my last number, to give a short account of the origin of creeds as distinguished from the word of God in the gospel. . . . Had the poor worms of the dust, Alexander and Arius and Athanasius, been let alone to enjoy their speculations, with a moderate attention to the word of God, their differences of opinion would either have done no harm, would have been healed, or would have died with them. . . . It is impossible for those who entertain a reverential regard for the great God not to be struck with the presumption of sinful, ignorant, erring mortals, who would dare to investigate a subject of such awful import as the modus of the divine existence, or who would presume to go further in the discovery of God than he has revealed himself. . . . Such is the pure spiritual origin, if I may speak ironically, of the Episcopal church of England and of these United States. Are there not many of the marks of the Beast upon it? In the church of Christ he is the sole head, founder and lawgiver; all authority and jurisdiction are in him and flow from him. . . . I aver that all these powers [Methodist, Roman Catholic, Episcopal Church of England, Westminster Assembly/Presbyterian Confession of Faith, seven Baptist churches of London, Philadelphia Confession of Faith] have been exercised without right, and in opposition to his authority; and any man who submits to them as authoritative in religion, worships the image of the Beast and bears his name" (19-22 or 189-192).
Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: office of bishop
Author:
Title of Book: "Queries."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 2)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Comment: In response to the question whether unmarried or young persons can be made bishops, Campbell reaffirms the counsel of Paul in 1 Timothy 3:1-7 that a bishop should be married, of some age, a member of some time, and capable in his domestic management.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "A stripling married or unmarried, is not eligible. A person of middle age if recently converted, is not eligible. And a man who has had no experience in domestic management is ill-qualified to manage the family of God. . . . if the apostle's qualifications were all literally observed in selecting such persons only as possess these qualifications to the discharge of the duties of this office, it would be much better with the Christian communities" (581).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: one true church; sectarian strife; restoration; religion and civilization

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "To an Independent Baptist."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 10)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: May 1, 1826

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: In a reply to a letter to the editor accusing Campbell of stating he is in full communion with the Baptists while espousing beliefs contrary to the Baptist confession of faith, Campbell defines his view of the nature of unity and full communion. Campbell believes it is impossible for any individual to be in full communion with any sect or group, in the sense of perfect accordance with New Testament principles and ideals, yet one can be united in specific acts of worship. Perfect unity can never be found among the various sects but only in heaven. Furthermore, Campbell decries groups who claim perfection or elect status. All efforts at reform are shortly in need of reformation themselves. Campbell cites Egypt, Rome, and Edinburgh as three examples of supposed heights of religious civilization that have fallen due to disputes over words and doctrines. Compare with Joseph's ideas on reformation/restoration, the basis of unity among believers, and the idea of one true church.

Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "Your full communion and my full communion are very different thing. You define your full communion to be 'full union in the common worship, doctrine, and institutions of any church or denomination.' Again you say, 'Your profession implies, according to your own principles, a sincere conviction that the whole Baptist society (regular associated Baptists- is the church of Christ, of which Jesus is the head, and that they are conformed to the new testament law, as respects doctrine, worship, and order, exhibiting the model of Christ's house,' &c. I question very much whether you yourself have this sort of full communion with the one congregation with which you associate. But this will not excuse me. Again, I question very much whether Paul the apostle could have broken bread with the congregation in Rome, in Corinth, in Thessalonica, or with the congregations in Galatia, and others, at the time he wrote his letters to them. Nay, I do not think that the Saviour himself could have instituted the supper amongst the twelve, or that they could have had full communion on your principles in that one institution the night in which he was betrayed. For none of these congregations at the times alluded to were exhibiting the model of Christ's house, 'were conformed to the new testament, as respects doctrine, worship, and order,' or had this sincere conviction that all was perfect --just up to the standard of full perfection in all these particulars. In the full import of the words full communion, when carried to their utmost extent, I do not know that such a communion ever was, or ever will be exhibited upon earth. The word full, I admit, may be so explained as to confine this sort of communion to the heavenly state. But in ordinary acceptation, or in its loose acceptation, it means no more than joint participation in a certain act or acts. . . . this plan of making our own nest, and fluttering over our own brood; of building our own tent, and of confining all goodness and grace to our noble selves and the 'elect few' who are like us, is the quintessence of sublimated pharisaism. The old Pharisees were but babes in comparison to the modern; and the longer I live, and the more I reflect upon God and man - heaven and earth - the bible and the world - the Redeemer and his church - the more I am assured that all sectarianism is the offspring of hell; and that all differences about words, and names, and opinions, hatched in Egypt, or Rome, or Edinburgh, are like the frolics of drunken men; and that where there is a new creature, or a society of them, with all their imperfections, and frailties, and errors in sentiment, in views, and opinions, they ought to receive one another, and the strong to support the infirmities of the weak, and not to please themselves. To lock ourselves up in the bandbox of our own little circle; to associate with a few units, tens, or hundreds, as the pure church, as the elect, is real Protestant monkery, it is evangelical pharisaism. . . . the history of the world does not afford one instance of any man, or set of men, reforming, or restoring, or enlightening, or comforting the society from which they separated. And the systems and sects which they built, in the lapse of a few years, were as much in need of reformation, as those from which their founders separated" (67-69 or 237-239).

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: opposition in all things; intelligences
As under the reign of the tree of life nothing hateful or pernicious was produced in the garden, yet the easy access to the forbidden tree denoted the nice balance in which its destiny was suspended; so in Adam, though capable of disobedience, no evil principles or passions had any place under the dominion of innocence. Adam, also, had been created in the image of God. He possessed a pure intellectual principle which enabled him to become acquainted with God. To his spirit was given the government of his passions and capacities. There were no pernicious principles to be eradicated - there were no new powers to be implanted. It was his occupation to preserve his original purity, and to exhibit the excellencies of his nature for his own enjoyment, and the glory of his Creator" (324-325).
and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: In this letter to the editor, the author uses biblical phrases that echo millennial language to describe the coming forth of the church of Christ out of Babylon. Author exhorts Christians to no longer practice simony but to give financial contributions in church for the needy, after having been baptized.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "Let the church of Jesus come up out of Babylon; let her shake herself from the dust; let her wash herself and put on her beautiful garment; let her cast out of her bosom all the money-lovers, boasters, proud, high-minded, and their households; then will she shine forth like the Sun! fair as the Moon! and terrible as an army with banners! Then will she not need the money of the wicked to pay her ministers; and, if offered, will refuse it. Like Peter to Simon the sorcerer, her ministers will say to all the ungodly, 'Your money go with you to destruction. If you think the free gift of God may be purchased with money, you have no part or lot in this matter. Reform, therefore, from this wickedness. . . . preach, 'I want none of your money for religious purposes until you have given your hearts to the Lord - until you have put on Christ by being immersed into his name; and then I want it only as a contribution to the Lord, and not to man. Let it be put into the hands of the stewards of the congregation, as the Lord has prospered you, as an act of worship on the first day of the week; and then let distribution be made to those who need it" (200-201).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: priestcraft; plural marriage

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Glossary of the Leading Phrases in the Foregoing Extract."

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 2)

Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA

Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)

Date of Publication: Feb. 1, 1830

Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: Campbell here responds satirically to an extract by a Dr. Underhill who advocates the study of anatomy as a cure for religious enthusiasm. Campbell mocks Underhill's skepticism about religion, and excerpted here is a line that discusses priestcraft and polygamy (although Underhill does not mention these words or anything similar to them).

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "Call marriage, priestcraft; chastity, superstition; and poligamy, heaven" (74).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: Primitive Church; new scripture; one true church; restoration; sectarian strife; basis of authority

Author: James Madison

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Extract of a Sermon delivered by James Madison, D. D. President of the University of William and Mary, and Professor of Moral and Natural Philosophy, before the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the state of Virginia, May 26th, 1786."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 2)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Sep. 7, 1829

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Here Campbell printed a long extract from a sermon given by James Madison which he heartily endorses. Madison argues against the creation of creeds because they are not based on scripture, which is the only standard of the gospel of Christ. The Reformation was an attempt to return to the scriptures as the only basis of authority, thus all Protestant churches should return to that Protestant maxim. Madison relies on human rationality and reasonableness in interpreting the scriptures, but concedes that due to differing levels of human intelligence various opinions will be generated. He insists that the fundamental basics of the scriptures and gospel of Christ should be the Christian essentials of faith, while interpretative efforts should be permitted, but not made standards of orthodoxy. Madison believes that truth can not be found in any existing church but only in the scriptures. Compare with JSH 1:10-11 and D&C 1:30.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "The object of this sermon is to urge the necessity of christian union, and the injurious tendency of creeds, &c. In originating and promoting dissentions and feuds among christians. . . . the means most likely to forward such a event. . . . depend upon the rejection, not the adoption of those human systems of belief, or rules of faith, which have often usurped the place of christianity itself. They only require christians to revert to the gospel, and to abandon every other directory of conscience. . . . those christian societies will ever be found to have formed their union upon principles the wisest and the best, which impose the fewest restraints upon the minds of their members, making the scriptures alone, and not human articles or confessions of belief, the sole rule of faith and conduct. . . . It is a maxim self-evident to every one, and which was held sacred by the fathers of Protestantism, 'that the scriptures contain all things necessary to salvation, and are the sole ground of the faith of a christian.' This maxim, the basis of reformation, and which is acceded to by all Protestants, is alone sufficient, independent of what experience has taught, to induce every Protestant church to reject all systems of belief, unless conceived in the terms of scripture, not only as unwarrantable, and in the highest degree oppressive to the rights of private judgment, but as presumptuous, and as casting an unworthy reflection on the scriptures themselves. . . . We are directed there to search and to judge for ourselves; for religion to be profitable to the individual and acceptable to God, must be the result of free inquiry and the determination of reason. . . . that diversity of opinion, which most churches have been so sedulous to prevent, is neither any disgrace to a christian society, nor incompatible with its peace and good government. . . . such diversity may be considered as most favorable to the progress of christian knowledge, and should also be equally favorable to christian peace, by teaching us, that dark and disputable points instead of being made articles of faith, and standards of orthodoxy, should rather be considered as trials of our christian temper, and occasions to exercise mutual charity; or that those things alone should be held as essentials, which our Lord and Master has fully and clearly expressed, and which, therefore, cannot require the supposed improvements and additions of men. . . . christian unity, so strongly recommended to us as the bond of perfection, does not consist in uniformity of opinion upon abstruse, metaphysical subjects, but upon the great fundamentals of our religion, and in the unanimity of affections, love, peace and charity. . . . Truth, like the Eternal, is one. In which church shall we find it? I will presume to say in none of them. He who would search for the truth must search for it in the scriptures alone. Let us then abandon all those systems, which to say the least can only involve us in error. Our venerable forefathers erred, or why a reformation? Their descendants will err. Nor shall the resurrection of true christianity be seen amongst men, until it shall appear in the white garment of the gospel alone " (578-580).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: In this summary of the elements of the gospel of Christ and the order of Christ's church, the author touches on many important issues listed as topics. The corruption of Christianity, both Catholic and Protestant, along with the resulting sectarian strife are prominent themes. Author argues for sole reliance on the scriptures. Of interest is the formulation of the gospel into various steps that parallel the 4th Article of Faith. Note the critique of the Free Masons. Compare author's formulation of the established order of the church based on the New Testament with Joseph's conception of church order and authority. Author continually incorporates New Testament phrases into his writing.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "Unwilling to put a piece of new cloth upon an old garment, or new wine into old bottles, we do not seek to reform sectarianism, but restore christianity. Turning away from Babylon, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, we also pass by 'her popes, monks, and friars, with all their trumpery,' the piles of hay, straw, and stubble, that have been so industriously built up by the various sects which have sprung from her, of whom the Church of England is the eldest born, and to whose polluted fountain she is indebted for the purity of her hierarchy, and come at once to the true foundation, the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone. Considering the scriptures as the only rule of faith and practice, and believing that they mean what they say, just as we do; taking literal expressions literally, and figurative ones figuratively, we reject every human system; treating with contempt the verbose attempts at explanation, and the unlawful inferences of those theologians, 'who darken counsel by words without knowledge.' . . . We . . . do not erect any standard but the Bible, nor do we receive those who merely assent to its truth, but those only who are willing to do what it commands. . . . The Apostles arrange the gospel thus: - 1st. Faith. 2nd. Repentance. 3rd. Immersion. 4th. Remission of Sins. 5th. The Holy Spirit. And 6th. Eternal Life. But sectarians have broken up the regular arrangement; and some put the Holy Spirit first; others Immersion; many change this into sprinkling, and others throw it away altogether. And in this very way you will find most of the sects have started up, and hewn out to themselves 'broken cisterns that can hold no water.' . . . It is of lively stones we think the church of God should be composed, and not of dull and lifeless ones, which cannot be animated by sprinkling, consecration, or confirmation, any more than they can be sanctified by the crafty hands of a Master in Free Masonry. Nor do we believe they are to be called the laity. . . God does not call his people the laity but saints, children of God, kings and priests, a holy nation, redeemed and precious. The proper order of God's house we believe to be plainly showed in the New Testament. . . . We meet every first day of the week to break bread, as was the practice of the first churches for three hundred years. Not being gagged by human law, we know that we are permitted and commanded to speak one by one in the congregation, to exhort, comfort, and edify one another. We meet without pastors. . . and whenever persons are found among us having the specified qualifications, we appoint them to the offices of bishops and deacons. We know that the churches in the time of the apostles were independent of each other. So are they now. Each had its own bishop, who had not authority in any other than his own congregation.
So it is with us; and in all things we endeavor to follow the pattern showed us in the New Testament, having the apostles restored to us as universal bishops; for though dead, they yet speak" (607-608).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Primitive Church; the poor; consecration; church discipline; order; sacrament of the Lord's Supper; City of Zion

Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "An Account of a Remarkable Occurrence in a Late Journey. --An Apostolic Church."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 11)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jun. 5, 1826

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: The article is a reprint from the first volume of the Christian Magazine, printed in Edinburgh in 1919, and describes a traveler's encounter with an individual church organized according to the Primitive Church as described in the New Testament. This particular meeting included the disfellowship of a man for committing adultery. The traveler is struck by the great compassion and love each member of the congregation exhibits for one another, along with the exact patterning after the New Testament church. He marvels that he has never seen the exercise of church discipline before which, exercised properly, is a manifestation of Christian love. He emphasizes the order and mutual care and concern of each member for each other. He uses the phrase, "weeping with those that weep," which is strikingly similar to the baptismal covenant as described in the Book of Mormon (Mosiah 18:8-9). This idyllic christian church resembles the characteristics of the city of Zion.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "I was particularly struck by the affectionate manner in which he prayed for these distressed brethren. It reminded me of the apostle's description of the body of Christ, 'Whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it.' After again uniting in praise, the other elder addressed the church . . . 'I have now,' said he, 'brethren, to lay before you a matter peculiarly painful, it is the case of our brother --. His crime is described in the fifth chapter of the Galatians, the 19th verse. The fall of our brother, I lament to say, is well known to the world, and has caused the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme. By the offence of this person the church is called to deep humiliation before God. In this mournful case, we have a striking instance of the fatal effects of unnecessarily mingling with the world . . . With the law of our Lord and Master in our hands, we can be at no loss as to our duty in this case. . . . there is no alternative; the Lord Jesus commands us, both for this person's good, and that of the body, to separate him from our fellowship.' . . . He then prayed, in a very appropriate and impressive manner, for the unhappy subject of discipline, that the ordinance of God which had now been attended to, might be blessed to his soul, in bringing him to repentance -- and to the church, in leading them to watchfulness, self abasement, and continual dependance on the grace of Jesus. . . I never witnessed a scene more deeply affecting. The countenance of every person present bespoke his feelings. How is it, said I to myself, that have lived so long among christians, and have never, till now, seen this plain and positive law of Jesus carried into effect. . . . The church now proceeded to - what I afterwards understood was a stated part of their service every Lord's day - the observance of the Lord's supper. The simplicity with which this divine ordinance was attended to, was, in itself, edifying. . . . The two hours which I thus spent with these dear people, were among the happiest and most profitable I ever enjoyed on earth. I bless God, that unexpectedly I had an opportunity of witnessing the order of a church, which commended itself to my mind, as combining all the ends of christian association, and of which I had previously formed some idea from reading the New Testament. . . . 'The brethren,' said I, 'appear to have much love to each other.' 'Yes,' he replied, 'we know the benefits of christian fellowship, by coming together into one place on the first day of the week, and regularly observing the ordinances of Christ, we not only get better acquainted, but our interest in each other is greatly promoted. If a brother or a sister be absent they are immediately missed, and inquiry is made for them. Our elders know well the situation of every individual; and in case of distress, the church is particularly informed. Thus our sick, or otherwise distressed brethren, are not neglected. Christian sympathy is excited, and we are stirred up to the duty of weeping with those that weep,' " (74-75 or 244-245).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
have been hundreds of prophets who have never foretold any thing except that all men will die. The interpreters of oracles were called prophets as well as the poets by the Greeks and Romans. Extemporaneous speakers on all subjects, especially upon religious matters, were called prophets. He that interpreted, as well as he that predicted, was, in the scripture sense, called a prophet. You, my young friends, perhaps, had better assume the name of prophets, than that of elders, bishops, or ministers. You are sometimes heralds, or criers, or preachers, and all these three are comprehended in the term prophet.
You sometimes interpret, and an interpreter is a prophet. I therefore move that all young preachers who have no certain dwelling place; no special charge; who are not overseers, nor strictly called evangelists, be denominated prophets. When you proclaim the gospel, interpret ancient oracles, and speak extemporaneously, you are truly prophets" (584).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: religion and government
Author: Editor
Title of Book: "The Fourth of July."
Title of Article: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 7)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Jul. 5, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander
Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.
Comment: Campbell comments on the greater importance of being free citizens of the kingdom of heaven than of any earthly government or realm.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "While the children of this world, with voluptuous joys and noisy mirth, are regarding the day because of the political privileges which they inherit, we know of no good reason why christians may not, if they please, consecrate the day to the Lord as a free-will offering, and convert the occasion into one of joy and rejoicing in the Rock of their Salvation, giving glory to the Governor of the Nations of the Earth, that they are made free citizens, not only of a free government on earth, but of the kingdom of heaven" (299-300).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Topics: religion and government
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "An Oration in Honor of the Fourth of July."
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 7)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Jul. 5, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.
Comment: In honor of the fourth of July, Campbell outlines the history of government in relation to religion. He believes ultimately that Christ's government will reign on earth and be unlike any previous form of political government because it will be governed by love. Compare with Joseph's conceptions of the relation of government to religion.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "Then opens a new era. A Celestial King is born, and born to reign over the human race for ever. The principles of his government, in their grand essentials, are new principles. This new institution, new once, and still new in contrast with the past and with the reigning earthly systems, is called significantly, the Reign of Heaven. The King is heaven-born and divine. Heavenly and divine are the principles of his government; and though his subjects live a while on earth, his government is designed to give them a taste of, and a taste for, heavenly things. His government began in conquest, by conquest still increases, and will by increasing conquests ultimately subdue all things to himself. . . . The cardinal principle in his government is love. He subdues not by any other sword than that of the Spirit. . . . But not to lose sight of the great outline of things begun, let us pause and survey the chapters which we have scanned. In the first we saw society without civil government; in the second, society with civil government without religious associations; in the third, society under a politico-religious government; and in the fourth chapter, a scheme begun which contemplates the government of men by religion without politics, by the efficacy of one principle alone. This is the chapter of chapters now in progress, and full of the greatest and most astonishing incidents. . . . The present government aims at being purely political, and therefore can secure only man's political rights and promote his political happiness. This is all that worldly men wish; and it is all that a sectarian profession of religion can reasonably or justly require. . . . But we are still far from considering that a political government can ever fill up the measure of human, of social, of rational enjoyment. And all confess that were men truly religious political government would be unnecessary. . . . Christianity, rightly understood, cordially embraced, and fully carried out in practice, will as certainly subvert all political government, the very best as well as the very worst. . . . The admirers of American liberty and American institutions have no cause to regret such an event, nor cause to fear it. It will be but the removing of a tent to build a temple. . . . Not by might, nor by sword, but by the Spirit of the Lord will the political institutions of our government be laid aside" (303-308).

Length of Relevant Material: 9 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: religion and government; missionary work

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Extract of a Letter to the Editor, dated Bluffdale, Green Co. Illinois, Dec. 5, 1829."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 7)

Place of Publication: Buffalo, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Feb. 1, 1830

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Author criticizes New England for their condescending attitude toward those living in Illinois. He touches on issues of politics and missionary work. Opposed to the mixing of politics and religion, author criticizes New England as being worse than they are, and for attempting to mix the two even more in the western reserve. Author suggests that New Englanders think of them as heathens in need of missionaries to convert them to the true ways of Christianity.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "How deeply every sincere christian must regret to hear the boast that 'christian party in politics shall be established.' Even in this state religion is too often made an electioneering hobby. We have not yet arrived at the 'Free grace candidates,' and 'Unconditional election candidates,' of good old orthodox New England; but we are making some advances towards it. A powerful effort is making at the eastward, to direct and control religion in this state. Ten thousand dollars are raising to establish a college here, and for the support of its faculty. You have seen the speech of Rev. Mr. Ellison, to his employers, in which he so feelingly makes known our profound ignorance, and the deplorable state of our morals. He represents us as but little above the zero of absolute heathenism; as electing to the office of lieutenant governor, a clergyman who solicited our suffrages with 'a Bible in one hand, and a bucket of whiskey in the other.' . . . Several missionaries have recently been sent here, and more are promised. How kind, how generous, and how benevolent in the eastern people to make us the magnificent present of ten thousand dollars! How great must be the love to us that could have induced them to pass by the tens of thousands in their own section, who are suffering poverty" (624).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):
To the Editor of the Christian Baptist.

In brief, then, and in simplicity, let us testify against sectarianism itself, without condescending to notice in particular any of the isms that compose it. The very moment we depart from this rule, we become a sect. I might also add, the very moment we preach or teach our own opinions, as matters of Christian faith or duty, that moment we become sectarians; for this is the very essence the sine qua non of sectarianism, without which there could be no sect. The writer of this most seriously declares, for his own part, that were not the all-sufficiency of the holy scriptures, without comment or paraphrase, clearly demonstrable; so that the inculcation of their express and explicit declarations were alone sufficient to make the Christian wise to salvation, thoroughly furnished to all good works; he would have either continued with his quondam brethren, of the Westminster school, or joined with some of the modern creed-reforming parties: for, by no means would he have committed himself to the capricious and whimsical extemporaneous effusions of every one, who might have confidence enough to open his mouth in public. If we are to be entertained and edified with human opinions of divine truth, let us, by all means, have the opinions of the learned, of the deep thinking, and judicious; among these also let us have our choice. All have certainly a right to choose where there is a variety, and that we may always expect to find in the religious world, while the fashionable opinion is indulged, that every man has a right to entertain the public with his own opinions upon religious subjects. I don't mean a civil, but a religious right; for civil society, as such, can take no cognizance of religious matters. . . . the desired reformation in the hands of many, who, while they profess to advocate the all-sufficiency and alone-sufficiency of the holy scriptures, to the rejection of every thing of human invention or authority, are but making a new start, to run the old race over again, by preaching every man his own opinions, reviving the old controversies, or producing new ones; thus sowing the seeds of new parties, and hardening the old, they prevent the success of those that are honestly and consistently contending for the truth, and zealously laboring to promote it. Let such remember, that, in thus really building again, the things they have professedly destroyed, they make themselves transgressors; and, like the people in the days of Nehemiah, who would be thought to be builders in the Lord's house, they are enemies in disguise, and will be considered as such by the true builders" (613).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: restoration

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Bigotry and Partiality."

Title of Periodical: _The Christian Baptist_ (Vol. 3, No. 7)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Feb. 6, 1826

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Discusses the constancy of reformation because any act of reformation immediately is in need of reform. Quotes extensively from an article published by a reforming Methodist committee. Compare with Joseph's idea of a final complete restoration, and of continuing change through revelation.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "All sects, new and old, seem like a reed shaken by the wind. Even the authority and infallibility of his Roman Holiness has been questioned by his own children in the New World. . . . The veteran chiefs, and the sanctified magi of the cause of uniformity, fear a volcanic eruption, alike ominous to themselves and their systems. . . . And not less strange, the Reformation of John Wesley is already in need of reform. . . . A host of reformers are about to reform this reformed system. We have seen their efforts, and rejoice. Though we are assured that when they shall have completed their projected reformation, they will then need a reform more thorough than yet they have attempted" (43 or 213).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: restoration; order
The doctrinal views most prevalent in the churches of our persuasion, in the United States, may be summarily expressed in the annexed sentences. The sufficiency of the Scriptures in their present version, for knowledge and practice, is strenuously asserted. . . . [other statements about human depravity, election, Christ's sufferings and death, Holy Spirit of promise, immersion, individual church jurisdiction and independence, missionary work, holy life and character, and prayer]. . . . This is a concise view of that 'order of things' to which we are attached, not merely because it is old, but because it is true. The 'inefficiency' of which we complain, does not originate in any defect of our system, but in its defective use and application. That which is true in Mr. Campbell's system, is not new; and that which is new, is not true. 'The order of things' under which people live, may be good, whilst their practice is bad; and, unless we have had erroneous information, Mr. Campbell himself is an instance in point to prove that a man may have a good deportment under an 'order of things' which we consider radically bad. The reformation which we should be pleased to see, and to which we endeavor to make these pages subservient, consists barely in one article; an that is, the more exact conformity of christian practice, to that 'present order of things' which has been briefly sketched above. It is not new systems that we need - it is new hearts. . . . 'The present order of things' is not to be blamed; but they are to be blamed who charge the faults of their conduct to their wrong hearts. . . . In their harsh attempts to repair the building, they frequently subvert the very foundation. In their amputations and excisions, they cut off the vital parts, and thus destroy the very life of the body. . . . And now Mr. Campbell has a version, the fabric of which was not woven by himself, but collected in fragments and stitched together. . . . Why is it that all innovators become tired of the old version and seek new ones?
Topics: restoration; order
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 12)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jul. 5, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: In this response to an article by Mr. Brantly which accuses Campbell of creating new (and therefore false) principles, Campbell attacks the "present order of things" that Brantly espouses as being true. [Most of this material is not extracted because it is just polemical exchanges about points of doctrine irrelevant to Mormonism and Joseph Smith.] Campbell agrees with Brantly that new things are false, and old things are true, but each disagree on the newness of each other's teachings. Campbell comments on the validity of new translations of the Bible: all reformers have done new translations for the purpose of more exact understandings of God's word. However, for Campbell any translation of the Bible would be sufficient to prove the doctrine and practices of the New Testament church.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "There is one great truth, and I will always pick up a truth as I would a diamond in the mud... It is this: 'That which is true in Mr. Campbell's system is not new, and that which is new is not true.' I know there is an ambiguity in this sentence. But in its common meaning it is most true. Suppose it had read. That which is true in religion is not new, and that which is new in religion is not true. I would have said a hearty Amen. The faults I have found with the popular schemes of religion is well expressed by Mr. Brantly in his antithesis. They are all new for me. I have said, as every reader of these volumes knows, that nothing in religion is worth a thought which is not as old as the New Testament. Has Mr. Brantly agreed with me at last - what is new in religion is not true!! That was my starting point in the year 1810... I am all for the old things - not Mr. Brantly's old things, some of which are not older than the fortieth year of Andrew Fuller. Old things may become new, however. Many of the positions of Luther and Calvin were called new, and were new at the era of the Reformation; but yet the were as old as the era of Christianity itself... . . . there is no important item for which I contend that I cannot prove from the worst version I ever saw. . . . the common version will sustain, ably sustain me in every point. . . . I am always prepared to defend not only the New Version [of the Bible] which I have published, but the necessity of new versions for the confirmation of the faith and the enlargement of the views of christians. There is not a commentator in christendom that has not given as much of a new version as I have done. . . . indeed all the innovators, now called reformers, either gave new versions, or aided in giving them" (660)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: revelation
Author: Christian Union
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Christian Union. - No. II."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 1, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Author is arguing against religious instruction in seminaries which ignores revelation and stresses instead man's innate knowledge of God.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "True philosophy and the Bible make revelation essential to religion. Men are born with innate capacities or susceptibility for acquiring the idea or knowledge of Deity; but revelation, supernatural revelation, is necessary for enlightening or improving that capacity, for giving the idea or knowledge of God" (2 or 172).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: revelation; new scripture
Author: Ed. C. B.
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Unity of Opinion"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 7)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Feb. 6, 1826
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: The first part of this excerpt is from an article in the National Gazette that discusses the importance of reformers and dissenters in bringing to light new knowledge.
The second part is the editorial response that qualifies the article by stating that reformers look back to the Bible rather than bringing forth new information.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "we owe almost all our knowledge, not to those who have agreed, but to those who have differed, and those who have finished by making all others think with them, have usually been those who began by daring to think for themselves: as he that leads a crowd must begin by separating himself some little distance from it. . . ." "This is all very good; but in the christian religion there are no new discoveries, no new improvements to be made. It is already revealed and long since developed in the apostolic writings. We may discover that there are many new errors and old traditions, which are alike condemned in those sacred writings. . . . Old things become new when long lost sight of, and new thing become old in one generation. But truth is eternal and unchangeable" (50 or 220)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: revelation; new scripture

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The Casting Vote, or the Creed Triumphant over the Bible."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 7)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Feb. 6, 1825

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Excerpt is quote from a circular letter by P. S. Hall, Bishop of the Baptist church in Louisville, representing the minority opinion in a church conference. Hall favored the all-sufficiency of the Bible over any creeds or added revelation. Campbell supports this position.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "In illustration of the importance of the Holy Bible, permit us to examine the position that the word of God is the only sufficient and perfect rule of our faith and practice. . . . To suppose that God would communicate to his creatures any revelation that is imperfect would shock all common sense. The denunciations against those who add to, or take from the Holy Volume, demonstrate that it needs neither increase nor diminuition. All that God intends to reveal to the children of men, is to be found in the Bible. No new revelation need be expected, nor is one requisite, since all things necessary to know, to believe, and to do, in order to salvation, are given us already" (45 or 215).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
"An Occasional Reader."

Topics: revelation; new scripture; basis of authority; seeing God

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "To 'An Occasional Reader'."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 4)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Nov. 7, 1825

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Editor (Campbell) replies to question about revelation, making a distinction between personal revelation and the revelation of God as contained in the scriptures. The latter provides the only way of knowing God, however even this view is limited. The author refers to 1 Corinthians 13:12 to suggest that we "see through a glass, darkly" yet ignores the latter part of the scripture - "but then face to face: now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known" - by stating that humans can never completely know God. Personal revelation is ultimately useless and ought best to be disregarded because humans can never understand the interaction with disembodied spirits. This passage seems to outline clearly Campbell's views on revelation and the priority he places on the New Testament (particularly Paul) as the only important revelation or manifestation of God. Campbell strongly discounts personal revelation. This passage contrasts sharply with Joseph's view of revelation.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "All that I know of God, and I believe all that can be known of him, is from the revelation he has given us. If, without a revelation from himself, men could have known his existence or his character, a written record or a verbal representation of himself was superfluous. . . . I cordially embrace and cheerfully subscribe the aphorism of Paul, which affirms that the world by its philosophy knows not God. This is not only an article of my faith, but an item of my experience. Is any child born with innate ideas of God? Do we not see that they must all be taught his being and perfections? Where is the nation which knows him without a written revelation or some remnants of tradition originally derived from the bible? . . . all that is known or knowable of God is derived either directly or indirectly from his verbal communications to men - and aided by these, the heavens declare his glory, and the earth proclaims his goodness, and every thing in the universe pays its tribute to the bible. So long, then, as I believe the bible to be from God, so long I must believe it to be a perfect revelation - not perfect in the absolute sense of the word. . . but it is perfect as adapted to man in his present circumstances. Many things are only hinted, not fully revealed; and while here we must see as through a glass darkly, but in another state we shall have revelation of his glory which will be perfectly adapted to us in those circumstances; but even then that revelation will not be absolutely perfect, for a revelation absolutely perfect would make God as well known to his creatures as he is to himself, which I would humbly say appears to me impossible.
As to those monitions and impressions of which you speak, I know some things certainly, and I conjecture others. The bible tells me that communications, monitions, and impressions have been made upon the minds of men in dreams, visions, trances, &c.
Yet the knowledge of salvation was not communicated in this way. . . . And now that the revelation is completed and given to us with awful sanctions, and the most tremendous threats against innovators, and against those who either add to it or diminish from it; it is as absurd to expect such monitions as it is to trust I dreams and visions. This far may be known with certainty. With regard to impressions and monitions now made to the human mind respecting passing events, either when the body is asleep or awake, we have heard much, experienced something, and know nothing. . . . many, if not most of these monitions, are useless, as the persons premonished cannot make any use of them; for this would destroy their character as predictions, which necessarily are unconditional. So that after all, our wisest and happiest course is to attend on the written monitions of the Spirit; for however we may amuse ourselves with speculation upon the subject, we must be ignorant of them until we know what sort of an intercourse exists between embodied and disembodied spirits, which we can never attain to in this state. All the light we have or can have is as useless as the feeble ray that finds its way through a small aperture into a cell - it neither enlightens, warms, or cheers the solitary prisoner. Let us then attend to the certain prophetic word, as to a light that shines in a dark place, until the full splendor of heavenly light bursts upon our spirits when disencumbered with these clay tenements (27-28 or 197-198).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.
Hard Copy (pages): 27-28 or 197-198
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
The design of this meeting, it is evident, was to break bread. But that this was the design of all their meetings for worship and edification, or that it was the primary object of the meetings of the disciples, is rendered very certain from Paul's first letter to the Corinthians, chapter xi. . . . there is no law, rule, reason, or authority for the present manner of observing this institute quarterly, semi-annually, or at any other time than weekly" (18-19 or 188-189).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; Primitive Church

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "A Restoration of the Ancient Order of Things, No. VI: On the Breaking of Bread. - No. I."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 1)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Aug. 1, 1825

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Polemic against sects who limit the practice of the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and treat it as a penitentiary act, rather than a joyful and solemn celebration. Compare with D&C 59:9-15.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "That the primitive disciples did, in all their meetings on the first day of the week, attend on the breaking of bread as an essential part of the worship due their Lord. . . . Much darkness and superstition are found in the minds and exhibited in the practice of the devout annual, semi-annual and quarterly observers of the breaking of bread. They generally make a Jewish passover of it. Some of them indeed, make a Mount Sinai convocation of it. With all the bitterness of sorrow, and gloominess of superstition, they convert it into a religious penance, accompanied with a morose piety and an awful affliction of soul and body, expressed in fastings, long prayers, and sad countenances on sundry days of humiliation, fasting and preparation. . . . The intelligent christian views it quite in another light. It is to him as sacred and solemn as prayer to God, and as joyful as the hope of immortality and eternal life. . . . If such be its nature and import, and such its design, say, ye saints, whether this act of christian worship would be a privilege, or a pain, in all your meetings for edification and worship. If it be an proof of the kindness of the Saviour to institute it at all, would it not be a greater proof to allow the saints in all their meetings to have this token of his love set before them, and they called to partake? . . . The religion of Jesus Christ is a religion for men; for rational, for social, for grateful beings. It has its feasts, and its joys, and its extacies too. The Lord's house is his banqueting place, and the Lord's day is his weekly festival"  (4-6 or 174-176).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: sacrament of the Lord's supper; Primitive Church; basis of authority
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "A Restoration of the Ancient Order of Things. No. IX. On the Breaking of Bread. - No. IV."
Title of Periodical:  The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 4)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Nov. 7, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Author uses historical examples of the practice of the sacrament to prove that weekly communion is based on apostolic authority. Like Joseph, Campbell believed that scriptural practices had been lost and were in need of restoration.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "We shall not, then, dwell any longer on the scriptural authority for the weekly breaking of bread; but for the sake of those who are startled at what they call innovation, we shall adduce a few historical facts and incidents. We lay no stress upon what is no better than the traditions of the church, or upon the testimony of those called the primitive fathers, in settling any part of christian worship or christian obedience. . . . There is , too, a corroborating influence in authentic history, which, while it does not authorize any things as of divine authority it confirms the conviction of our duty in things divinely established, by observing how they were observed and how they were laid aside" (25 or 195).
Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: sanctification; baptismal covenant
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Christian Experience - No. I."
Title of Periodical:  The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 6)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Jun. 7, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: In opposition to current notions of conversion prior to baptism, Campbell articulates his position that one cannot feel like a christian or have a christian experience before baptism. Only by becoming a christian through baptism, can one experience the process of regeneration or sanctification. The scriptures and reason can bring one to the point of baptism, and then through baptism, one is obedient to God and becomes a christian, experiencing all of the joys associated therewith.

Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "To feel the heat of the Sun, we must place ourselves under its rays; to enjoy the comforts of a fire in a cold winter evening, we must approach it; and just as certain it is, that, to feel like a christian we must first be a christian - we must come to Christ, and take his yoke upon us, before we can find rest and peace to our souls. . . . Neither can we conceive how a person can feel like a christian who does not act like one. Some complain of not feeling as they could wish. Our answer to them is, Act as you approve, as Scripture and reason teach you, and you will feel just as you would wish. If you would rejoice in the Lord always, always obey him. If you would dwell in the presence of God, you must walk with him. And remember that he only who dwells in love, dwells in God, and God in him. As the apostolic writings afford no example, and sound reason furnished no argument to require candidates for immersion to relate a 'christian experience' before they have obeyed the gospel, we protest against the custom. To require candidates for marriage to relate conjugal experiences before they have entered upon that relation, is not more egregious than to ask candidates for immersion to narrate a 'christian experience.' Faith must be professed, and faith must be possessed, and faith must be obeyed, before its fruits can be felt or seen. But the instant a person puts himself under the government of the Prince of Peace, he begins to feel the peace of God; and then, and not till then, does his christian experience commence" (260).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: seal and bind; eternal marriage
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Happy New Year."
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Comment: In this story Campbell quotes the story of a father Paternus to his children about their family origins. Paternus’s great-grandmother was adopted by a Christian family after her parents both died, which had an enduring effect upon the generations. The Christian influence pervaded the generations, and Paternus describes the mutual dependence of the generations upon one another, echoing the promises of eternal marriage taught by Joseph Smith. While Paternus acknowledges the many blessings reaped as a "sort of inheritance" to the originator of the Christian influence in the family (in Joseph's terms this would be the blessings of endless posterity to the couple sealed in the new and everlasting covenant of marriage), he stresses that not only the author of the good, but all its promoters, will be benefited thereby and receive rewards of God (all those born in the covenant receive the blessings of the eternal sealing of parents).

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "If it be true, as it most unquestionably is, that all human beings will be rewarded according to their works, how great will be the reward of those who, like the Christian matron, the benefactress of our family, have originated a cumulative system, which, as the current of time advances, transmits in deeper and wider channels its blessings and its bounties to men? How long must this stream flow before the actual result can be computed and decided. Perhaps a thousand years may be completed before her good works have ceased to follow her! And if you transmit these blissful influences, precepts, and examples, which have descended by a sort of inheritance to you - I say, if you hand down the cup of bliss to your offspring uncorrupted, I am sure many more will drink of it. . . . [God] can afford to reward the originator of a scheme of benevolence for all the good it produces, and each one of the continuators, as though he had no fellow-servant assisting in the cause. . . . upon the same principles of remunerating justice, the originator and coadjutor, the continuator and his abettor, will each receive a recompense according to his deeds. Thus it is that we are not like isolated beings, each one acting for himself alone, as angels do; but the condition of this department of the universe, of the human family, is, that we are all standing together in a peculiar chain or concatenation of causes and effects, of parents and children, mutually dependent on, and responsible to one another, and to our common parent, the Creator and Judge of All. It is a department of the universe sui generis, of its own sort, and can be understood correctly only when the parts are viewed in relation to the whole, and the whole in relation to the parts" (620).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: sectarian strife
Author: Editor
Title of Book: The Baptist Recorder.
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 10)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: May 1, 1826
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Excerpt is from letter written by George Waller to Campbell, protesting a previous article written by Campbell about Waller's vote in the Long Run Association in September of 1825 ("the Casting Vote, or the Creed Triumphant over the Bible" p. 215). Waller contends that Campbell misrepresented him, and that he has been subject to persecution by previous religionists and now by Campbell, citing 2 Timothy 3:5, the verse cited by Joseph in his history 1:19.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "I am a descendent of the Wallers of Virginia; once persecuted by those who, having the form of godliness, but denying the power of it: and so great is my attachment to my predecessors, and that gospel which they so warmly espoused, that I am content (if the will of God be so) to suffer persecution from a similar source. It is not true, as expressed at the head of said remarks, that in the rejection of said letter, the creed was triumphant over the Bible" (69 or 239).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: sectarian strife; millennial conditions; lay priesthood and preaching
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Millennium. - No. II."
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 4)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Apr. 5, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.
Comment: In this passage, Campbell equates the millennium with the conditions of christian unity. He allows individuals to hold their own private opinions that may differ, however, unity of opinion on the gospel "facts" is essential. He mentions the work of several Campbellite preachers, including Sidney Rigdon, who were effective in establishing unity among Christians of various denominations. He recounts (non-excerpted material) a story of a Universalist preacher who accepts immersion and agrees on these gospel "facts," but still holds his own private opinions. He is allowed to remain in their fellowship because he does not attempt to inculcate in others his opinions.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "Will sects ever cease? Will a time ever come when all disciples will unite under one Lord, in one faith, in one immersion, in one hope, in one body, in one spirit, and in adoring one God and Father of all? Will divisions ever be healed? Will strife ever cease among the saints on Earth? To these questions all who pray for the millennium, all who long for its appearance, answer, Yes. How, then, shall the union be accomplished? Will all be converted to any one sect? ... I presume no person of common intelligence will say, Yes. All sects now they have some opinions, or some customs, which must be dispensed with. How then shall it be introduced? I answer unequivocally in one sentence, By abandoning opinions, and founding all associations upon the belief of gospel facts. Let ever sect give up its opinions as a bond of union, and what will remain in common? The gospel facts alone. ... But men cannot give up their opinions, and, therefore, they never can unite, says one. We do not ask them to give up their opinions - We ask them only not to impose them upon others. Let them hold their opinions; but let them hold them as private property. The faith is public property; opinions are, and always have been, private property. ... In the year 1828, when the gospel, as taught by the apostles, was proclaimed with so much power, in the Western Reserve, Ohio, by our brothers Scott, Bentley, Rigdon, and others, some of all sects obeyed it. ..." (145-147).

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: sectarian strife; new scripture; paid clergy

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Religious Bequests, &c."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 7, No. 1)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Aug. 3, 1829

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.

Comment: Campbell assigns the motives behind sectarianism as purely pecuniary. He denounces sectarians for not accepting the all-sufficiency of the Bible in their teachings. Compare with 2 Nephi 26:20; 28:9-15.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "The day of judgment will, I think, disclose a secret which will astonish millions. It is this - that all sectarianism and sectarian zeal spring from the love of money. ... legacies for ecclesiastical purposes are very ill devised expedients for promoting peace on earth and good will among men. They are often roots of bitterness, springing up as pestilential as the deadly nightshade, and frequently more deleterious than the open assaults of the foes to the christian faith. . . . If each one of its beneficiaries should inherit the spirit of our good brother, who would shut the door of his synagogue against every one who advocates the all-sufficiency and alone-sufficiency of the sacred writings of the apostles and prophets for the teaching, discipline, and edification of the church, what would Kentucky and the world gain from such appropriations of money?"

(3 or 571).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: sectarian strife; Primitive Church
Author: Christian Union
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Christian Union. - No. II."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 1)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 1, 1825
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Restoration to the Primitive Church includes a dissolution of sectarian conflicts and a return to the Bible and its message of unity and love. The whole article is a polemic against sectarian creeds and the divisions caused thereby.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "Who has not seen and felt the operation of sectarian indignation in our country, in arraying citizens, relations, and friends, against each other, who were at peace before they assumed the sectarian badge?. . . . Can that system of things which produces these effects be the religion of Jesus Christ as it appears in the gospel, the religion of him who is the Prince of Peace, and the author of good will, and kindness, and love among men? Oh no! an enemy has done this; it was done by "false Apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the Apostles of Christ". . . . We are constantly praying and laboring for the conversion of sinners among us, and for the conversion of the heathen; but as long as we retain our sectarian divisions, God is bound to his Son, as far as these divisions are concerned, not to hear our prayers nor bless our exertions. . . . None are converted to Christ on sectarian principles. Then why retain them? The different sects have not sufficiently realized that God in the conversion of sinners does nothing more than to make them christians, and place them immediately in the love, and under the direction, instruction and government of Jesus Christ. The inquiry of the new convert is: "Lord what will you have me do?" The Lord directs him to search the scriptures, and in them he gives precisely the same directions to all, and which, when humbly received and practiced, produces the unity and happiness of the saints and the employment of the means for the conversion of the world. . . . All that is needed for the restoration of the church to the apostolic order, is, that christians be christians, and act as the disciples of Jesus Christ. Let them throw aside their sectarian distinctions, and the commandments of men, and take the name of their Lord, and the word of God, and cultivate mutual forbearance towards each other, and tenderness for each other's conscientious differences in opinions. . . ." (3-4 or 173-174).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: sectarian strife; Primitive Church

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Reply to 'T. T.'"

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 7)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Feb. 6, 1825

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds,
and beliefs.

Comment: In response to a letter asking him to clarify his religious associations and views on Christ, Campbell states his Baptist connections due to their openness to restoration to the primitive apostolic church. Campbell, like Joseph, firmly states his refusal to sacrifice on any principle of revealed truth, however for Campbell revealed truth is exclusively the Bible.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "I labor to see sectarianism abolished, and all christians of every name united upon the one foundation on which the apostolic church was founded. To bring Baptists and Paido-Baptists to this is my supreme end. But to connect myself with any people who would require me to sacrifice one item of revealed truth, to subscribe any creed of human device, or to restrain me from publishing my sentiments as discretion and conscience direct, is now, and I hope ever shall be, the farthest from my desires, and the most incompatible with my views. And I hope I will not be accused of sectarian partiality when I avow my conviction that the Baptist society have as much liberality in 'their views, as much of the ancient simplicity of the christian religion, as much of the spirit of christianity amongst them, as are to be found amongst any other people" (47 or 217).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Comment: Campbell laments the wretched influence of sectarianism upon the state of religious matters. While he makes no allusions to the last days, his language bespeaks such calamities and destruction. Note his reference to the restoration of Israel from their sins.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "I have for a few months past had many interviews with the leaders of the people. I have heard them, reasoned with them, and have canvassed their opinions. They of the present order, they of the sects, of the different streets of the great city, deepened my convictions that all sects have drunk of the wine of the cup of the mother of abominations. They are not yet sobered. They have taken upon implicit faith, the cup out of her hands... they are led not by the apostles, but by great modern names. They have their Fuller or their Gill, or their Chrysostom or their Jerome, or their Wesley or their Calvin. They have not studied the Oracle with their own eyes, nor heard it with their own ears... Truly we are yet in the smoke of Babylon. Lord, turn the people to a pure speech!!... I speak what I do know, and I testify what I have seen. And now shall I hold my peace, and suffer the taunts of the captivators? Shall I not rather lift up my voice like a trumpet, and show Israel their sins and their errors. And this will we do, if the Lord permit... The distracted and alienated state of the religious world is more than sufficient proof of the unhallowed influences which are abroad in the earth. Many spirits, indeed, have gone forth into the world. The paper walls of opinions which separate the fractions of the professing world, though inscribed with the essential doctrines of salvation, are, when pasted over and over again, but mere religious phantoms of mystic imaginations" (626-627).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Discipulus

Title of Book: "Regeneration - No. III."

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 6)
The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: In this passage, the author exhibits a traditional or normative Christian understanding of the nature of God as a spirit who manifests himself through his creation, and particularly in the person of Jesus Christ. Humans, composed of body, soul, and spirit, have access to God through the spirits, which enable them to behold spiritual things. The traditional Christian opposition of spirit and matter is clearly seen in this passage and contrasts sharply with Joseph's teaching on spirit and matter, and his understanding of God and humans.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "God is a spirit. . . . Man consists of body, soul, and spirit. By the two former he is related to matter, and to the animal creation. As it respects the latter he resembles God. Formed of the dust of the ground, possessed of appetites and passions, material and animal relations first occupy his attention. His senses, the only inlets to knowledge with which he is furnished, limited entirely to the discovery of that which is in its nature material, are altogether incompetent to detect that which is spiritual. Thus constituted, he can acquire a knowledge of those substances with which he is not acquainted, only through the medium of the ideas originated by those things which he already knows; while his spirit, the peculiar and ennobling attribute of man, the pure and perennial source of true enjoyment, can investigate the harmonies and behold the glories of a spiritual or intellectual world only through the images afforded by that which is material. No one ever saw God. In his own nature invisible to man, he hath condescended to reveal himself in the only manner in which our nature enables us to recognize him. He uttered his voice, and the Universe sprang into existence. By the things that are made hath he clearly manifested to all who would reflect upon them, since the creation of the world, his invisible things, even his eternal power and divinity" (255-256).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Topics: spiritual gifts; Primitive Church; laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost

Author: R. T. P.

Title of Book:

Title of Article:
The letter to the editor defends Campbell against charges that he denies the operation of God's Spirit. In support of his argument, the author uses the example of the earliest Christian congregations as recorded in the New Testament - the Spirit came to them only after they had heard the apostolic preaching, had faith, and were baptized. From this example, presumably Campbell does not talk about the Spirit because he believes that it will come only after listeners have heard his preaching, had faith, and were baptized.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "You have also done much towards the dethronement of the clergy, and much towards the enthronement of the twelve ambassadors: and, as you stated in your letter to Bishop Semple, this constitutes the front of your offending. This is the sum and substance of your heresies: you have denied the operations of the kingdom of clergy, and therefore they are unwearyed in their efforts to prove that you deny the operation of God's Spirit. - This charge is preferred against you because you maintain that the Apostles first exhibited the gospel testimony; they heard and believed it - then were immersed for the remission of their sins - then were sealed, cheered, and blessed with the gift of the Holy Spirit. In support of this position I refer your readers to apostolic congregations themselves. . . . the Spirit was given to the apostolic churches after faith and immersion. . . . All who preach as the apostles did are charged with denying the operation of the Spirit. If the apostles were now upon earth, and were to preach as they formerly did, would they not be charged with denying the operations of the Spirit," (3 or 571).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):
Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: In this discussion on the education of children, Campbell argues against the idea that children are born with enmity towards God (presumably as a result of the Fall). Instead, he suggests that children's love or hatred towards God is due to their education. Compare with Book of Mormon teachings on the effects of the Fall on children.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "The views of the divine character communicated to the infant mind generally alienate from the life of God. This alienation is generally ascribed to the total depravity and inbred enmity of the human heart. The natural enmity is depicted in strong colors - 'Conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity' - 'children of wrath even as others' - 'dead in trespasses and sins' - 'the carnal mind is enmity against God' - 'that which is born of the flesh is flesh,' are quoted with great emphasis in support of the allegation, in proof of the proposition, that infants naturally, perfectly, and cordially hate God. That they are fallen and so imbecile as to render such a state possible, few men acquainted with the Bible or human nature will deny. But that this is under the christian economy not unavoidable, is not distinctly seen by many. Christianity does what Judaism and Paganism could not do. It puts it in the power of christian parents to present a different character of the God and Father of all to the infant mind, form that which Judaism and Gentilism afforded. Let us examine this matter a little. Can a person, old or young, love, fear, or hate a person of whom he is perfectly ignorant? I will venture to answer no. If then a child has never heard or learned any thing of God, it cannot naturally hate him, fear him, or love him. Whether a child shall love or hate God is educational, and not natural. . . . Education, then, and not mere natural birth, is the cause, and the sole cause, of the love or hatred manifested by infants or children towards God" (253-254).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: visions, dreams, revelations; afterlife; apostasy; restoration; sectarian strife; religion and civilization; descent of authority; basis of authority; Primitive Church; lay priesthood and preaching; great and abominable church

Author: Mirzah

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "For the Christian Baptist."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 12)

Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Jul. 6, 1826

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: This remarkable vision narrates the history of religious civilization, tracing the falling away from the Primitive Church, the establishment of the Roman Catholic Church, the Reformations, the development of Protestant sects and denominations, and the rise of independent and dissenting groups. The symbolic detail of the vision provides an interesting lens on views of the history of religious civilization. Noteworthy is the means by which the man and his friend return to Paradise. They return to the original map (the New Testament) which they are able to interpret and follow themselves rather than relying on the verbal descriptions of the map (commentaries/sermons on scripture and tradition) by a "called and sent" religious leader. Throughout the vision are pointed criticisms of religious leaders and institutions such as the description of the Pope sitting alone in a huge chair in which hundreds could fit, the suggestion by the editor that M. E. T. stands for the traditions of the mother church, which the reformers carry out in huge bundles through the gate marked "heresy," or the comment that in the crowds of the Protestant sects every chair was filled with an orator preaching in such a way that no one could be heard. The landscape descriptions of a wide open field, a river, various paths, and crowds of people gathered evoke images from Lehi's vision of the tree of life in 1 Nephi 8. Furthermore, the descriptions of the history of religious civilizations in this vision can be contrasted with Nephi's vision recorded in 1 Nephi 11-15. Like Nephi's angel guide, the traveler in this journey has a companion guide who has access to the original map through which they are able to find Paradise. The idea of a original map which has been perverted through Christian dogma and tradition echos the sentiment from the Book of Mormon of "plain and precious truths" being lost from the Bible (1 Nephi 13:20-34). Strikingly absent from this vision is any explicit mention of Christ or the Holy Spirit.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "... having been for months past disturbed, not only by day, but sometimes by night, on the great difficulty of deciding who, of all the guides of the people, are under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. If, Mr. Editor, the vision will, in your view, be of any use to any, please lay it before the public.

In visions of the night I saw most distinctly through the whole area of a field, which I supposed to be many thousand miles square, the most extensive groupes [sic] of human beings. ... Never on earth before did I see a field of any dimensions so diversified with roads and paths. ... No conceivable design could have located several hundred paths, side by side, sometimes parallel [sic] to each other, and sometimes as serpentine as the milky way, other than the mere project of experiment. For notwithstanding the myriads of paths in every direction in this vast field, there were but two gates and principal roads, which all seemed at one time or another to frequent. ... large and small groupes appeared to oppose each other, and the stronger often compelled the weaker to desert one path and flee to another. Either a gleam of light, or something under that appearance, often seemed to arrest the attention of those in its vicinity, and all seemed attracted by it, and, for a while, appeared tranquil in contemplating it; but in a shorter or longer period it vanished, and they all became as restless as ever. ... a venerable figure approached me, and looking very earnestly in my face, said, 'Whence camest thou hither?' I could make no reply. He without giving me time to propose a question, said 'It is all as uncertain as before.' What? said I. 'Paradise,' he replied, and instantly leaving the path in which he stood, began his march in another, and vouchsafed me no farther [sic] information.
At this moment turning to the East, I saw an immense crowd assembled before a chair of huge magnitude, in which many hundred persons could be comfortably seated, yet but one August personage sat in it, beneath whose feet, on platforms of different elevations, stood myriads of mitred [sic] dignitaries, having inscribed upon their foreheads 'The Called and Sent.' At the right hand of the chair stood a huge cross, on which, as well as on the chair, was inscribed J. C. V. . . . I observed many individuals, and sometimes considerable groups, abandoning the countless millions which stood in solemn gaze upon the chair, its occupant, and the dignitaries beneath, and saw them pass through a grotesque and antique gate, on the side of which, fronting the chair was inscribed Heresy and on the other side Reformation. Through this gate of enormous dimensions, which permitted not only whole groups to pass together without inconvenience, but also to carry with them immense loads, resembling bales, each inscribed with M. E. T. I directed my course, and saw two chairs, something smaller than the former, and not quite so venerable, dignified with two patriarch rabbis resembling the archbishops of York and Canterbury; a crown of gold, engraved and lettered, 'Defender of the Faith,' hung at equal distance from them both. Around them stood twenty-four fathers, with beautiful vestments covered with sentences of Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, all importing 'The Called and Sent.' . . .

A gate fronting these chairs, less than the former, but having the same inscriptions on both sides, was equally thronged with dissenters, who, after gazing a while at those exalted pontificals, withdrew through it and disappeared. I pursued them in great haste, determined to obtain some certain information. But, to my astonishment, on passing through it, more than a hundred paths diverged from its threshold in all directions, each one leading to a small eminence covered with chairs, all filled with incumbents, bearing upon their little tiaras, in small capitals, the same inscription, 'The Called and Sent.' Larger or smaller crowds stood before them all; but so fluctuating that no one could tell which was likely to become the greatest or the least. . . . I could distinguish not one sentence, though every chair was filled with an orator, and in every crowd a multitude appeared repeating the same sentences. In despair I retired to a long skirt of woods which covered the margin of a tranquil stream, and there expected to find a requiem for meditation. But soon as I descended towards its borders, I observed a great many stragglers who had deserted all the crowds and hastened to the river. These seemed to be following me, but passed me by without uttering a word, until they reached the stream, into which they plunged themselves as though they were weary of life and sought a termination of its toils and uncertainties. I looked to see them emerge no more, but with no little surprise I saw them every one ascend the opposite bank, and were met there by twelve long bearded men, wearing leathern girdles and camblet gowns. Each of these seemed eager to seize by the hand every one who emerged from the river, and to lead them into beautiful arbors and booths pitched at a respectful distance from each other along the stream. Each of these twelve primates had a different head dress, but all inscribed with 'The called and sent.' . . . a crowd like harpies had a hold of every protuberance on my raiment; not a button was left on my garments, and I was likely to be rent from head to foot. In the mean time, frantic with despair, I struggled or life, and by a fortunate effort disentangled myself and plunged into the stream. Soon as I had crossed I was seized by at least half a dozen of the sages I had seen, and was as likely to be torn to pieces as before. . . . I made my escape to a cavern. . . . After some time a refugee, like myself, entered the same cavern, and, after discerning me, said, 'Friend, how camest thou hither?' I told him my story, and he told me his. He informed me that he had been for many years on his feet, running in the different paths, and now, for the first time, had sat down. He told me he had found a map in a cave which he had long wished to peruse, but never till now had found an opportunity.

All the information he had gathered during many years traveling amounted to no more than this: That it had been once announced in these regions that a happier country, called Paradise, had been once prepared for all who desired it; that the way to this country had been geographically laid down, but that a predecessor that godlike man who sat upon the first huge chair which I noticed, had secreted the map of the country and the high road that led to it, and that his successors said they could describe it better by words than by maps, and that the different roads and paths which I had noticed had been laid down by different great and wise men of former times. . . . many had traveled for years in different paths, and had followed different guides, all called and sent; but that they, depending upon those guides, had never found that country; and that so great was the increase of new and improved guides, that all the dominions which they enjoyed were likely to be cut up with new roads and paths, without promising a happier result than before. 'But,' says he, 'come let us open this map.' We opened it, and to our surprise, found that not one of those guides who claimed the patronage of the author of the map, had been authorized by him, but that he had once authorized a sufficient company of surveyors and engineers, who had exactly defined the country and the way thither. We followed the map, and soon found a road which, although almost covered with grass, shrubs, and trees, led us safely into the confines of Paradise, where in transport I awoke, and found it but a vision" (79-80 or 249-250).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: visions, dreams, revelations; agency
Author: A. Berean
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "On the Rights of Laymen. -- No. 1."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 6)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jan. 2, 1826
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Author argues that knowledge about future or the unseen can not be attained through the physical senses, but only through the Bible. Humans have the right to exercise their own agency in interpreting the Bible rather than relying on others' opinions.
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "Now it is the inalienable right of every layman to exercise his five senses [seeing, hearing, tasting, smelling, and feeling], and never to be argued out of them or to believe anything contrary to them. But let it be remembered that those five senses give a man no other intelligence than what concerns the material world around him. They cannot introduce him to an acquaintance with a world of spirits, or a future state. But in order to fit him for this, God has given him another class of faculties which exist in his spirit, as those senses exist in his body. These faculties are all comprised in one sentence, which affirms man to be a reasonable being. . . . the Bible is to man the sun and light of the world of spirits, or of the unseen and future state. The testimony of God is addressed to, and fitted for, this faculty of believing, with which he has endowed men, and of which he cannot be divested so long as he is rational. . . . It is then, in the second place, the inalienable right of all laymen to examine the sacred writings for themselves, and to exercise this faculty with which God has endowed them and not to believe what the church believes, nor how the church believes, because the church believes it; but to judge and act for, and from themselves" (38-39 or 208-209).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: visions, dreams, revelations; spiritual gifts; tongues, healing; miracles to confirm revelation; spirit, soul and body; seeing God; word of wisdom; spirit world

Author: Henry C. Blinn

Title of Book: The Manifestation of Spiritualism Among the Shakers 1837-1847

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: East Canterbury, N.H.

Publisher:

Date of Publication: 1899

Nature of Source: This book is a collection of first hand accounts of the 1837 Shaker revival of "Mother Ann Lee's Work" characterized by an abundance of visions, dreams, revelations, spiritual gifts, and spiritualism or contact with the dead.

Comment: These excerpts touch on a variety of the spiritual gifts and manifestations present during the revival of "Mother Ann Lee's Work," including visions, dreams, speaking in tongues, singing, healing, spiritualism, etc. There is also a brief excerpt on a revelation about health practices similar to the Word of Wisdom.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "To clothe a spirit with flesh and bones, in a few moments and give it the power of speech, is indeed, a wonder of the age. . . . Spiritualism evidently began with the creation of man, and is as much a part of that wonderful creative plan, as is any quality of the mind with which we are directly familiar. Our most reliable, ancient history, - the Bible, informs us that God conversed with Adam, as a man would converse with his friend. . . . From the first chapter of Genesis, to the last of Revelation, the sacred record is filled with the most remarkable manifestations of spirit influence, and the same laws that made it possible, at that early age for the dreaming of dreams, - the seeing of visions, - the hearing of spirit voices, and the ascending to heaven in a chariot of flaming fire, also makes it possible to accomplish the same wonderful manifestations to-day. Through this wonderful influence, the waters of the sea were divided, and horses with their riders passed over on dry ground. The sun was commanded to stand still, at mid-day; fire was brought down from heaven, and bread, sufficient to feed a host of two hundred thousand persons, was miraculously rained upon the earth for nearly forty years. The sick were healed, the dead were restored to life, and persons were carried bodily from the earth to the heavens. As was the Mosaic church, so was the primitive Christian Church in its wonderful demonstrations of mysterious influences.

"... In 1841 written messages became more frequent. Some of these were largely of a reformatory character. Swine's flesh, foreign tea and coffee, and the use of tobacco in every form were considered objectionable for the Believers and quite forcibly disavowed. All alcoholic drink was placed on the objectionable list" (19). "Young men and women became the willing or unwilling subjects of this new and strange visitation. During their journeys to the more spiritual sphere, they became the active mediums for singing the most beautiful pieces of music, and in their exaltation, their descriptive language was remarkably increased, as they related their wonderful visits to the spirit land, and pictured the lovely mansions prepared for the faithful in Christ" (27).

"The medium speaking for the prophet Elisha, said to him, - 'Elder Eli, this is the Lord's blessing, and I will shower upon you some healing love.' At the same time the medium's hands waved above the patient's head. The healing began from that moment, - his cough ceased, his pains left him, and he was restored to a comfortable state of health" (37).

"Some of the mediums became gifted in the speaking of what was termed an unknown tongue" (62).

"These spirit messengers oftentimes took possession of these youth, and entranced them for many hours consecutively. While thus entranced these spirit messengers led them on visionary journeys in the Spirit world, the scenes and incidents of which they, while entranced, would describe with all the graphic and enchanting minuteness of a most exquisitely gifted earthly traveler" (65).

"Mother Ann Lee, the founder of Shakerism, enjoyed visions in her childhood, and right along through life. Her powers of clairvoyance were remarkable. She would read the lives of those she had never before seen, and tell their very thoughts. She also had the power to heal sickness and infirmities. Mother Ann was a healer of both body and soul; so were many of her followers in the days gone by. I have read scores of testimonies by the early converts to this effect: 'They laid their hands upon the sick and their infirmities were immediately healed" (86).
Author: Editor
Title of Book: "A Restoration of the Ancient Order of Things. No. XI. Reply to the Above."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Baptist (Vol. 3, No. 8)
Place of Publication: Buffaloe, (Bethany) Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Mar. 6, 1826
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs.
Comment: Editor responds to a letter asking a question about the correct mode of baptism (trine or single), and clarifies the distinction between essential religious ordinances or institutions (baptism or the sacrament) and circumstantial acts (washing of the feet or the kiss of charity).
Researcher: Allison Clark
Excerpt (pages): "As to the washing of the saints' feet, there is no evidence that it was a religious ordinance, or an act of social worship. Yea, there is positive evidence that it was not. . . . It was a good work, and still is a good work. . . . Much the same sort of evidence exists in proof that the kiss of charity is not a social or church ordinance. . . . With regard to trine immersion, and the manner in which the action should be performed, we have neither precept nor precedent. . . . There is not command that a person should be immersed three times in order to constitute one baptism or immersion. Nor is there an example of the kind of record, not even a hint or allusion to such a custom. Therefore, we cannot teach it as of divine, but as of human authority" (53-54 or 223-224)
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 2
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: word of wisdom
Author:
Title of Book: "Tobacco."
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 6)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Jun. 7, 1830
Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.
Comment: Author argues against the use of tobacco, mentioning the potential and real physical disabilities and diseases associated with its use.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "It is really surprising that a single individual could be found, who, after experiencing the distressing sensations almost invariably produced by the first use of tobacco, would be willing to risk their recurrence a second time: still more so, that any one should again and again resort to the 'noxious weed,' until, its immediate effects being lessened by habit, it becomes an article of luxury, from the use of which it is found difficult to refrain. . . . Tobacco is, in fact, an absolute poison. A very moderate quantity introduced into the system - even applying the moistened leaves over the stomach - has been known very suddenly to extinguish life. . . . In whatever form it may be employed, a portion of the active principles of the tobacco, mixed with the saliva, invariably finds its way into the stomach, and disturbs or impairs the functions of that organ. Hence most, if not all, of those who are accustomed to the use of tobacco, labor under dyspeptic symptoms. They experience, at intervals, a want of appetite - nausea - inordinate thirst - vertigo - pains and distension of the stomach - disagreeable sensations of the head - tremors of the limbs - disturbed sleep, and more or less emaciated. . . . Cases could be mentioned in which epilepsy, consumption, and other serious diseases have been brought on in young people by the excessive use of tobacco" (281-282).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed: _________________________

Topics: word of wisdom

Author:

Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Four Great Sources of Health."
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger (Vol. 1, No. 6)
Place of Publication: Bethany, Brooke Co. VA
Publisher: Editor (Alexander Campbell)
Date of Publication: Jun. 7, 1830

Nature of Source: The Millennial Harbinger, first published in 1830 by Alexander Campbell after disintegrating relations with the Baptists, builds upon Campbell's previous periodical, The Christian Baptist (1823-1830). Like The Christian Baptist, The Millennial Harbinger is based on a strict belief in the teachings of the New Testament and the rejection of all other sects, creeds, and beliefs. Furthermore, The Millennial Harbinger, as its title indicates, focuses on the Christian unity that is necessary in order to usher in the millennium.

Comment: This excerpt is taken from the "Journal of Health" and advocates temperance in drinking. Campbell heartily supports this position.

Researcher: Allison Clark

Excerpt (pages): "The preservation of health mainly depends on early rising, temperance in eating and drinking, exercise, and cleanliness. . . . the poor injure themselves materially by intoxication, and that with drink of an inferior and hurtful
It is certain that every fit of drunkenness has its share in shortening of life; for, however we may find men to whom it appears to do no injury, nothing is more reasonable than to conclude, that they would live longer by avoiding inebriation. Amongst the better classes, this vice has happily, for many years past, been gradually declining; and it is now a great reproach to gentlemen to be seen drunk. But they use rich wines, liqueurs, and spirits, of which, at their numerous meals, without getting tipsy or drunk, they take too much altogether. They likewise eat much more than is necessary or proper, and that generally of things so artificially prepared, that the simple qualities are lost, and may almost be considered as a medicine instead of natural food" (279-280).

---

"Independently of the sufferings he experienced from the nature of the worldly circumstances in which he was situated-the contempt, reproaches, and persecutions of ungodly men; and the misery which originated from the anticipation of the sufferings which awaited him, he endured inconceivable internal and mental wretchedness, arising from causes of which we can form no conception ... The excruciating pains he experienced in the garden of Gethsemane made him sweat great drops of blood" (224)

"Nor is this all: he who had assumed human nature, and in our world had experienced such unparalleled sufferings, did voluntarily give himself up unto death. Yes! He who, by the word of his power, had created the heavens, and had given being to the various orders of angelic intelligences by which they are inhabited,-he who, by the breathing of his mouth, had called our world into beautiful order, from that state of perfect chaos in which it originally was,-who had given existence to, and continued to preserve and govern the various species of animated creatures with which it is replenished,-even he condescended to die in our world; and to die an ignominious death" (224-25)

"Nor were the powers of darkness indifferent spectators of this marvellous event; they beheld it with the highest amazement and the deepest horror. Nay, however little unfeeling man may be affected at the circumstance of the death of Christ,-it was an occurrence which even inanimate creation could not witness, but with sorrow and surprise. In the simple but sublime language of Scripture, the earth, at the death of Jesus, is represented as being covered with thick darkness, the rocks being rent in twain, and the sun ceasing to shine. So tremendous were the convulsions which affected the earth while he was suspended on the cross, that a heathen philosopher, ignorant of the circumstance, exclaimed, "Either the God of nature suffers, or the world is come to an end!" (226)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Title of Book: A System of Speculative Masonry

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Salem, New York

Publisher: Dodd & Stevenson

Date of Publication: 1818

Library Location: 080 Sh64a no.45882

Nature of Source: Town's Speculative Masonry is based upon a series of lectures he delivered before the Grand Chapter of the State of New York (a Masonic body) some years earlier. His object in publishing these lectures was to provide the public with "a plain, yet concise description of Speculative Free-Masonry" (v).

Comment: Town suggests that the "patriarchs of ancient times" understood "by special revelation" that the sacrifices prescribed in the law of Moses pointed to Christ's atoning sacrifice. Compare Alma 34:14 ("And behold, this is the whole meaning of the law, every whit pointing to that great and last sacrifice"). See also 2 Nephi 11:4; Mosiah 16:14; Alma 25:15; and Moses 5:7.

Researcher: Stephen Clarke

Date: 02 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "May we not hence conclude, that those venerable patriarchs of ancient times, were in many respects, led to a discovery of that blessedness, which should afterwards be revealed. That they were made to understand by special revelation, most, if not all the typical allusions of their altars, and the event prefigured in the choice of their sacrifices.-That the whole service of the tabernacle, while in the wilderness, was spiritualized, in a very solemn manner, to the understandings of the pious and devout worshipper.-That the temple of Solomon, also, displayed to the contemplative mind a still higher exhibition of the eternal purposes of Jehovah, in the great plan of redemption. That all these things pointed, in some shape, to the great sacrifice which was to atone for the sins of the world, is now abundantly evident.-And that most, if not all, of the ancient fathers, did thus understand them is highly probable if not equally certain" (88-89).

Length of relevant material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: corruption of biblical texts; priestcraft; paid clergy

Author: Elisha Peck

Title of Book: A Narrative of the Writer's Experience, With a View to the Ancient Light Breaking Forth Anew to the Reader, and Undermining Priest-Craft

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Otsego

Publisher: E. Phinney

Date of Publication: 1808

Library Location: 080 Sh64a no.15860

Nature of Source: A spiritual autobiography.
Comment: Peck expresses the view that the present Bible has been corrupted by "wicked kings and priests" seeking to preserve their positions by keeping the world "in ignorance" (although it is still sufficiently inspired "to make us wise unto salvation"). Peck's discussion of the integrity of the Bible text does not sit well with the publisher, as the disclaimer at the end of the work clearly indicates.

Researcher: Stephen Clarke

Date: 02 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "I find it better to obey the Spirit, than to obey the commandments and the doctrine of men; though the Bible is marred, and darkened, in the hands of wicked kings and priests; yet that part given by the inspiration of God, is profitable to make us wise unto salvation . . . I do not mean to be understood that I wish to destroy the Bible, only to let the reader see that we have been imposed upon, by priests, telling us every word of the bible is true-I believe the bible was not printed at first from the volumes of parchments, or manuscripts, as they were written by the faithful men of God. The king knew if he suffered them printed, as clear as God had given the light, the people would know too much to be governed by monarchy, they would be of one mind, embracing the old republican principle, given by God, in the foundation, received by Jesus Christ and his apostles, and he, the king, with all his train of nobility must come to digging; so their wicked wits led them to intersperse the bible, adding a little here, diminishing a little there, misplacing &c. that they have so interwoven the book, that nothing, short of the same spirit which spake by the holy prophets and Jesus Christ, can sever or [illegible] the truth in a chain. You will question, why did kings and priests do this? I answer, that they might keep the world in ignorance amusing them in hard labor, and they ride in splendor. You will say, how so? The Bible, as it stands printed, is calculated to justify almost every principle which hath divided the world; to be sure all Christendom into so many sects, more easier governed by kings, making business for priests, who tell the people the Bible is a great mystery, and I am able to teach you the way through it to Heaven notwithstanding, and certainly will do it, if-you will bind yourselves and heirs to pay me three four, six, eight, ten, or fifteen hundred dollars per annum with a handsome settlement; just as they can find bidders, the highest is the call of God; to be sure, this is priest craft . . . this ancient wickedness hath led modern priests into a train of traditional doctrines of men, filled with contradictions, giving the highest impeachments to Jehovah; like this, you can and you can't, you shall and you shan't, you will & you won't, you will be damned if you don't, you will be damned if you do; may the Lord grant a united cry to Heaven, for priests, that they may spend less time studying their fathers, & more time in prayer to God, for wisdom from above, that is gentle, easy to be intreated, full of love, enabling them to discern that part of the Bible, given by inspiration, in a correct chain, and save them from teaching any farther, that God is partial" (17, 20-21).

"The subscriber, at the request of E. Phinney, Esq. Certifies, that said Phinney has never recommended or in any way induced the publication of this Essay, on the veracity of some parts of the present edition of the Bible; but that the said Phinney has, on the other hand, endeavoured to dissuade him from promulgating such sentiments, as they would, in his opinion, have a tendency to weaken, rather than strengthen the great pillars, by which the cause of Christianity is supported" (24).

Length of relevant material: 4 pp.
Topics: [criticism of the Book of Mormon]
Author: Alexander Campbell
Title of Book: Delusions: An Analysis of the Book of Mormon; with an Examination of its Internal and External Evidences, and a Refutation of its Pretenses to Divine Authority
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, Massachusetts
Publisher: Benjamin H. Greene
Date of Publication: 1832
Library Location:
Nature of Source: Reprinted from review in the Millennial Harbinger 2 (February 7, 1831).
Comment:
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 22 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The Nephites, like their father, for many generations were good christians, believers in the doctrines of the Calvinists and Methodists, and preaching baptism and other christian usages hundreds of years before Jesus Christ was born! Before Nephi died . . . he had preached to his people every thing which is now preached in the state of New York" (7)
"This prophet Smith, through his stone spectacles, wrote on the plates of Nephi, in his book of Mormon, every error and almost every truth discussed in N. York for the last ten years. He decides all the great controversies-infant baptism, ordination, the trinity, regeneration, repentance, justification, the fall of man, the atonement, transubstantiation, fasting, penance, church government, religious experience, the call to the ministry, the general resurrection, eternal punishment, who may baptize, and even the question of freemasonry, republican government, and the rights of man. All these topics are repeatedly alluded to . . . But [Joseph Smith] is better skilled in the controversies in New York than in the geography or history of Judea . . . But not to honor him by too minute examination and exposition, I will sum up the whole of the internal evidence which I deem worthy of remark, in the following details . . . The book professes to be written at intervals and by different persons during the long period of 1020 years. And yet for uniformity of style, there never was a book more evidently written by one set of fingers, nor more certainly conceived in one cranium since the first book appeared in human language, than this same book. If I swear to any man's voice, face, or person, assuming different names, I could swear that this book was written by one man. And as Joseph Smith is a very ignorant man and is called the author on the title page, I cannot doubt for a single moment that he is the sole author and proprietor of it" (13)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
"There are a multitude of modern words found in the Book of Mormon. The following are only a few: 'Faculties,' 'Popular,' 'Priestcraft,' 'State of dilemma,' 'Synagogue,' 'Bible,' 'Jews,' 'Gentiles,' 'Church,' 'Baptize,' 'Barges,' 'Immortal,' and others. Of course it is easy enough to say that 'the angel who translated those ancient plates for Joseph Smith would be apt to use words with which Joseph Smith was familiar; he would clothe the ancient thought in a modern dress, and use such simple modern expressions as Joseph Smith, who was an unlettered man, could readily understand.' But some of the above words will not allow such an explanation. For instance, the word 'faculties.' 'Arouse the faculties of your souls,' page 120 (N.Ed., 134). 'I myself have labored with all the power of faculties which I have possessed,' page 206 (N.Ed., 230). This use of the word is wholly modern. The ancients knew nothing of such a division of the mind or soul into faculties. And, hence there could have been no word found upon ancient plates, that conveyed any such meaning" (218-19)

"The book abounds in modern camp-meeting expressions. The following are a few out of a great number of illustrations which easily betray their parentage: 'Encircled about eternally in the arms of his love.' 'They are encircled about with the matchless bounty of his love.' 'They were encircled about with everlasting darkness and destruction.' The chains of hell which encircled them about were loosed and their souls did expand, and they did sing redeeming love.' 'My brethren, if ye have experienced a change of heart, and if ye have felt to sing the song of redeeming love.' 'For the arms of mercy are extended towards them.' 'Lay down the weapons of their rebellion.' 'Behold, the days of your probation are past; ye have procrastinated the day of your salvation until it is everlastingly too late.' 'By the power of their words many were brought before the altar of God, to call on His name, and confess their sins.'" (227)

"But here in this paragraph a man gets himself into trouble and finally suffers the penalty of death for publicly teaching that 'priests ought not to labor with their hands, but be supported by the people,' precisely the thing that the law of Moses absolutely and unconditionally required. Surely the writer of the above could not have been an ancient writer, but a modern man with a very strong desire to hit hard the modern custom of a salaried ministry" (229)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: council in heaven; God's purpose in creation
Author: Salem Town (1779-1864)
Title of Book: A System of Speculative Masonry
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Salem, New York
Publisher: Dodd & Stevenson
Date of Publication: 1818
Library Location: 080 Sh64a no.45882
Nature of Source: Town's Speculative Masonry is based upon a series of lectures he delivered before the Grand Chapter of the State of New York (a Masonic body) some years earlier. The lectures were published to provide the public with "a plain, yet concise description of Speculative Free-Masonry" (v).
Comment: Town makes reference to a heavenly council which devised a plan for man's redemption. Compare D&C 121:32; Alma 12:25ff.
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 02 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Here we view the coincidence of principle and design, between the Christian scheme and Speculative Free-Masonry, with that pleasing admiration which satisfies inquiry, and clearly proves our system based on the Rock of eternal ages. As the subject continues to open, the mind is presented with an endless variety of sublime contemplations. Such are the deep mysteries of the Divine Word, in whom all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily. Such the terrible majesty of Him that rideth upon the heavens by his name Jah, who plants his footsteps in the sea, and manages the storms. Such the boundless displays of the unsearchable riches of Divine Benevolence. Such the Grand Council of Eternity, which devised and executed that great plan of man's redemption" (24-25).
Length of relevant material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment
Author: Joseph Y. Burgin
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Letter From the Christian Church in Portsmouth, to Elder Elias Smith"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Herald
Place of Publication: Portsmouth, New Hampshire
Publisher: The Gazette Office
Date of Publication: May 1818 (Vol. 1, No. 1)
Library Location: APS II, Reel 79 (Microfilm)
Nature of Source:
Comment:
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 09 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "You have published to the world, that the doctrine called Universalism or 'thou shalt not surely die,' 'was taught by the devil that deceiveth the nations, and is a lie; that it leads to licentiousness, and encourages the wicked to live in open rebellion against God. And he who believes it will conclude that faith and repentance &c. is nothing, and that he need not trouble himself concerning his present or future situation, and may live according to the course of this world, and be happy at last.'" (4)
"... did you ever know any reformation among any people where they were taught to believe that there was no future punishment" (7)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment
Author: Hosea Ballou
Title of Book: A Treatise on the Atonement
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Randolph, VT
Publisher: Sereno Wright
Date of Publication: 1805
Library Location: 080 Sh64a No. 24691
Nature of Source: A work by Universalist preacher Hosea Ballou
Comment:
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 5 August 1999
Excerpt (pages): "They do not admit, that Christ died for our actual transgressions, after we have come to years of discretion; but of these, we must repent, and beg for mercy, and God will forgive, on our humble and sincere application. The sum of this plan of atonement, made salvation possible unto all men, but certain unto none. It argues, that it is the will of God, that all men should be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth; that all should repent of their sins, and receive the Redeemer on the reasonable terms upon which he is offered to us. Those who believe in this plan, believe it possible for men to neglect those privileges, slight those merciful offers, and turn a deaf ear to all the warnings of the Spirit, until the day of their probation is ended, whereby all that the Savior has done, is made of no effect unto them. And that thousands will be thus neglectful, and be miserable as long as God exists; not, however, for the sin which Adam committed, but for their own personal transgressions" (92)

". . . suppose that these three distinct persons [the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost] formed the grand council in heaven, on the salvation of man, after the first transgression. In this council, and on so momentous an occasion, the first person addresses the other two, saying, the colony which we have just planted our new made earth; and you know the penalty, which is endless misery, must be immediately executed on the two delinquents [Adam and Eve], unless a dispensation can be devised more favorable to the offenders, and equally satisfactory to justice. As the attribute of justice, spake in the first person, that of mercy speaks, in the second, and proposes a pardon. Justice opposes, and contends that his honor depends upon the penalty's being put in execution. Mercy again replies, the second person in the Godhead shall suffer the penalty due to sin, and justice shall grant man a second probation [after the Garden of Eden], in which he may secure the life, which he, by rebellion, lost. That reasonable conditions should be proposed, and the third person should make them known to man, and give him proper directions how to fulfil them; and if man faithfully attends to these conditions, he secures his happiness; if not, mercy makes no more requests in favor of this offender. To this all agree; and it is registered accordingly" (93-94)

"the atonement of Christ was the effect, and not the cause, of God's love to man . . . according to the general idea of atonement, Christ stood as the proxy of man, and the world was tried in him, and condemned in him, and in him suffered the penalty of the law which man had transgressed" (99)

"God being infinite in all his glorious attributes, he can by no means love, at one time, and hate the same object, at another. His divine omnisciency comprehended all the events of time and eternity; therefore, nothing could take place, to remove his love from an object on which it was placed . . . he comprehends the whole futurition [?] of all moral beings, and loves them as his own offspring, which a love consistent with his immutable existence. Therefore, it is evident, that God was not the unreconciled, and, of course, did not require an atonement to reconcile himself to his creatures." (100)

"Reconciliation is a renewal of love, and love is the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus . . . The reader will now see, with ease, that, that power which causes us to hate sin, and love holiness, is the power of Christ, whereby atonement is made" (115)

"God's love to us is antecedent to our love to him, which refutes the notion of God's receiving the atonement; but the idea, that the manifestation of God's love to us, causes us to love him, and brings us to a renewal of love, (in which spirit we all stood, in our spiritual head, Jesus, before formation; and from which, we, in a certain sense, elapsed, after being made subject to vanity) is perfectly consonant to the necessity of the atonement, it shows us what atonement is, and the power which the Mediator must have and exercise, in order to reconcile all things to God" (116)

"The apostacy of the Jews happened, in consequence of the lips of the priests not preserving knowledge; they fell from the spirit of the law, were lost in the wilderness of the letter, and therefore were blinded indeed. This was a figure of the more dreadful apostacy of christians, as were various other circumstances recorded in the old testament.
The christian apostacy happened, in the same way; and the church has been led into the wilderness of the letter, by an hireling priesthood, who knew nothing of the spirit of the law; who have preached, in the name of the Lord, the letter, which killeth, in room of the spirit, which giveth life." (118)

Length of relevant material:

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment
Author: Cyrus Mann, 1785-1859
Title of Book: The Future Punishment of the Wicked Certain and Endless
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Worcester, Massachusetts
Publisher: William Manning
Date of Publication: January 1818
Library Location: 080 Sh64a no.44678
Nature of Source: An Anti-Universalist sermon originally delivered in Westminster on 16 March 1817, the Sunday after a Universalist preacher spoke in the Congregational meetinghouse there.

Comment:

Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 09 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The immortality of the soul is clearly revealed in the word of God. And since it is certain that we are to exist forever, our condition beyond the grave is of transcendent importance. No one can reasonably wish to be deceived in an affair of such infinite consequence, and in which it may soon be too late to retrieve his error" (1)

"In attempting to prove the future punishment of the wicked, I am well aware that I have to resist the strongest inclinations of every unconverted person. Every one desires to be saved; and all the wishes of the impenitent are in favour of salvation, without regard to the glory of God. The doctrine of universal salvation promises all that the natural man desires: present gratification in sin, and endless felicity; consequently he will be easily led to believe this doctrine. It spreads before him the flowery path, and invites him forward with many allurements. He can hardly believe that there is any difficulty in so smooth and easy and pleasant a way" (4)

"There are some who appear to think there will be no future punishment, or at least have such vague and imperfect notions respecting it, that it has no influence upon their conduct. If they do not entirely deny future sufferings, they deem it very uncertain whether God will inflict any punishment hereafter for the sins committed in this life. There are others, who acknowledge that there will be a punishment after death, but conclude that it will be only for a limited period . . . The certainty of the future punishment of the wicked appears, 1. In its being necessary to vindicate the justice of God . . . There could be no justice in the conduct of a ruler who should show equal favour towards the most faithful and loyal of his subjects, and those who were rebellious" (5)
"Can we suppose that a righteous God will confer no peculiar privileges on those who sincerely love and faithfully serve him? Can his glory be manifested, and his justice be made to appear, so long as there is no distinction between those who are aiming to advance his glory and the good of his kingdom, and those who hate his character, and endeavour to destroy the happiness of his subjects? It is evident that they merit different treatment, and that justice requires a visible distinction to be made. This does not take place in the present life. The coming world will therefore be a world of separation, where the wicked will be punished, and the righteous rewarded" (6)

"Future punishment, then, is as certain to the finally impenitent, as that God is possessed of justice, or as certain as the existence of God" (7)

"Every individual of the human race is now prepared, and will be at the hour of death, for a world of happiness or misery. Every person is pleased with holiness, and delights in a pure and holy God; or, he hates the real character of God, and would gladly avoid the divine presence. Those who are not delighted with a just and righteous God, cannot be happy in heaven... the carnal mind in enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. It cannot, therefore, be happy in his presence, but must be miserable" (7)

"Let none flatter themselves with the possibility of escaping unpunished, if they persevere in sin. Let them not think that they shall pass into heaven unnoticed, when they die. An omniscient God will not be deceived and illuded in this manner. Let them not hope that they may sink into annihilation, and thus escape future sufferings; for God hath said, that they shall exist, and be sensible of their punishment" (9)

"Throughout the whole bible, the present is represented as our only state of probation, and there is no evidence that any offers of mercy are made after death. Consequently there will be no possibility of becoming any better, or any more capable of the joys of heaven. However severe or however long the suffering, it will produce none of that holiness without which no man shall see the Lord" (10)

"When their probation is closed by death, there is no hope for them during eternity" (11)

"Perhaps some will here urge that saying of the apostle, By which he went and preached to the spirits in prison. But this preaching is expressly limited to the days of Noah, and has not the least reference to any means used to reclaim sinners in a future world" (10)

"5. The punishment of the wicked must be endless, for the mediatorial office of Christ ceases at the day of judgment. From that period there will be no Mediator; consequently no more pardon can be extended to the guilty... So long as Christ continues to act the part of a Mediator, those who are in a state of probation may become reconciled to God; but when he shall have delivered up that office, there will be no more possibility of obtaining salvation, than if no Saviour had ever been provided" (14)

"Is it not derogatory to the great God to suppose that his mercy will not suffer him to be faithful to his word? 'It is an unreasonable and unscriptural notion of the mercy of God, that he is merciful in such a sense that he cannot bear that penal justice should be executed. This is to conceive of the mercy of God as a passion to which his nature is so subject, that he is liable to be moved, and affected, and overcome by seeing a creature in misery, so that he cannot bear to see justice executed; which is a most unreasonable and absurd notion of the mercy of God, and would, if true, argue great weakness" (21)

"Sin is rebellion against the highest authority: it is the violation of an infinite obligation. For we are under an infinite obligation to love, honour and obey the most high and glorious Lord our God. His is infinitely worthy of supreme affection and perfect obedience. And since our obligation to love, honour, and obey him are infinitely great, sin is the violation of an infinite obligation, and is an infinite evil: it therefore deserves an infinite punishment" (22)

"To deny the future punishment of the wicked . . . is the height of presumption after what God hath revealed in his word. It is calculated to quiet the conscience, and keep men secure in sin, until there is no more space for repentance. What, I would ask, first awakens the sinner, and leads him to cry with trembling solicitude, 'What shall I do to be saved?' Is it not the prospect of the execution of the divine law? It is this which shows our need of a Saviour. Remove the penalty of eternal death, which the law denounces, and what occasion is there for a Redeemer? There is no necessity for a personal application of the atoning blood of Christ, if we are not exposed to the penalty of the law" (25)

Length of relevant material:

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics:  endless punishment
Author:  Daniel Isaac, 1778-1834
Title of Book:  The Doctrine of the Universal Restoration Examined
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication:  New York
Publisher:  J. Soule and T. Mason
Date of Publication:  1819
Library Location:  080 Sh6a no.48357
Nature of Source:  A Methodist tract refuting the doctrine of universal restoration.
Comment:  Isaac, a Methodist minister, is concerned with "the immoral tendency of the Restoration System" and tries to demonstrate that the doctrine of atonement "has no place in the Universalist's creed, if consistency be regarded" (v).
Researcher:  Stephen Clarke
Date:  08 July 1999
Excerpt (pages):  "For who can perceive any necessary connexion between the sin of a man, and the suffering of a beast? Yet our senses convince us that the earth is under a curse, and that the whole animal creation groaneth and travaileth together in pain; and revelation informs us of the cause. Had we other senses, we might perhaps trace the effects of sin much farther. It is allowed that the government of God is infinite, and that some connexion runs through the whole; and it is no more improbable that the whole universe might, in some way or other, be affected by the sin of man, than that it should contaminate our elements, and make the world groan with the miseries of its inhabitants. It must be observed too, that the laws of God have infinite authority stamped upon them, and that God has laid us under infinite obligations, it will be difficult, if not impossible to prove, that sin is not an infinite evil: and if it is an infinite evil, it must merit infinite or eternal punishment" (14-15)
"In all the Divine dispensations in relation to man, God has an eye to his Free Agency, and will not destroy it. Misery entered with the abuse of liberty; and the possibility of the abuse being continued, militates against the certainty of the restoration in question; for to say that a man endowed with the liberty to sin, must necessarily be virtuous, is a contradiction in terms. I say then in reply to both Epicurus and Mr. V., that the introduction of misery and its endless continuance, are owing to an abuse of moral liberty in man, and not to any deficiency in the wisdom, or power, or goodness of God" (p. 21) "We must therefore infer what is true in fact, that men do not always follow the dictates of reason, that they are carried away by the violence of corrupt passions and appetites. And we cannot be sure that the threatening of an endless punishment is not necessary to counteract the influence of our depravity. Certainly when we consider the powerful influence of sinful habits and examples, we cannot possibly suppose, that they are likely to be counteracted by the threatening, or rather the promise of punishment, which is corrective in its nature, moderate in its quantity, limited in its duration, and glorious in its end" (33) Arguing that "a majority of the human race will finally be happy" (48): "But if it were admitted, for argument's sake, that the number of lost of mankind will exceed [sic] the number of the saved, yet the objection may be answered another way. It is highly probable, that there is a plurality of inhabited worlds;--that the inhabitants of other worlds stand in a higher rank in the scale of being than the inhabitants of this world;--that the number of the finally lost will bear no proportion to the number of the saved;--and that the inhabitants of all the worlds in the universe stand in some relation to one another: hence the exemplary punishment of men may be useful to keep other orders of intelligent beings in a state of subjection and obedience, and thus perfectly accord with the goodness of God" (52) "1. There is a plurality of inhabited worlds. It is certain that the other planets of this system are worlds, in many respects similar to ours. Like this, each performs its diurnal revolution round the sun; so that they have their regular return of day and night, summer and winter. They also, in common with us, derive from the sun both light and heat, which may serve them, as well as us, for the purposes of life and vegetation. Thus we see, that in some of the most important particulars, the other planets of this system are as well provided as ours is, for the support of living creatures. And when we consider how this world is crowded with inhabitants, we shall find it difficult to suppose that they remain a perpetual waste and desolation. As the fixed stars shine with inherent light, they are suns, and, most probably, have planets rolling round them, their distances from each other being sufficiently great to admit of this. And we cannot see for what other purpose they were created. It may indeed be said, that the light of the stars is very useful to us; but it may be answered, that one more moon, at a convenient distance, would have been much more so. Neither will it explain the matter to say, that they are spread abroad through the heavens for ornament, because many of them are not visible to the naked eye: and I believe no man can think God placed them at such an amazing distance, for the entertainment of a few gazing philosophers with their glasses. But when, on the other hand, we take in the idea that the planets of this system and of the other thousands of systems are all inhabited by intelligent creatures, we are lost in astonishment, while contemplating the wonderful works and ways of the Creator and Preserver of the universe" (52-53)
"If every world be inhabited by free agents, it has been said, that every world may, at one time or other, be in a state of apostacy, and, in that case it would be necessary for the Son of God to be almost perpetually travelling from one world to another, and, in the several natures the inhabitants, to make satisfaction for their sins. But the probability is, as will be shown below, that there is not another world of intelligent beings whose natures and circumstances are similar to ours; so that, supposing their apostacy, it will not be necessary to treat them in exactly the same manner. The sacred Scriptures have settled this point by assuring us that Christ died for sin once; he dieth no more" (54)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment
Author: Hosea Ballou (1771-1852)
Title of Book: A Treatise on the Atonement
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Randolph, Vermont
Publisher: Sereno Wright
Date of Publication: 1805
Library Location: 080 Sh64a no.24691
Nature of Source: A work by Universalist preacher Hosea Ballou advocating the doctrine "of universal holiness and happiness through the mediation and power of atoning grace" (iv).
Comment: Dan Vogel quotes this source as evidence that D&C 19:5-12 reflects Universalist teachings (see "'The Prophet Puzzle' Revisited" in Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought 31 [Fall 1998]:125-140).
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 14 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The adversaries of the doctrine of universal holiness and happiness have contended, with seeming great assurance, that if the word everlasting, which is here applied to the punishment of the wicked, does not mean an endless duration, [then] the word eternal used in the text, may not, as they both come from the same root; and consequently, they have argued that the happiness of the righteous may come to an end, if the misery of the wicked does. In answer to so much ingenuity and argument, I say the word eternal is not applied to the duration of happiness, but to the nature of that life which is brought to light through the gospel; and as that life is of the nature of the unchangeable Deity, we justly believe it to be endless." (161-162; italics in original)
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
"But, for sake of illustration, we will, for a moment, admit, that the doctrine of the atonement stands on the ground over which we have just gone. I will state it, as it is often stated by those who believe it, which is by the likeness of debt and credit. The sinner owed a debt to Divine Justice, which he was unable to discharge; the Divine Being cannot, consistently with his honor, dispense with the pay, but says, I must have what is my due; but as the debtor has not the ability to pay the smallest fraction, Divine Wisdom lays a deep concerted mysterious plan for the debt to be discharged. And how was it? Why, for God to pay it himself!" (68)

"Did the Almighty know, before he made man, that he would become a sinner? Did he know that he would deserve an endless punishment? If the answer is in the negative, it supposes God to be wanting in knowledge, and that he created beings at an infinite risk, as he did not know what would be the consequences. If the question be answered in the positive, it proves, that an infinite cruelty existed in God; for unless that was the case, he would never have created beings, who, he knew, would be infinitely the losers by their existence" (73)

"But, it is argued, that a law cannot exist, without a penalty. This, undoubtedly, is an error." (87-88)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Topics: endless punishment
Author: Elhanan Winchester, 1751-1797
Title of Book: A Course of Lectures on the Prophecies that Remain to be Fulfilled, Vol. 1
Place of Publication: Norwich, England
"However the present generation may slumber and sleep, I venture, in the name of JEHOVAH, not to prophecy [sic] on my own head; but to declare, from the knowledge which I have in the prophecies, that the hour is at hand, when these things shall begin to be accomplished. The signs of the Saviour's second coming, must be evident to every eye" (18)

"We may now begin to look for the accomplishment of those leading prophecies, that our glorious and blessed Lord hath informed us of; and which I purpose particularly to consider, in the succeeding LECTURES. Upon the whole, I dare venture to give this warning to mankind: The day of the Lord is nigh; the judge is at the door. I would seriously say, Prepare to meet your GOD: Prepare, O ye sons and daughters of men! Prepare for those great events, that are to be accomplished. He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry: for the vision is yet for an appointed time; but at the end, it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry" (19)

"But, perhaps, some may answer— I do not believe a word of what you have been saying; it is a chimera of your own brain. But let such remember, that they themselves are striking examples of the truth of our Saviour's words: --'When the Son of Man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?' We are informed, that as it was in the days of Noah, so also shall it be in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage: until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be when the Son of man shall be revealed. For when they shall say, peace, and safety—then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape. But I speak to those that believe the sacred volume; those that believe the truth of the prophecy. 'Ye, brethren, are not in darkness; that the day should overtake you as a thief.' The day of the Lord hastens; our Saviour's coming is near. We are taught of God to believe, that our Saviour calls us to be up, to be awake, to be watching for his coming; to have our lamps trimmed, our lights burning, and we, ourselves, like unto men that wait for their Lord: that when he cometh, and knocketh, we may open unto him immediately. 'Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching: Who then is that faithful and wise steward, whom his Lord shall make ruler over his household, to give them their portion of meat in due season?' 'Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing: Of a truth, I say unto you, that he will make him ruler over all he hath. But and if that servant say in his heart, My Lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to beat the menservants and maidsens, and to eat and drink, and to be drunken: the Lord of that servant will come, in a day when he looked not for him, and at an hour when he is not aware and will cut him in sunder [sic], and will appoint him his portion with the unbelievers. And that servant who knew his Lord's will, and prepared not himself, neither did it according to his will, shall be beaten with many stripes: but he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes: for unto whomsoever much is given, of him much shall be required; and to whom men have committed much, of him will they ask the more.' Thus, it appears to be a matter of very great importance, that we read and hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which GOD hath revealed; keep them in our memories, lay them up in our hearts, so as to the suffer nothing to deprive us of them: that we may practice the commands of Christ, and keep ourselves in the love of GOD; looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, unto eternal life. To conclude-BLESSED IS HE THAT READETH AND THEY THAT HEAR, THE WORDS OF THIS PROPHECY, AND KEEP THOSE THINGS THAT ARE WRITTEN THEREIN; FOR, THE TIME IS AT HAND!' (21)

Length of relevant material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment
Author: John Cleaveland, 1722-1799
Title of Book: An Attempt to Nip in the Bud, the Unscriptural Doctrine of Universal Salvation
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Salem, Massachusetts
Publisher: E. Russell
Date of Publication: 1776
Library Location: 080 Sh64 EVANS 14684
Nature of Source: An open letter to those under the "sad and sorrowful delusion" of believing in the doctrine of universal salvation.

Comment:
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 07 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "[T]he time of life here on earth is our only probation-time for eternity. Behold now is the accepted time! Behold now is the day of salvation! God is now in Christ Jesus reconciling the world unto himself-he is now on a throne of grace, but after death is judgment; after death, they that are filthy will be filthy still; and they that are holy will be holy still . . . That after death unto the final judgment, while our bodies are in the grave, our souls will be in a state of fixed happiness or misery, according to the state we were in when we gave up the ghost;--if in Christ, of happiness; if out of Christ-of misery, and after the resurrection and final judgment the wicked will be in a state of punishment in soul and body forever and ever" (10)
"Ah, ah, you will say, false Teachers and their doctrines are to be avoided: But who are these false Teachers? I will answer. 1. False Teachers (wolves in sheep's clothing) are ungodly men; sensual not having the Spirit of Christ; they may have the form of godliness, yet they always deny the power thereof" (15)
"You must know, Sir, that drunkards, profane swearers, whoremongers, and the most abandoned sinners, feel no opposition to, no quarrelling in their sinful inclinations, affectations, and lusts, with such doctrine and preaching as the latter. - They do not say, it is a hard saying who can hear it? No, for it encourages them to bless themselves in their hearts, saying, we shall have peace, though we walk in the imaginations of our hearts to add drunkenness to thirst! And the little boys in your streets are already caught in the snare and say, 'We may swear and curse and lie and quarrel and do what we will that is bad without any danger of going to the devil in everlasting burnings; for Mr. M----- preaches that all men will be saved and be happy forever.'" (26)

"This new scheme of religion is totally destitute of divinity, self-denial, and true holiness; it is Antinomianism [sic] itself-contrary to all divine law of religion and holiness.- The carnal mind, which is enmity against God, it being not subject to the law of God, nor indeed can be, is cordially pleased with this new scheme!- This carnal mind is a mere selfish spirit-a selfish spirit is the very soul or spirit of wickedness, iniquity, or sin; - if a selfish spirit reigns in us, sin reigns in us, and we are the servants of sin and under the power of the devil, and hate the Father and hate Christ, and are enemies to both" (27)

"Christ says, he that believeth shall be saved and he that believeth not shall be damned; if damnation here is temporal, why not the salvation too? Follow this scheme but a little farther and you will deny a future state of reward as well as punishment, and then join issue with the atheistical and swinish Epicures, saying, Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die. q.d. When we die there will be an end of us; we shall cease forever to know either pleasure or pain, happiness or misery" (29)

"And as Christ's righteousness and atonement are sufficient for the salvation of the whole world; and as all mankind in general, by virtue of Christ's mediation and merits, have a temporary salvation-a day of God's forbearance-a space to repent, or a time of probation" (35)

"Query 2. Whether such a teacher ought not to be taken care of by authority as an enemy to mankind and a bane to civil society? 'Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people;' one sinner destroyeth much good-Let not an evil speaker be established in the earth' (44)

Length of relevant material:

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment
Author: Samuel Hopkins, 1721-1803
Title of Book: An Inquiry Concerning the Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Newport, Rhode Island
Publisher: Solomon Southwick
Date of Publication: 1783
Library Location: 080 Sh64 EVANS 17977
Nature of Source: Anti-Universalist tract by Samuel Hopkins, Pastor of the First Congregational Church in Newport, Rhode Island.

Comment:

Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 22 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "It is certain that all these evils which are denounced against the wicked, by which they are to be distinguished from the righteous, are inflicted, not in this life, but in a future state" (15)

"The prophet Isaiah speaks much of the dreadful evil, and unavoidable punishment, that will attend the wicked in the future state. . . [Quotes Isa. 3:10-11] Here the righteous and the wicked are set in opposition to each other, with respect to the fruit and end of what they do in this world. And if what is promised to the former, be endless life and happiness; can the threatening of the contrary, to the latter, be anything but directly the opposite, endless misery and punishment?" (16)

On Isa. 28:16ff: "This passage respects Christ, and points out the certain opposite consequences of believing on him, and rejecting him. To him that believeth, the most perfect security from all evil is promised. He shall be out of the reach of the rising floods of water, and the overflowing scourge. But all the rest shall have judgment without mercy, and be punished according to their crimes, and swept away by the irresistible billows, and overflowing scourge, of the divine vengeance and wrath! What a striking, awful representation of the future punishment of the wicked!" (17)

"[John 3:36] plainly tells us what will be the consequence. They who repent and believe the gospel, shall be saved; but all who do not, are left in, at least, as bad a case, as they could be in, had there been no Saviour" (25)

"[God] is long suffering, and disposed to give men time and opportunity to repent, not willing that any should perish" (43)

"The everlasting life and happiness of the righteous, and the destruction and punishment of the wicked, are, in a multitude of instances, and commonly, set in opposition to each other, as two direct contraries: Which could not be a proper way of representing it, or agreeable to the truth, if they were both to enjoy everlasting life together, in the kingdom of God. If the wicked are to be afflicted but for a time, and then delivered from misery, and be as greatly happy as the righteous and as long; then their perishing, their punishment, is as light as nothing, and but for a moment, compared with the eternal weight of glory and happiness, which they shall enjoy equally with the righteous; and therefore cannot be in opposition to eternal life, or the blessedness of the righteous, as this would be highly improper, and a gross misrepresentation" (75-76)

"Christ represents the rich man in hell as earnestly praying for a little mitigation of his torment; but meeting with denial: And Abraham tells him. There is a great gulf fixed, so that they who would come out of hell cannot . . . All these passages of scripture, therefore, and other of like tenor, are opposed to the deliverance of the wicked from hell, by their being brought to repentance, and to cry for mercy; and are not consistent with any future punishment, except an endless one. And this representation militates directly against the notion that future punishment is salutary, and inflicted by God in mercy to the wicked, and tending to their repentance and amendment, in order to their being fitted for eternal happiness. Directly the reverse of this is the idea held up in these passages, and, indeed, throughout the whole bible: The door of mercy is shut" (83-84)
Spirits in Prison (pp. 109-110)
"They who acknowledge the Divinity of Christ, and consequently, his infinite greatness and worthiness, must also acknowledge, that the atonement he has made for sin, by his obedience and sufferings, has infinite worth and merit . . . But if sin be not an infinite evil, then this atonement is infinitely more and greater than was necessary, in order to open the way for the pardon of it" (135)
"Had there been no sin, guilt, and misery, there could have been no such thing as redeeming love and grace, ever known, or thought of, by creatures . . . Therefore, redeeming love and goodness can be no further seen and celebrated, by the redeemed, than they realize their ill desert, and the infinite guilt and misery from which they are redeemed. In the light of this only is seen the goodness and sovereign grace of God to them, in their redemption" (151) obligation to obedience, yet with respect to the degree of intenseness, there is room to make a difference; and some sinners deserve and are threatened in the Scriptures with a sorer punishment than others. Upon which account it is, we read, That it shall be more tolerable for some than other sinners in the Day of Judgment; and that some shall be beaten with many stripes, while others are beaten with but a few" (9-10).

---

Excerpt (pages):

"the atonement of Christ was necessary, in order to make it consistent with the justice of God to pardon sinners" (223)

"What . . . could there be in the divine nature or character, which rendered the atonement of Christ necessary, in order to save sinners, but the divine justice? . . . Justice is one the moral perfections of God, which is essential to his nature" (223)

"God's justice is a disposition to punish the guilty. And his mercy is a disposition to pardon and save the guilty. Now the difficulty in the way of man's salvation was to reconcile God's disposition to punish, with his disposition to forgive: or in other words, to reconcile his justice with his mercy" (224)

"And though none but God could find a being, who was able to take the place of man, and by suffering, display his inflexible disposition to punish sin: yet he was able to provide himself a lamb without spot or blemish, whose sacrifice would satisfy divine justice . . . This was the only substitute to be found in the universe, equal to the great and arduous work of making full atonement for sin. Hence it was absolutely necessary that Christ should make atonement, if sinners were to be saved consistently with the justice of God" (224-25)

"Since the atonement was necessary . . . to render it consistent with his justice to exercise mercy, the atonement of Christ is sufficient for all" (225-26)

"[God] is as much bound to regard and maintain the dignity of his justice, as to express his mercy. Indeed, the mercy of God is not such an attribute as opposes his justice . . . God can no more disregard his justice in his conduct toward his creatures, than he can deny his own name, or destroy his moral perfection. If God had saved sinners from threatened and deserved punishment without an atonement, he would have sacrificed his justice, and have ruined his character and government" (227-28)

"The conditions of salvation are consistent with full satisfaction to divine justice through the atonement. Faith in Christ is required of sinners that they may be saved. Their faith is not saving on account of its own virtue, or excellence; but simply because it receives the remedy God has provided for the salvation of sinners. Though his justice be fully satisfied by the atonement, still it is consistent and proper for him to require sinners to believe on Christ that they may be saved" (228)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The Doctrine of Future Punishments Considered"

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: J. Soule and T. Mason

Date of Publication: March 1820

Library Location: APS II, Reel 135

Nature of Source:

Comment:

Researcher: Stephen Clarke

Date: 12 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "[T]he Universalists, as they call themselves, are divided in their opinions respecting punishment; one class denying it altogether, the other maintaining that it will be only for a limited period. Each, affecting to reason from the Goodness and Justice of God, and affirming, it would be contrary to the former attribute, to render any of his creatures miserable; and to the latter, to punish a soul with everlasting misery for the sins which had been committed by it in time. And wherefore? Because, say they, his goodness obliges him to prevent misery;-and secondly, because there is no proportion between the punishment and the crime" (113)

"As nothing less than this infinitely meritorious sacrifice could have been sufficient for the redemption of the world, we see in it the destructive nature of sin, and its infinite demerit. . . Dr. A. Clarke's Sermon on John iii.16." (115)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment
"The doctrine of Universalism is also calculated to subvert all civil governments, by weakening or destroying the principles upon which all such governments are founded, the sanctions of divine law. Let these restraints be removed, let it be inculcated on all classes in society, that a man may do as he will, or commit what wickedness he pleases in this life, and that he will not be punished in the next; or what amounts to the same thing, that his punishment will be only for a limited duration, and then who can pronounce himself safe from the hand of the assassin? What security has any man, that he will not be murdered n his bed, by the villain, who believes and declares, there is no future punishment? Who laughs at the notion of a devil and a hell, as mere nursery tales, trumped up for the purpose of scaring little children, and keeping hem in awe? . . . But I may be gravely told, that every civilized society has wisely provided against such evils, as before mentioned, commanding respect to the majesty of its laws, by inflicting the sanctions of punishments: and that if a villain were to act as stated above, he would be hung" (378-79)

"Alas! It cannot be denied, and the truth ought not to be suppressed, that one is a Backslider and he flies to this 'refuge of lies' to obtain relief. Another is a Drunkard, and he finds it quite convenient to embrace the doctrine. Another lives in a state of Adultery, and behold, he is an Universalist. Another is a -------- but where is the necessity of travelling down the catalogue of scandalous crimes; let any man look round on men of this profession, in his own neighbourhood, and then let him say, if their vices will not bear me out in making this statement" (381)
According to these scriptures there will be no successful calling upon the Lord after a certain period: and consequently, no salvation. There will be no believing unto salvation, but while we have the light; nor any admission into the kingdom, unless we be ready at the coming of the Lord. The present is the accepted time, the day of salvation, or the season for sinners to be saved. If we continue to harden our hearts through life, he will swear in his wrath that we shall not enter into his rest. Beyond a certain period there will be no more change of character; but every one will have received that impression which shall remain for ever, whether he be just or unjust, filthy or holy.

Realizing he was a dying man, I could not forbear addressing him as such, and put to him a very serious question. I prefaced it in the following manner: Mr.-- --, you are not insensible that a few months will close your temporal existence, and then you must appear before the dread tribunal of your Maker and Judge, who is holy himself, and approves of nothing but holiness in his creatures. I wish to ask you one question, to which I wish you to return an honest and direct answer. As you profess to believe that all mankind will be saved, whatever their character may be in this world, to bring future things present, are you willing to appear before your holy and impartial Judge with the character you now sustain?" (58)

"He owed he had taken much pains to believe this doctrine, which so well agrees with human depravity, allows men to slumber in carnal security, and invites to pleasure, carnal gratification and indulgence in every sin and vice, upon the daring presumption that God will not punish them in the future world" (59)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical: The Christian Herald

Place of Publication: Portsmouth, New Hampshire

Publisher: The Gazette Office

Date of Publication: July 1818 (Vol. 1, No. 2)

Library Location: APS II, Reel 79 (Microfilm)

Nature of Source: Letter (dated 5 June 1818) from David Millard for publication in the "Religious Intelligence" section of the Herald, reporting on missionary work in Mendon, Ontario County, New York.

Comment:

Researcher: Stephen Clarke

Date: 09 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "In September last, a request was given brother Badger, to visit the south part of Mendon, and preach to the people in that neighbourhood. At that time the religion of Christ, was by many in that place, not only neglected, but ridiculed; the name of God blasphemed; while the cause of Jesus, lay wounded and bleeding. Universalism, was a predominant opinion in the place, and a neglect of christian duties, with a corruption of morals, the fruit it bore. How different these, from the fruits of the spirit, as described by Paul in Gal. v.22, 23. Much was said in the place, concerning a 'new people,' some had heard they were universalists, some called them one thing and some another; the anxiety of the people, was however raised, to hear one of them preach. A large concourse assembled, at the first meeting attended by brother Badger, and a number of them returned home, wounded with the king's arrows . . . I am informed that seven universalists, in this reformation, have been converted from that doctrine, to the truth as it is in Jesus, and have become followers of Christ" (40-41).

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
"The supposed wise man taken in his own craftiness. There was a certain deacon of the congregationalist denomination, who was extremely fond of the clergy; whose house was always open for their reception, and where they were always received with much real pleasure . . . It happened, at a time, that a number of clergymen had assembled in his hospitable mansion, and a very good understanding subsisted; until the following unlucky circumstance put an end, in some measure, to their happy meeting. The deacon proposed this question. I find said he, that great divines differ greatly, in many important points, from each other; and this being the case with them, what shall we poor, ignorant men do?-One of the clergymen, as is usual, answered, you must go to your bibles. Well, said the deacon, if we poor, ignorant men must go to our bibles for information because our great divines cannot give it; why do we give them such great salaries?!!! The countenance of the clergyman fell, and so dreadfully was his ire kindled, that he never more visited the deacon; and absolutely refused to do this, when the deacon on his death bed, requested the favour!!! Tell it not in Gath." (17 January 1823, 6)

"HE SHALL SAVE HIS PEOPLE FROM THEIR SINS.-Matt.i.21." But the article focuses on who are "his people" and concludes that all are his people ("All, that the Father hath given to Christ are his people: But God hath given all things, all men, the heathen and the uttermost parts of the earth to Christ for a possession; therefore, all men, the heathen &c are Christ's people."). There is no discussion of "from their sins" (24 January 1823, 12-14)

"The Law has been represented to be at variance with the Gospel: and justice to be opposed to mercy. If such propositions were, in fact, true; God would be divided, and his kingdom could not stand. But . . . Divine Law is not incompatible with the gospel; nor justice in opposition to mercy . . . Moreover, the law and the gospel, with justice and mercy, are perfectly coincident as to their ultimate object. This object is two fold, the exhibition of the divine character and the felicity of the human kind. The law is our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ: and when we are thus brought to him, he, as a Saviour, is all our salvation and desire. Thus the ultimate end of the law and gospel are to lead men to happiness, and then to put them into enjoyment of it. This the case, likewise, with justice and mercy. They are not in opposition as to their ultimate object; but, perfectly, in accordance. They take or employ different methods to attain their object, but still that object is the same" (31 January 1823, 17)
On the unpardonable sin - "The doctrine of an unpardonable sin has been not only preached, but also believed in the christian world for many ages, as a revealed truth . . . But, I think, that it has been proved, that such a sin can never be committed; till the opposition and hatred between Christ and his people be mutual; and that this can never take place, till he, who is the same yesterday, to day, and forever; shall change and exercise hatred instead of love. Yet it is granted, that sins against light and knowledge, which are sins against the Holy Ghost; are attended with very peculiar aggravations . . . [cites the example of the Jews] . . . This subject should caution every one against committing crimes against their own understanding. In such a case, there is no excuse, which they can plead. God does and will visit with the severest consequences, sins of this nature" (Editor, 28 March 1823, 81-83)

"OF ATONEMENT, &c . . . The only idea, which I form of Atonement, is reconciliation, or the union and agreement of parties, who had been at variance; or where one party was at variance with another, which was and ever had been friendly . . . In the Atonement, which the Mediator has made, the parties are God and man.-Between the parties there is a variance, but this variance is not mutual. Man of the second part is an enemy to and at variance with God, of the first part; but God is not an enemy to, nor at variance with man, of the second part. The consequence then is, that reconciliation will only respect man; for, he, only, being unreconciled, needs reconciliation. Hence Atonement consists in that reconciliation of man, by which he becomes one in love, in desire and in happiness with God himself: his enmity to God is laid aside, and, in his affection, he is one with his maker . . . . It is . . . evident that our heavenly Father need not to be reconciled to man by the Mediator, because his love to man was the only cause of the coming and work of a Mediator. . . . As the Atonement did not respect the reconciliation of God to man; so neither did it respect any necessity of satisfying divine justice and rendering the salvation of man consistent with the divine perfections. . . . Thus the conviction of men by the example and sufferings of Christ in confirmation of God's love to the world, is designed to bring men to a disposition to confess and forsake their sin, and then the faithfulness and justice of God appears in its forgiveness." (Editor, 25 April 1823, 113-14)

"The passages, which seem to speak of atonement as a debt paid for the sinner's ransom; or of a price by which he is [bought]; or of sufferings, by which God is appeased and made propitious; or of answering the demands of the law in the sinner's stead; or working out a righteousness, which shall be the matter of man's justification before God, &c. &c. can never be understood in their literal expression without counteracting the plainest and most abundant declarations respecting the immutability of God; his love to the world as the reason why he sent his Son into the world, and his immutable purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus before the world began. The passages, likewise, which seem to declare that forgiveness is unsuitable and impossible till justice be satisfied by the sufferings and death of an innocent surety, are utterly incompatible with the declaration that every man shall die for his own sin, and that the innocent shall not be condemned and the guilty acquitted; nor will it comport with that reason, which God has given us, and which we are commanded to exercise" (Editor, 2 May 1823, 123)

Letter from a Calvinist: "Now what says the doctrine you advocate? When stripped of its deceitful covering, it proclaims in the ears of the drunkard, the thief, the robber, and the murderer a release from punishment, and an entrance into the joys of heaven with their hands imbrued in the blood of their fellow beings, and their souls stained with

"A Discourse on Hell, delivered in the Court-House, Buffalo, by the Rev. J.S. Thompson, A.M. . . . In this body dwell those propensities which induce man to sin. Bodily appetites and passions enter the man. Sin and suffering follow unlawful indulgences. In the self same body in which man offends, in it he shall undergo the reward of his folly, and there is no respect of persons. The doctrine of the resurrection prohibits the doctrine of future misery. Many have supposed that God will raise the dead in similar circumstances to those in which they departed this life, but the supposition is heathenish and anti-scriptural. . . . Our first state of being has been earthly, carnal, sensual, fleshly, corrupt and mortal; but our second mode of being, shall be heavenly, spiritual, intellectual, incorruptible and immortal . . . Blessed Saviour, never did the base notions of resurrection proclaimed by pretended orthodoxy, enter thy mind; nor were they known to thine apostles. On the contrary they proclaim glory, honor, and immortality to every soul of man, every son and daughter of Adam without distinction, as God's free gift to the whole human race. No rational man could ever have indulged in opposite sentiments, had not his mind been abased by superstition and dishonorable views of God. There could be no proportion between the finite feeble acts of men, and interminable pain or bliss for the evil or good which man may perform in this life . . . The future state of existence is entirely of free, sovereign and unmerited favor" (4 July 1823, 193-94).

18 July 1823, 210-13, Thompson argues against existence of devil: "Now can the just and merciful God, the father of mankind, and moral governor of the world, think these propensities to evil so insufficient for the trial of our virtues, that he must superadd the agency of an evil being so subtle, so malicious, and so powerful as the Devil?" (211)

"If belief in a devil did not obtain, men must either trace their sins to God as the author, or admit they originate with themselves"

"O how different from the doctrines of devils are the views of God exhibited in the gospel of Jesus! There we read of one God and Father of all, who is above all, through all, and in all. That it is his gracious intention to save and render eternally happy all his intelligent offspring. There we behold no mighty devil to blacken the moral horizon, or frustrate and baffle the designs of the Deity" (213)

---

Length of relevant material:

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical: Universalist Magazine

Place of Publication: Boston, Massachusetts

Publisher: Henry Bowen

Date of Publication: July 17, 1819 (Vol.1, No.3)

Library Location: APS II, Reel 243
Nature of Source:
Comment: Extract from sermon of Rev. Mr. Channing, delivered on the ordination of the Rev. Jared Sparks, to the pastoral care of the First Independent Church in Baltimore, May 5, 1819. Channing's sermon is reprinted in the Universalist Magazine because of "particular statements which clearly set forth universal salvation"—although other expressions "appear rather discordant" (The editor remarks, for example, "Now if mercy is always seeking the same end as justice seeks, and always acts in harmony with justice, then mercy never leaves 'the impenitent and unyielding' until justice does"

Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 14 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "God's mercy, as we understand it, desires strongly the happiness of the guilty, but only through their penitence. It has a regard to character as truly as his justice. It defers punishment, and suffers long, that the sinner may return to his duty, but leaves the impenitent and unyielding, to the fearful retribution threatened in God's word." (9)

"We look upon this world as a place of education, in which [God] is training men by mercies and sufferings, by aids and temptations, by means and opportunities of various virtue, by trials of principle, by the conflicts of reason and passion, by a discipline suited to free and moral beings, for union with himself, and for a sublime and ever growing virtue in heaven." (9)

Length of relevant material: Hard Copy (pages): Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment

Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: Universalist Magazine
Place of Publication: Boston, Massachusetts
Publisher: Henry Bowen
Date of Publication: July 24, 1819 (Vol.1, No.4)
Library Location: APS II, Reel 243
Nature of Source:
Comment: Extract from sermon of Rev. Mr. Channing, delivered on the ordination of the Rev. Jared Sparks, to the pastoral care of the First Independent Church in Baltimore, May 5, 1819. Channing's sermon is reprinted in the Universalist Magazine because of "particular statements which clearly set forth universal salvation"—although some expressions "appear rather discordant" (The editor remarks, for example, "Now if mercy is always seeking the same end as justice seeks, and always acts in harmony with justice, then mercy never leaves 'the impenitent and unyielding' until justice does"

Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 14 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The popular system... teaches, that man having sinned against an infinite being, is infinitely guilty, and some even say, that a single transgression, though committed in our early and inconsiderate years, merits the eternal pains of hell. Thus, an infinite penalty is due from every human being; and God's justice insists, that it shall be borne either by the offender, or by a substitute. Now, from the nature of the case, no substitute is adequate to the work of sustaining the full punishment of a guilty world, save the infinite God himself; and accordingly, God took on him human nature, that he might pay to his own justice the debt of punishment incurred by men, and might enable himself to exercise mercy. Such is the present system. Now, to us, this doctrine seems to carry on its front, strong marks of absurdity, and we maintain that Christianity ought not to be encumbered with it, unless it be laid down in the New Testament fully and expressly" (13)

"What can be plainer, than that God cannot, in any sense, be a sufferer, or bear a penalty in the room of his creatures? How dishonourable to him is the supposition, that his justice is now so severe as to exact infinite punishment for the sins of frail and feeble men, and now so easy and yielding as to accept the limited pains of Christ's human soul, as a full equivalent for the infinite and endless woes due from the world? How plain it is also, according to this doctrine, that God, instead of being plenteous in forgiveness, never forgives; for it is absurd to speak of men as forgiven, when their whole punishment is borne by a substitute" (13)

"Dialogue between a Universalist and a Limitarian":

Lim. "We believe that God is infinitely just as well as infinitely good, and that his goodness can never violate his justice; and justice says, that the soul that sins shall die. How will you reply to this?"

Uni. "... it is clear that the death of Christ was [not] necessary to render God compassionate toward us. Nor is it true that the death of Christ was necessary to render it just for God to show mercy to sinners; for if it had not been just to communicate favour to sinners, our heavenly father could never have given us the invaluable gift of his son. St. Paul says: 'He that spared not his own son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things?' This passage supposes that when our heavenly father delivered up his son for us all, he gave the richest gift, that heaven could bestow; and that a gift so great may fully warrant us in believing that all other necessary gifts, being smaller, will be freely given. Now how is it possible to suppose that the death of Christ was necessary to render it just for God to show us mercy, when the gift of his son was the greatest mercy that could be granted?" (16)

Lim. "... you contend that the penalty of the law is not eternal death. Of course, you think there was no legal claim by which the sinner could be holden in this state of condemnation, and therefore no atonement was necessary to satisfy the demands of divine justice on the sinner, whereby he might be liberated or set free" (Aug. 14, 1819, 28)

Uni. "[T]he system of atonement as generally held, designed to satisfy divine justice and to reconcile God to us, is as destitute of justice as the common doctrine of condemnation is of mercy. This common doctrine of reconciling our heavenly Father to us, supposes that Jesus Christ effected this by suffering in our room and stead. It supposes that Jesus suffered the penalty of the law which man had violated, and that in consequence of his suffering what, in justice, we ought to suffer, we are liberated from condemnation. Now what justice do we see in this? This is condemning the innocent and clearing the guilty, which is forbidden in the divine law" (28)

Length of relevant material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment
Author: S.B. Wylie
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Remarks on the Duration of Future Punishment"
Title of Periodical: The Presbyterian Magazine
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: Littell & Henry
Date of Publication: January, 1821
Library Location: APS II, Reel 193
Nature of Source: Presbyterian monthly magazine
Comment:
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 12 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "That all human beings, however wicked in the present life, nay, that all created intelligences, however diabolical in their nature and practice, shall be ultimately introduced to eternal felicity, or at least, by annihilation, be freed from pain, is a doctrine so fascinating to sinful creatures, that it is not at all surprising, it should have numerous votaries" (17)
"It may be proper, here to give notice, that in the progress of this discussion, I shall assume as a fact, that justice is a natural and necessary attribute of Jehovah; that this attribute is inexorable; that it must pursue its enemy, and punish its victim; that any compromise with mercy, would leave it no longer immaculate; in a word, that Jehovah can as soon cease to be, as he can cease to be just" (17)
"Having mentioned these postulates, I shall proceed to show, that if the punishment of sin be not eternal, its limitation to a definite period, must arise either from personal expiation, or vicarious atonement, or blanc annihilation" (17)
"If, therefore, the divine law be violated, the offender must be punished, either personally, or by his representative. Justice will retain the devoted victim in its grasp, until it has received the last farthing. The righteous and the wicked are alike the objects of its operation. It is the very cement of the universe, without which it must instantly be converted into a moral chaos" (18)
"By sin, we have contracted an infinite debt, and justice imperiously demands payment" (18)
"It is not at all maintained, that any act of a finite being, can be absolutely, or in any sense, infinite. A human action, in a strict and accurate sense, is neither virtuous, nor vicious. It is the principle from which it proceeds, the end in view, and its relation to the moral law, that entitle it to the epithet of virtuous or vicious. A mere physical act, independently of these, is neither morally good, nor morally evil . . . We do not therefore assert, that any human action is infinite; but we do assert, that sin is an infinite evil, inasmuch, as it is a violation of an infinite law, rebellion against an infinite God, and productive of infinite mischief" (19)

"In order to the salvation of the sinner, the covenant of grace required a substitutional equivalent. Could this have been given by the suffering humanity of our Lord? The humanity of our Lord, in all its exquisite suffering, and nothing in him but humanity could suffer, the divinity being impassible, could have made no more atonement for our sins, than the blood of a bullock or a goat smoking on the worldly sanctuary. The value of our Lord's sacrifice on the cross, therefore, must have arisen from something else-his deity. To this is to be referred the very essence of the worth of the sacrifice he offered. Give up his divinity, and the notion of his atonement is a mere chimera. Were Jesus the most exalted creature God ever made, or could make, (reverence!) he would have been utterly incompetent to make an atonement for our sins, as would have been the offering of the meanest reptile on the divine altar" (20-21)

Length of relevant material: 5 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment
Author: Elhanan Winchester
Title of Book: A Course of Lectures on the Prophecies
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Walpole, New Hampshire
Publisher: David Carlisle, for Thomas & Thomas
Date of Publication: 1800
Library Location: 080 Sh 64 EVANS 39117
Nature of Source:
Comment:
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 26 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Lecture XXXII. New Testament prophecies in favour of the doctrine of the Universal Restoration . . . The first prophecy that we meet with on this subject, is St. Matt.i. 21. 'And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name JESUS, for he shall save his people from their sins.' This all benignant prophecy is a counterpart to Gen.iii.15. We find one at the beginning of the Old Testament, and the other at the beginning of the New. These two passages are the foundation stones of the great doctrine of salvation and all other prophecies respecting this matter, are but larger comments and explications of them. We see by comparing these texts together, that the Seed of the Woman, and the Virgin's Son, are the same person, and JESUS is the Saviour's name. One prophecy declares that He shall bruise the serpent's head, or destroy the devil and his works: and the other, that He shall save his people from their sins." (256)
"If all men are his people, and the sheep of his pasture, and the purchase of his blood, and were given him by the Father, then this prophecy is plainly and fully to the purpose, and clearly proves the final restoration and deliverance of all men from their sins, and of course from their miseries; and shall as certainly be absolutely fulfilled as any prediction was ever justified by its corresponding event" (257)

Length of relevant material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment

Author: Georg Klein-Nicolai (pseudonym Paul Siegvolck); trans. John S.

Title of Book: The Everlasting Gospel, Commanded to be Preached by Jesus Christ, Judge of the Living and the Dead, unto all Creatures, Mark xvi.15. Concerning the Eternal Redemption Found Out by Him, Whereby Devil, Sin, Hell and Death, Shall at last be Abolished, and the Whole Creation Restored to its Primitive Purity; Being a Testimony against the Present Anti-Christian World

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Germantown, Pennsylvania

Publisher: Christopher Sower

Date of Publication: 1753

Library Location: 080 Sh 64 EVANS 7033

Nature of Source:

Comment:

Researcher: Stephen Clarke

Date: 26 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "If all Punishments determined by God for the Creatures, be they never so dreadful, when considered according to their inmost Center and Principle, are Works of divine Love, it necessarily follows from hence, that even the most dreadful Punishments which God in the World to come will inflict on bad Angels and Men, as far as they proceed from him, are grounded on no other Principle than that of Love; since God, who condemneth and sentenceth the corrupt Creatures to such Punishments, is the essential, everlasting and unchangeable Love, and nothing else but pure Love, and will remain such unto all endless Eternities, and therefore all whatsoever comes from him, must proceed from Love. If such Punishments, on God's Side, had another Ground but Love, then would that God, who punisheth the Creatures from such a Ground, be no God, because the true and only God, besides whom none other is to be found, is nothing else but pure Love, and who therefore can do nothing else but what springs from the Center of Love, and returns into the same. Hence now follows, without Contradiction, that not one of those Punishments which God has determined for the depraved Creatures, can, neither in this nor in the next World, be designed merely for the never-ceasing and endless Perdition and Torment of those divine Creatures that have their Origine [sic] from the unchangeable Love of God, but they must needs aim at and be designed for their final Preservation, Melioration, and Restoration, let them last so long as they will; because the deepest Ground of all Punishments of God determined for the Creatures, so far as they are his Doings, is his infinite and unchangeable Love, and it is impossible that Love should for ever and without End plague and torment that which it loves, but by all Pains and Torments seeks and can seek nothing else but the Amendment of its beloved Object. For Love thinketh no Evil; much less does Evil, or designs to do it" (3-4)

Length of relevant material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment

Author: Josiah Priest

Title of Book: Anti-Universalist, or a History of the Fallen Angels of the Scriptures; Proofs of the Being of Satan and of Evil Spirits: Intended as a Refutation of the Three Main Points of Universalism, namely that there is no Hell after Death; no Devil or Satan as a Being; and no Future Day of Final Judgment-In Two Parts

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Albany, New York

Publisher: J. Munsell

Date of Publication: 1837

Library Location: Z1201. S32 Unit 206 26786-26791 (Microfiche)

Nature of Source:

Comment:

Researcher: Stephen Clarke

Date: 27 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "But there has arisen, out of the great sea of religious opinions, in these latter days, a sect, namely, the Universalists, who deny not only the being of this one Satan, and his condjutors or associate evil spirits; but the whole of the penal sanctions of this great subject, religion, as being inflicted, or as existing after this life, notwithstanding the Scriptures seem to be against them-the text of which they acknowledge-whose influence we will not deny is very great, and pervades all ranks of people, all communions of Christians, far more than is commonly supposed, and is exerted against the doctrines of the orthodox sects, and as we believe the Bible itself" (iv).

"But if orthodox Christians are accused of setting up Satan as the rival of God, whom we believe to be a fallen angel, what are we to think of Universalists, and what ought they to think of themselves, when they say that the devil of the Scriptures, which they believe is human nature, the work of God's own hand, is set up by them as this rival? For they have never attempted to abate one jot or tittle of the virulence of this devil, in their theology" (56-57)

"Universalists teach us a doctrine, everywhere to be viewed, that if the evil exists at all, it is by the appointment of the Creator, for the wisest and best purposes . . . Whose conscience in this thing is the best, the universalist or the orthodox? We leave Universalists themselves to judge; for we make evil to arise from the abuse of free-agency, while Universalists make God its direct author" (59)

Length of relevant material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment

Author: Timothy Merritt

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "A Discourse on Future Punishment"

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher:

Date of Publication: June 1823

Library Location: BYU Stacks, BX 8201.M22x

Nature of Source: Methodist periodical.

Comment: The following excerpt from an anti-Universalist sermon illustrates a Universalist notion with the analogy of a man who employs a third party to dig a pit for his neighbor. This finds a partial echo in 2 Nephi 28:8 ("And there shall also be many which shall say...dig a pit for thy neighbor; there is no harm in this")-the same passage in which Dan Vogel finds other examples of anti-Universalist characterizations of Universalist doctrine ("...if it so be that we are guilty, God will beat us with a few stripes, and at last we shall be saved in the kingdom of God"). See Dan Vogel, "Anti-Universalist Rhetoric in the Book of Mormon," in Brent Lee Metcalfe, ed., New Approaches to the Book of Mormon: Explorations in Critical Methodology (Salt Lake City: Signature Books, 1992), 21-52.

Researcher: Stephen Clarke

Date: 06 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Here then the whole is resolved into the will of Deity as the sole and proper cause of sin. He knew all the sin that ever men would commit; he 'intended,' all that he knew; those who commit sin are 'only the instruments by which he effects his own purposes' . . . This would make God as truly and properly the cause of all the sin and misery in the world, as David was the cause of Uriah's death, or as a man would be the cause of the death of his neighbour, who should employ a third man to dig a pit, and then by motives which he knew and 'intended' should be irresistible, tempt him to walk in the way of that pit, that he might be taken and destroyed" (206).

Length of relevant material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: endless punishment

Author: David Harrowar
In the scriptures we have no express information that God is using the pains of hell, as means of conversion; nor of any repenting and preparing for future happiness, who are now in that wretched state. Some, indeed, suppose that Christ descended into the region of misery, and preached the gospel there, from the time of his crucifixion to his resurrection; but if that were really the case, we have no account that any success attended his ministrations. The sacred passage, on which this wild opinion appears to be founded, is evidently wrested from its proper meaning: for when he was on the cross, he informed one who was dying by his side, that they should both ascend directly to heaven . . . Christ does not speak of himself, as saying to any of mankind, 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you'-for ye repented in hell, and confessed my name before devils and damned spirits. The evidence is therefore clear and irresistible, that there is not one of the human race restored from hell, from the creation of the world down to the general judgment" (7-8)

"The doctrine of endless punishment, is undoubtedly founded on the infinite evil of sin . . . The main arguments for the infinite evil of sin, are these; that it is the violation of a law which is infinitely excellent—the contempt of an authority that hath no bounds—is a flagrant dishonor to a God of unlimited power and glory; and in its very nature tends to banish order, subordination, peace, harmony and happiness from the whole universe. Sin, is therefore a violation of infinite obligation" (16)

"But if sin is not an infinite evil; and the sinner does not deserve eternal punishment; then an infinite atonement is unnecessary" (17)
"A third end proposed, in the infliction of punishment, is to satisfy the claims of law and justice" (355)
"The most terrible torments of which the body is capable, are those produced by fire. The soul of man when reunited to the body, after the resurrection, will possess a capacity for suffering proportioned to her knowledge, and proportioned to her guilt; otherwise the justice of God would be robbed of its claims" (357)

"It is to be noted, that God, in the first place, is the end and beginning of all virtue: he gives the seal of the ideas to his servants, the intelligences, who, as faithful officers, sign all things entrusted to them with an ideal virtue . . . the Giver of forms distributes them by the ministry of his intelligences, which he has ordained as rulers and comptrollers over his works; to whom such a power is entrusted, in things committed to them, that so all virtue in stones, herbs, metals, and all other things, may come from intelligences, the governors" (85)
". . . we are to observe what divine names are ruling the intelligences, or spirits, to which the said planets are subject with their characters" (137)
"It is to be understood that the intelligences are the presiding good angels that are set over the planets; but that the spirits or daemons, with their name seals, or characters, are never inscribed upon any Talisman, except to execute any evil effect, and that they are subject to the intelligences, or good spirits" (146).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Melchizedek; Jesus Christ; atonement
Author: Salem Town (1779-1864)
Title of Book: A System of Speculative Masonry
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Salem, New York
Publisher: Dodd & Stevenson
Date of Publication: 1818
Library Location: 080 Sh64a no.45882
Nature of Source: Town's Speculative Masonry is based upon a series of lectures he delivered before the Grand Chapter of the State of New York (a Masonic body) some years earlier. His object in publishing these lectures was to provide the public with "a plain, yet concise description of Speculative Free-Masonry" (v).
Comment: Town explains that Melchizedek "was an eminent type of the promised Messiah."
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 02 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Melchizedeck, priest of the Most High God, who met Abram returning from the slaughter of the five kings and blessed him, was an eminent type of the promised Messiah. Abram appears to have looked through Melchizedeck to the great Shiloh, who was to come.-Hence, he kneeled before him to receive his kind benedictions. From this solemn and interesting event arose one of the most grand, sacred and sublime degrees pertaining to our Institution. Hence, ancient Masonry recognises Melchizedeck, as one of her most venerable patrons. His name, his office, his virtues and his typical character, furnish abundant instructions in a masonic point of view, and are wisely improved to direct our thoughts to the 'Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.' Hence also our ancient brethren, through him, could look forward to the Great High Priest of our salvation. The Jewish order of the priesthood from Aaron to Zacherias, and even till the coming of the Messias, was in confirmation of that great event, which issued in the redemption of man. All pointed to the eternal priesthood of the Son of God, who by his own blood made atonement for sin, and consecrated the way to the Holy of Holies" (120-121).
Length of relevant material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
“D. If there has been no law, according to the bible, there would have been no moral evil. It is, therefore, a fair question to ask, Why did God give a law to man?

C. Between good and evil there is an eternal distinction, independently of all law, and every being which possesses a moral capacity, must be capable of moral action. If, therefore, no law had been given, man would have passed the boundaries of good, and have performed actions which, in themselves were evil, without being amenable for his conduct, and while justice would have been incapable of punishing a violater [sic] of what was right. A law, therefore, is a necessary consequence of our nature; not given to make a distinction between good and evil, but to mark a distinction which previously existed.

D. . . . I cannot see any necessity that Christ should die; for certainly God might have rescued man without such a process.

C. Do you admit the attributes of God to be essential to his nature?

D. I do.

C. Then God must be necessarily just.

D. Yes.

C. Can then, I would ask, a being necessarily just, suspend his justice? If he can, he must, during that suspension, be destitute of justice; and this would prove that justice is not essential to his nature, which is contrary to what you have granted. But if God cannot suspend his justice, you must admit the necessity of that very atonement, for which you can see no occasion. If mercy can overcome justice, what is become of Omnipotence by which justice is supported? And if it cannot, how can man be rescued from impending woe without an atonement?” (133-35).

"Being thus delivered from an ignominious death" (517)

[from "the narrative and wonderful suffering of Ambrose Gwinett, who was condemned for a supposed murder and hanged and gibbetted, but was restored to life, and lived to endure much suffering for many years" (513)]
Topics: priestcraft; corruption of the churches
Author: Timothy Waterous Sr.
Title of Book: The battle-axe, and weapons of war: discovered by the morning light: aimed for the final destruction of priest-craft . . .
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Groton, Connecticut
Publisher: Timothy Waterous Jr.
Date of Publication: 1811
Library Location: BT 1101. W224x 1812 (Microfiche)
Nature of Source: Printed on a homemade press when no printer would publish it, this "highly apocalyptic pamphlet" by the Rogerene Quaker Timothy Waterous, "yoked republican politics and a class analysis of society to the coming of the end" [See Nathan O. Hatch, The Democratization of American Christianity (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1989), 44-45].
Comment: The following extracts offers one context for the term "priestcraft", roughly contempory with the publication of the Book of Mormon.
Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 02 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "In order that the reader may see the motive of the authors in the following treatise he may take notice that they have frequently used the words, Priest, Priest-craft, and ecclesiastical system; to hold forth a corrupt church, under the discipline of a false ministration; and that they have frequently used the words, true minister, and true church; to hold forth the a church under the discipline of a true ministration" (2).
"It is a true relation, that we do here relate, / And may the whole creation, such vicious conduct hate: / Had men of understanding, to view the present day; / The Priests would soon be landing, and Priest-craft float away / Why are we in such slavery, to men of that degree; / Bound to support their knavery when we might all be free; / They'r nothing but a canker, we can with boldness say; / So let us heft the anchor, let Priest-craft float away. / It is a dark confusion, that people welters in; / To harbour such delusion, to plead for righteous sin; / If truth could but come forward, and justice bare the sway; / The Priests would sink in horror and Priest-craft float away . . . The Priests are up in splendor, thay on the people ride; / They are furnish't with a tender, they go with wind and tide; / Their sail is ever standing; they'r almost over the bay;/ The Priests will soon be landing, and Priest-craft float away . . . The Martyrs have been murder'd by that infernal crew: / Now may the truth be further'd and Priests receive their due; / Tho' men do not believe it, the ground shall speak and say, / Their blood I have receive'd it, let Priest craft float away" (3-4).
Length of relevant material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: salvation through knowledge; learning; seeing God; men become gods
The first degree in Masonry, naturally suggests that state of moral darkness which begloomed our world. On the apostacy of our first common parent, not a gleam of light was left to irradiate and cheer his desponding mind. To his surprise and amazement, he found himself in total obscurity, as to those future and interesting scenes, on which he was entering. Soon, however, to his inexpressible joy, the first kind promise was made. This promise, though but a single ray, afforded much consolation . . . Adam, therefore, was, in a comparative sense, still in darkness, as to those great displays and wonderful manifestations of divine love and complacency, which were in due time made. Such is the very nature of the first degree, that every observing candidate is led to view his moral blindness, and deplorable state by nature. Under these impressions he enters on the second degree, which in view of his moral blindness, he is to consider emblematical of a state of improvement and trial. Such was the second state of Adam. Hence arises the idea of probationary ground. Some light and knowledge having been imparted, a reasonable improvement is not only required, but the probationer, by seeing his state, feels the increasing weight of obligation to the faithful discharge of duty. A due observance of all former requisitions, and a sincere desire to make advances in knowledge and virtue, open the way for the reception of more light, and prepare the mind for greater views, and consequent enjoyments . . . In advancing to the fourth degree, the good man is greatly encouraged to persevere in ways of well doing, even to the end. Although he meet with frowns and contempt from the ignorant and vain-glorious, and is reputed a man of naught, buffeted and rejected by the world, yet he has a NAME which no man knoweth, save he that receiveth it . . . Hence opens the fifth degree, where he discovers his election to, and his glorified station in, the kingdom of his Father. Here he is taught how much the chosen ones are honored and esteemed by those on earth, who discover and appreciate the image of their common Lord . . . With these views the sixth degree is conferred, where the riches of Divine grace are opened in boundless prospect. Every substantial good is clearly seen to be conferred through the great atoning sacrifice . . . In the seventh degree the good man is truly filled with heartfelt gratitude to his heavenly Benefactor, for all those wonderful deliverances wrought out for him, while journeying through the rugged paths of human life . . . Though dangers and snares are still found thick in his way, yet animated with the cheering prospect, and trusting in that faithful Providence which wrought his deliverance, he perseveres in the comfortable assurance of being finally admitted into the favorable presence of the great High Priest of his salvation. There he beholds in the eighth degree, that all the heavenly sojourners will be admitted within the veil of God's presence, where they will become kings and priests before the throne of his glory for ever and ever. Having been consecrated by that blood, shed for the remission of sins, born of the Spirit and anointed with the oil of Divine grace, having on the robe of righteousness, and the breastplate of salvation, he doubts not but a crown of glory and rejoicing will be put on his head, and the praises of the Redeemer for ever dwell on his tongue. Hence, in advancing to the ineffable degrees, the pious heart is filled with joy, in view of those infinite displays of the Divine character and perfections, which will continue to unfold through a boundless eternity. Here will be an endless progression in knowledge and holiness and consequent happiness.-Here the triumphant thought presents to the mind an everlasting series of new, sublime, ineffable, transporting joys.-Here is viewed the consummation of the great plan of human redemption, where every saint will be filled with the fulness of God for ever and ever” (75-82).

Length of relevant material: 7 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics:  salvation through knowledge; men become gods
Author:  Roelof van den Broek and Wouter J. Hanegraaff, eds.
Title of Book:  Gnosis and Hermeticism from Antiquity to Modern Times
Title of Article:  Gnosticism and Hermeticism in Antiquity: Two Roads to Salvation
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication:  Albany, New York
Publisher:  State University of New York Press
Date of Publication:  1998

Library Location:
Nature of Source:  A collection of essays by modern scholars of Gnosticism and Hermeticism, based on lectures given at the Amsterdam Summer University in August 1994.
Comment:  In his article, Gnosticism and Hermeticism in Antiquity: Two Roads to Salvation, Roelof van den Broek explains that both Gnostics and Hermetists sought "saving knowledge" by divine revelation, their ultimate goal being to "see," or know, God-and even partake of his divine nature. The Corpus Hermeticum, for example, speaks of being "made god."
Researcher:  Stephen Clarke
Date:  05 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "In both [Gnosticism and Hermeticism] there is a strong interest in knowledge, gnosis, of the divine world and in the final bliss of the soul. The Greek word gnosis means 'knowledge,' indeed, but the knowledge proclaimed by the Gnostics and Hermetists was not obtained by the accepted rules of methodological reasoning but by divine revelation. Their knowledge was a saving knowledge, which means that it was basically of a religious nature. Those who had gnosis knew the way to God, from our visible material world to the spiritual realm of divine being; its final goal was to know or to 'see' God, which sometimes went as far as becoming united with God or being in God" (1).

"When I speak about Hermeticism here I primarily have in mind the teachings and doctrines found in the so-called philosophical Hermetica. To these writings belong the seventeen treatises of the Corpus Hermeticum (henceforth abbreviated as CH), the Latin Asclepius, the Armenian Hermetic Definitions, and the Coptic Hermetica found at Nag Hammadi, of which the new treatise entitled The Eighth and the Ninth Sphere (Codex VI.6) is the most important . . . [T]he central concern of these writings is not philosophical but religious. Their authors were convinced that, in the end, it is not philosophical reasoning but divine revelation that leads to the truth. The philosophical Hermetica teach a way by which the soul can ascend to the divine realm above the sphere of the fixed stars from which it has originally come down. There it mingles with the divine powers, comes to 'see,' that is, to know God, which means to become absorbed in God. As the Poimandres puts it: 'This is the final good for those who have received knowledge [gnosis]: to be made god' (CH I.26). This deification will be fully attained after death when the soul ascends to God, but it can also be an inner experience during this earthly life, at the end of a process of Hermetic instruction culminating in mystical initiation. The ascent to the divine realm after death is described in the Poimandres (CH I.24-26), the inner experience in CH XIII, called On being born again and on the promise to be silent, and in the Eighth and Ninth Sphere" (5-6).

Length of relevant material: 3 pp.

Topics: secret combinations; Cain; Adam; priesthood; religion and civilization; modern recapitulation of biblical events

Author: Peter Sanborn

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Boston, Massachusetts

Publisher: Office of the Free Press

Date of Publication: 1829

Library Location: BYU Special Collections 366.1 Sa55 1829

Nature of Source: Minutes of an address delivered before an anti-Masonic convention in Reading, Massachusetts on January 15, 1829.
Comment: This anti-Masonic polemic seems to anticipate some of the extra-biblical elements of Joseph Smith's revision of Genesis. It makes reference to Adam's "priesthood" (cf. Moses 6:7,67) and speculates that Cain and his descendents were Masons (compare Moses 5:29-31; note similarity of "Master Mahan" and "Master Mason" and nature of penalty for violating oath of secrecy).

Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 16 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "As Cain, like Nimrod, rebelled against the priesthood and government of Adam; he, with Tubal Cain, no doubt, were masons; and by their infidelity, corrupted the earth; seduced the pious descendents of Enoch; the Morgan cry was heard;--for the sacred historian tells us 'the earth was filled with violence'" (16).

Length of relevant material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: sectarian strife
Author: Timothy Waterous Sr.
Title of Book: The battle-axe, and weapons of war: discovered by the morning light: aimed for the final destruction of priest-craft . . .
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Groton, Connecticut
Publisher: Timothy Waterous Jr.
Date of Publication: 1811
Library Location: BT 1101. W224x 1812 (Microfiche)
Nature of Source: Printed on a homemade press when no printer would publish it, this "highly apocalyptic pamphlet" by the Rogerene Quaker Timothy Waterous, "yoked republican politics and a class analysis of society to the coming of the end" [See Nathan O. Hatch, The Democratization of American Christianity (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1989), 44-45].

Comment: In the following extract, Waterous appraises the political and religious situation of his day and sees contention and division everywhere. He asks how anyone can trust the Bible when so many sects interpret it so differently.

Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 02 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "And now let us take a view of mans standing at this day. 1st. As to his governments. We see the nations contending, and smiting one against another; and dashing to pieces like a potters vessel . . . And we also see internal divisions, treason, rebellions, riots, and contention; in every nation that is yet standing. 2l, As to his religion, we see it broken into numerous sects. We see the Roman Catholic, the Church man, the Presbyterian, the Baptist, the Methodist, the Quaker, the Seven-day Baptist. And though their principles are as differing one from the other, as black is to white; yet they all appear to be contending earnestly for the faith; and when they preach their doctrine, they will hold their bible before them, confidently testifying that the bible is a witness by which they prove every part of their principles to be according to the word of God. And thus they are holding up their standards according to their several abilities, unto every one that hath ears to hear, saying, this is the way walk therein. And what shall we learn by all this: for they all appear to be well suited with their principles. And our youths are continually coming up, and landing in this chaos of confusion. Thus the earth is groaning, and traveling with her inhabitance, and none of her sons that she hath brought up, is able to take her children by the hand and lead them in the plain paths of wisdom: but they must exeret their wits in contriving instruments of death for each others destruction. It might move our hearts with sorrow; to see the innocent youth born into the world, a world that he was never in before, and therefore knows nothing of its goods, and evils; but must come up without experience in such a time as this . . . We frequently hear this proverb; that every generation grows wiser, and wiser. And when we look upon the conduct of our forefathers, and think of the folly of bowing down to a graven image; burning incense to the sun and moon, and giving great sums of money, to Popes, and Priests, to pardon our sins; we are apt to think it is a true saying: and indeed, it would appear very strange, if the world could learn nothing, from generation, to generation; seeing we have so many cautions by the misconduct of our forefathers. But in what age of the world did disorder and confusion, prevail more than at this present day? And when did there appear a greater schism in the Christian body? Or when did religion wear a more gloomy aspect then at this time? It causes people to reel to and fro and stager like a drunkard: for the inconsistency of so many kinds of religion being taught by one book of directions, induces people to believe that everything is right, or nothing. And some have turned Universalists, who conclude that Christ suffered to justify people in the breach of his own commands; that the Lord may except all this confusion at some rate, or other. And some have turned to be Deist; who conclude, if the bible can be warped to favor so many kinds of religion, it is all wrong; so they have passed their judgement upon it, that it is a piece of confusion; being composed of its own oppositions, and inconsistancies. And well they may, for what man having only the light of nature, to behold religion in this frame of disorder, and yet said to agree with the bible; could believe that the bible is a true guide to lead men to happiness?" (18-19).

Length of relevant material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: translation
Author: Francis Barrett
Title of Book: The Lives of the Adepts
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: London
Publisher: Lackington, Allen & Co.
Date of Publication: 1814
Library Location: BYU Stacks, QD 13.W35
Nature of Source: A brief overview of the lives of several famous alchemists with selections from some of their "most celebrated treatises on the theory and practice of the hermetic art."

Comment: Barrett's book contains an autobiographical sketch written by 14th century French alchemist Nicholas Flamel (or by someone writing in his name). Flamel's story has some interesting parallels to Joseph Smith's account of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, contained in the Pearl of Great Price: he recounts finding "a gilded book, very old and large" containing mysterious engravings and "Hieroglyphic figures"; desiring to "find out the interpretation and meaning thereof", he copies some of the figures and shows them to "the most learned men in Paris", who do not understand them and who mock him when he reveals their provenance.

Researcher: Stephen Clarke
Date: 23 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "I, Nicholas Flamel, Scrivener, living at Paris, Anno 1399, in the Notary-street, near S. James, of the Bouchery, though I learned not much Latin, because of the poorness and meanness of my parents, who notwithstanding were (by them that envy me most) accounted good and honest people. Yet, by the blessing of God, I have not wanted an understanding of the books of the philosophers, but learned them, and attained to a certain kind of knowledge, even of their hidden secrets . . . After the death of my parents, I, Nicholas Flamel, got my living by the art of writing, ingrossing inventories, making up accounts, keeping of books, and the like. In this course of living, there fell by chance into my hands a gilded book, very old and large, which cost me only two florens. It was not made of paper or parchment, as other books are, but of admirable rinds (as it seemed to me) of young trees. The cover of it was brass; it was well bound, and graven all over with a strange kind of letters, which I take to be Greek characters, or some such like. This I know, that I could not read them, nor were they either Latin or French letters or words, of which I understand something. But as to the matter which was written within, it was engraven (as I suppose) with an iron pencil or graver upon the said bark leaves, done admirably well, and in fair and neat Latin letters, and curiously coloured. It contained thrice seven leaves, for so were they numbered in the top of each folio, and every seventh leaf was without any writing; but in the place thereof, there were several images or figures painted . . ."

[The author proceeds to give a description of the various figures depicted in the first five leaves, which he at one point refers to as "Hieroglyphic figures" (33).]

"As for what was in all the rest of the written leaves, which was wrote in good and intelligible Latin, I must conceal, lest God be offended with me, should send his plagues and judgments upon me . . . Having thus obtained this delicate and precious book, I did nothing else, day and night, but study upon it; conceiving very well all the operations it pointed forth, but wholly ignorant of the prima materia with which I should begin, which made me sad and discontented. My wife, whose name was Perrenelle, whom I loved with equally with myself, and had but lately married, was mightily concerned for me, and with many words comforting me, earnestly desired to know how she might deliver me from this trouble. I could no longer keep counsel, but told her all, shewing her the very book, which, when she saw, she became as well pleased with it as myself, and with great delight beheld the admirable cover, the engravings, the images, and exquisite figures thereof, but understood as little of them as I. Yet it was a matter of consolation to me to discourse, and entertain myself with her, and to think what we should do, to find out the interpretation and meaning thereof. At length I caused to be painted within my chamber, as much to the life or original, as I could, all the images and figures of the said fourth and fifth leaves. These I shewed to the greatest scholars and most learned men in Paris, who understood thereof no more than myself: I told them they were found in a book which taught the philosopher's stone. But the greatest part of them made a mock both of me, and that most excellent secret . . ." (34).

Length of relevant material: 4 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: [Vision, corruption of churches, preparation for Second Coming]

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical: Wayne Sentinel

Place of Publication: Palmyra, New York

Publisher: Pomeroy Tucker

Date of Publication: 22 October 1823 (Vol.1, No.4)

Library Location: W 367 (Microfilm)

Nature of Source: Palmyra newspaper published by Pomeroy Tucker.

Comment: The following account was reprinted from the Mohawk Herald under the heading "PROGNOSTICATION!!"

Researcher: Stephen Clarke

Date: 10 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Remarkable Vision and Revelation: as seen and received by Asa Wild, of Amsterdam, (N.Y.) Having a number of months enjoyed an unusual degree of the light of God's countenance, and having been much favored of the Lord in many respects; and after having enjoyed the sweetest, and most soul ravishing communions with Him; the Lord in his boundless goodness was pleased to communicate the following Revelation, having in the first place presented me with a very glorious Vision, in which I saw the same things: In the first place I observe that my mind had been brought into the most profound stillness, silence, and awe; realizing in a remarkable manner the majesty, presence and glory, of that Being before whom all nations are as the drop of the bucket. It seemed as if my mind, though active in its very nature, had lost all its activity, and was struck motionless, as well as into nothing, before the awful and glorious majesty of the Great Jehovah. He then spake to the following purport; and in such a manner as I could not describe if I should attempt.-He told me that the Millenium state of the world is about to take place; that in seven years literally, there would scarce a sinner be found on earth: that the earth itself, as well as the souls and bodies of its inhabitants, should be redeemed, as before the fall, and become as the garden of Eden. He told me that all the most dreadful and terrible judgments spoken of in the blessed scriptures, were to be executed within that time; that more than two thirds of the inhabitants of the world would be destroyed by these judgments: some of which are the following-war; massacres; famine; pestilence; earthquakes; civil, political, and ecclesiastical commotions; and above all, various and dreadful judgments executed immediately by God, through the instrumentality of the Ministers of the Millenial dispensation; which is to exceed in glory every other dispensation; a short description of which may be seen in the last chapter of Isaiah, and in other places. He also told me, that every denomination of professing christians had become extremely corrupt; many of which had never had any true faith at all; but are guided only by depraved reason, refusing the teaching of that Spirit which indited [sic] the scriptures, and which alone can teach us the true meaning of the same; even as the diamond alone can cut its fellow. He told me further, that he had raised up, and was now raising up, that class of persons signified by the Angel mentioned by the Revelator, xiv.6,7, which flew in the midst of heaven; having the everlasting gospel to preach: that these persons are of an inferior class, and small learning: that they will be rejected by every denomination as a body; but soon, God will open their way, by miracles, judgments, &c.: that they will have higher authority, greater power, superior inspiration, and a greater degree of holiness, than was ever experienced before: inasmuch as this is far the most glorious dispensation of divine grace and glory. Furthermore he said that all the different denominations of professing christians, constituted the New Testament Babylon; and that he should deal with them according to what is written of IT, in the book of Revelation: that he is about to call out all his sincere children, who are mourning in Zion, from the oppression and tyranny of this mother of harlots; and that the severest judgments will be inflicted on the false and fallen professors of religion: which will immediately commence in Amsterdam, and has already commenced in different parts of the world, and even in this country. And though their operation at first are gradual, and under cover, yet it will soon be generally seen that it is the immediate execution of divine vengeance upon an ungodly world. Much more the Lord revealed, but forbids my relating it in this way. But this, I have written and published, by the express and immediate command of God: the truth and reality of which, I know with the most absolute certainty.-Though I have ever been the most backward to believe things of this nature; having been brought up in the Calvinistic system, and having had a thorough understanding of the same, and was fully established in the belief of it for several years after I experienced the love of God in my heart: but finding the Calvinists did not understand the glorious depth of holiness, and conformity to the divine character in heart and practice, which I saw was our privilege and duty, I joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, which I found had much clearer and more scriptural view on these and some other points than the Calvinist; though I soon saw that they as a body were very corrupt, having departed much from their primitive purity and holiness. I also saw that their first founders did not travel into all that was their privilege; and that vastly greater depths of holiness might have experienced, even by them. Yet I thank God for what light I have received through their instrumentality, but know that much greater and more glorious light is about to burst upon the world. Amsterdam, October, 1823.
Robinson defines Adam as the progenitor of the human race, created by God and placed in a state of happiness in the Garden of Eden. Similar to Mormon doctrine, Robinson claims that Adam's fall not only led to physical death and the end of immortality, but more importantly, spiritual death. To Robinson, spiritual death, or separation from God's presence, was the greater of the two deaths that resulted from Adam's fall. According to Robinson, the remedy to spiritual death is Christ's atonement because it offers us spiritual eternal life. Robinson, however, does not seem to view the fall as a fortunate thing that was part of God's plan in enabling his spirit children to come to earth.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "The curse pronounced on man includes not only physical labor and toil, the barrenness of the earth, and its tendency to produce shrubs and weeds, which retard his exertions, and render his toil more painful and difficult, it includes not only the physical dissolution of the body, but also the exposure of the soul, the nobler part, to 'everlasting death'"(6).

We may suppose "that the death denounced upon man was rather moral and spiritual death; in that very day he should lose the image of his Maker, and become exposed to that eternal doom which has justly fallen upon all his race"(6).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Nature of Source: This is a sermon delivered at the institution of a society for the encouragement of foreign missions. The sermon is based on Revelations 14:6-7 "I saw an angel having the gospel to preach"(3). While preaching on the importance of missionary work Lathrop also talks of an apostasy.

Comment: The purpose of Lathrop's sermon is to convince people to contribute to a missionary fund. However, in the sermon he talks of a great apostasy that took place after the time of St. John. During this time, according to Lathrop, truth and pure religion disappeared. According to Lathrop, this apostasy was brought to an end with the Protestant reformation and their missionary efforts.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): Lathrop talks of an apostasy: "We here learn (in Revelations), that after St. John's time, there would be, in the Christian church, a great apostasy from the truth, and that pure religion would be succeeded by the worship of images and departed saints; that Christian liberty would be subverted by spiritual tyranny and cruel persecution, and that this afflicted state of the church would continue, in a greater or less degree, for 1,260 years"(7).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Baptism for the Dead

Author: Edward Robinson and William Smith

Title of Book: Dictionary and History of the Bible

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: R Worthington

Date of Publication: 1879 (original publication in 1835 by Crocker and Brewster)

Library Location: BS 440.R63X

Nature of Source: This Bible Dictionary, written by Edward Robinson was one of the books in the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institution, donated by John Oakley. Robinson was a professor of sacred literature in theological seminary at Andover.

Comment: Robinson states that baptism has two meanings: 1.) it is the holy ordinance by which persons are admitted as members of the Christian community. 2.) Baptism is a symbolic meaning for being overwhelmed by suffering and grief. For this second meaning, Robinson cites Mark 10:38: "But Jesus said unto them, Ye know not what ye ask: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of? And be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" (see also Matthew 20:22 and Luke 12:50). Robinson then concludes that baptism for the dead, as mentioned in 1 Cor 15:29, is to be understood in this symbolic sense. In other words, according to Robinson, baptism for the dead is not literal, but a symbolic overwhelming suffering for a loved one who has died.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "Baptism is also taken in scripture for sufferings, with which one is, as it were, overwhelmed...Baptism for the dead, in 1 Cor. 15:29, is probably to be understood in this sense"(35).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Book of Mormon
Author: David Hasselton
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Confession and Testimony against Universal"
Title of Periodical: The Adviser, or Vermont Evangelical Magazine
Place of Publication:
Publisher:
Date of Publication: April 1809
Library Location: Microfilm 051.B
Nature of Source: This article is a record of Hasselton's confession and testimony made in the presence of a large assembly against Universalist doctrine. Hasselton had been an advocate of Universal Salvation for about twenty years, but had a powerful vision, which led to his subsequent denunciation of the doctrine.

Comment: Grunder compares Hasselton's account to the conversion of Alma the Younger in the Book of Mormon. Similarities between the two experiences include: 1.) both had an experience where they felt to be in the clutches of hell, 2.) they abandoned their former sentiments and warned others to do the same, 3.) as a result of their change they found great peace. However, differences between Alma and Hasselton's experiences include: 1.) Hasselton was not struck dumb like Alma, 2.) Hasselton was not a non-believer before his experience as Alma was, 3.) Hasselton's vision seemed to focus on how he needed to change his beliefs whereas Alma's seemed to focus on his sins and a need to change actions.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Hasselton describes pains of hell similar to those of Alma: "The pains of hell had taken hold upon me. - My whole frame was in agitation and indescribable horror in my mind"(89).

I had often thought that none but God could convince me of my error; and I now thought he was about to do it, to my utter and eternal ruin. I continued in this situation for about twenty-four hours when I was brought to behold that I was in the hands of a sovereign, all-wise, and sin-hating God, and justly exposed to his wrath. I was convinced there was a hell for the unjust, and felt disposed to abandon my former sentiments, and to believe in and receive, the true and living God. I have since had peace of conscience, and, I trust, joy in the Holy Ghost"(89-90).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Nature of Source: Grunder describes this as an "essentially naïve, jingoistic, but extremely popular panoply of American virtues in the face of British wickedness in the war of 1812." However, he justifies putting it on the list because Hunt writes his book in biblical style, which, according to Grunder, illustrates "the ease with which works that sounded like the Bible could be written and marketed in the early United States."

Comment: The author admittedly tries to imitate Biblical style in his writings. He divides his book into chapters and verses and uses similar wording as the Bible. His work does not include books (like Matthew, Mark, etc.) but instead just has chapter and verse numbers. To the untrained eye, the book clearly does resemble Biblical style. However, a trained scholar in ancient texts would easily be able to pick out obvious differences. Furthermore, there is clearly a major difference in content between Hunt's book and the Book of Mormon. Joseph did not try to merely write a familiar historical event in Biblical fashion. His book was of a content never before heard, an entirely new history, and one that he claimed to be directly from God.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "17 Now it was on the eighteenth day of the fifth month, in the same year, in the afterpart of the day..."(310).

"24 Now these things happened nigh unto a place called Carthagene, on the borders of Spain, and when the Spaniards beheld the skill and prowess of the people of Columbia, they were amazed"(311).

"2 But lo! When his fleet arrived there..."(315).

"39 Now it came to pass, when Jackson heard that Pensacola, the capital of west Florida, had become a resting place for the enemies of Columbia..."(263).

Length of Relevant Material: 317 pps. In Biblical style

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Corruption of the Churches, Sectarian Strife
Author: Ozias Hart
Title of Book: The Christian System, In Its Native Simplicity, or, the Errors of the Different Religious Denominations Corrected
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Nature of Source: The author makes an examination of the religious systems of different denominations in order to discover what is truth and what is error in each of them. Hart accuses most Churches of being corrupt and claims that great errors are found within each of them. He further laments the fact that competing sects destroyed the harmony and peace of Churches.

Comment: This book gives the reader insight into the competing and corrupt Churches during Joseph's time. Hart claims that the revivals of religion taking place at that time were no more than shows, which encouraged fanaticism and filled one's mind with delusion and self-deception. These writings help one to better understand the state of confusion Joseph found himself in over the question of which Church was right and which one he should join.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "The author for some time been seriously impressed with a sense of the unhappy differences existing between the different denominations of Christians, and supposing that material errors are imbibed by the leaders of every denomination, which tend to pervert that union and harmony necessary to peace..."(advertisement).

"Supposed revivals of religion soon subside, the goodness of the most zealous is as the morning cloud, and they return to a state of far greater stupidity than before. They forsake one mode of sinning, and adopt another less conspicuous and more agreeable. The Churches are in this way augmented and corrupted, so that it is to be feared that Churches in this way become more corrupt than some other parts of community"(20).

Length of Relevant Material: 10

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Earth and the environment

Author: John Hubbard

Title of Book: The Rudiments of Geography

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Barnard, VT

Publisher: Joseph Dix

Date of Publication: 1814

Library Location: Microfiche 080 Sh64a no. 31763

Nature of Source: This is a textbook printed for schools located near the Smith family in Vermont in 1814. At that time, Joseph was eight years old. The text says that space is infinite and is filled with systems.

Comment: The text is 240 pages long and only in two pages does it mention space. Further Joseph's family left Vermont and moved to New York when he was ten years old. Thus, it is not likely that he was ever very familiar with this textbook.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "Space appears to be infinite in extent"(10).
"Space appears to be infinitely extended in every direction, and this space appears to be filled with systems"(12).
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Earth and the Environment, Astronomy
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Christian Philosopher
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: E.C. and J. Biddle
Date of Publication: 1849 (original publication in 1826 in New York by G. and C. Carvill)
Library Location: BL 240.D5 1861 Harold B. Lee Library
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester, New York library along with Dick's, The Philosophy of a Future State. The Manchester Library was a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith's family farm and some have suggested that Joseph may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from books in this library. Dick states in the introduction to The Christian Philosopher, that his purpose is to illustrate the connection of science and philosophy with religion.
Comment: Dick spends much of this book describing the earth, space, the solar system, the immense number of bodies impelled throughout the heavens, motions of the planets and solar systems, etc. In his writings he emphasizes the immensity and endless nature of space and how all of this testifies of God's power, for it is God who presides over and controls all.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "If we consider the immense number of bodies thus impelled through the vast spaces of the universe - the rapidity with which the comets, when near the sun, are carried through the regions they traverse; if we consider the high probability, if not absolute certainty, that the sun, with all its attendant planets and comets, is impelled with a still greater degree of velocity towards some distant region of space, or around some wide circumference; that all the thousands of systems of that nebula to which the sun belongs are moving in a similar manner; that all the nebula in the heavens are moving around some magnificent central body; in short, that all the suns and worlds in the universe are in rapid and perpetual motion, as constituent portions of one grand and boundless empire, of which Jehovah is the Sovereign..."(44).
Length of Relevant Material: 150 + pages
Hard Copy:
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Comment: Woodman argues that God is immaterial. His primary argument is that God cannot be material and omnipresent at the same time. According to Woodman, God is spirit, and spirit is not matter. He quotes Col. 2:5. In this verse, Paul is in Rome but tells the church in Colossia that he is with them in spirit. Woodman argues that this proves that Paul could be physically in Rome, yet present with the Colossians in spirit. His conclusion is matter cannot be in two places at the same time, therefore, spirit is not matter and God is spirit.

Gibson, on the other hand insists that God has a body and is matter; he is a material, intelligent being. Gibson argues that God's form cannot be present everywhere, but his power can be.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): Woodman stated: "In a number of the Millennial Star, a copy of which I hold in my hand, for March 1, 1849, there are some questions and answers, one of which is, 'What is God?' The answer is, 'He is a material, intelligent personage, possessing both body and parts.' Now, with all charity, I must unhesitatingly say, that it is my firmest conviction, that this dogma is based upon a fundamental error..."(1).

Again, Woodman argues: "Now I have told you that God is love, but God in his love is not in space; you cannot fill the walls of this room with love, because it is not a thing belonging to matter and has no relation to space"(10).

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pps.

Hard Copy: Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: R. Schoyer
Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)
Library Location: 237 D55 1830 Rare Books Collection
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.
Comment: Dick states that God is omniscient, omnipresent, and all wise. He has no visible form and no sensible qualities and can fill immensity with his presence. Christ, on the other hand, has a glorified, physical body which can only be present in one place at one time. From these descriptions of their respective bodies, it is clear that Dick also understands God and Christ to be two distinct beings.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Describing God, Dick states: "The Deity, being a spiritual, uncompounded substance, having no visible form, nor sensible qualities, 'inhabiting eternity,' and filling immensity with is presence - his essential glory cannot form an object for the direct contemplation of any finite intelligence"(188).
    Describing Christ, "since the glorified body of Christ is a material substance, and consequently, limited to a certain portion of space, it cannot be supposed to be at all times within the view of every inhabitant of heaven"(186).
Length of Relevant Material: 3 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Happiness as God's Purpose for Man
Author: Joseph Lathrop
Title of Book: The Constancy and Uniformity of the Divine Government, Illustrated and Improved in a Sermon, Preached in Springfield, April 7, 1803
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Springfield, MA
Publisher: Henry Brewer
Date of Publication: 1803
Library Location: Microfiche Z1201.S32 unit 184 19167
Nature of Source: In this sermon Lathrop talks about connections between virtue and happiness and vice and misery.
Comment: Grunder sees a parallel between Lathrop's teachings and Alma 41:10 "Do not suppose, because it has been spoke concerning restoration, that ye shall be restored from sin to happiness. Behold, I say unto you, wickedness never was happiness." He also mentions similarities between Lathrop's sermon and Joseph's teaching: "Happiness is the object and design of our existence and will be the end thereof, if we pursue the path that leads to it; and this path is virtue, uprightness, faithfulness, holiness, and keeping all the commandments of God..." (The teachings of Joseph Smith p.310-311).

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): Lathrop teaches: "We see a connection between virtue and happiness and between vice and misery. This connection is a permanent establishment. There never has been, and never will be a time when vice will make men happy, or virtue make them miserable"(6).

"Though they (men) cannot comprehend his vast and eternal plan, yet they may see enough to learn, that their safety depends on submission and obedience to his will. And whatever variety there may be in his dispensations, they are all directed to the same end, to make men pious, virtuous, and happy. Such ever has been and ever will be the design and tendency of his government over intelligent beings"(6).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Heaven

Author: Thomas Dick

Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: R. Schoyer

Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)

Library Location: 237 D55 1830 Rare Book Collection

Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.

Comment: Dick described heaven as a place of perpetual felicity. However, two things that he talks about in regards to heaven are especially similar to Joseph Smith's concepts of heaven and exaltation. First, Dick describes heaven as a place of eternal progression. Secondly, he believes that those who are worthy to go to heaven will achieve moral perfection at some point.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Heaven is a place of "perpetual and uninterrupted felicity"(235-236). There, our renovated faculties will be employed in contemplating the Divine glory"(235). In heaven all "physical and moral obstructions which now impede our progress, and obscure our intellectual views shall be completely and forever removed"(236). "W are to be assured, that the foundation of the felicity to be enjoyed in that world, rests on the absence of every evil, and the attainment of moral perfection"(181).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Hell
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: R. Schoyer
Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)
Library Location: 237 D55 1830 Rare Book Collection
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.

Comment: Dick's definition of hell has some parallels to the Mormon concept of outer darkness. In fact, Dick even uses the term "outer darkness." For Dick, part of what makes hell so miserable is that the unrighteous persons there will be deprived of God's greater glories. Whereas the righteous will see God as he is, those who go to hell will never have this opportunity. He states that the misery of hell far surpasses anything we can imagine from our mortal experiences.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Those who inhabit hell will be deprived of "the transporting view of the Creator's glory"(233).

They will be "confined to one dreary corner of the universe, surrounded by a dense atmosphere, or a congeries of sable clouds, they will be cut off from all intercourse from the regions of moral perfection, and prevented from contemplating the sublime scenery of the Creator's empire"(233).

Hell is a place of "painful sensations, gloomy and haggard objects, only dismal sounds," and those there will be "forever banished from the company of the benevolent"(234).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pps.
Hard Copy:
Nature of Source: Most of Stearns' writings deal with Masonic oaths. He characterizes the Masonic system as one that engages in self-righteousness, mockery, blasphemy, and murder. Stearns condemns Masonic oaths for violating the laws of God and country. He especially focuses on an oath he claims Masons are bound to take which may require them to take human life. Stearns further criticizes the use of Masonic titles such as High Priest" and claims that the use of such titles is profane blasphemous. Stearns uses quotes from the Bible stating that no one can take upon themselves these titles unless they are called of God to such a position. Finally, Stearns censures Christian churches for allowing Masons to remain in good standing in their church. Instead he admonishes churches to completely separate themselves from such darkness.

Comment: Anciently those who became Masonic traitors by revealing masonry were put to death by the authority of the institution. Stearns accuses Masons of continuing to practice this custom. He also lists thirteen men and lays their murders at the feet of "Masonic executioners." Stearns backs up many of his claims and accusations with Biblical verses. He asserts that the secretive oaths are contrary to the Bible's admonitions to "love thy neighbor," "love your enemies," and "bless and not curse."

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): Stearns primary purpose is to accuse Masonry in front of Christian churches. "...tell them of the blood it has shed in modern days, in England and America, and of the widows and fatherless children which it has cast upon the world - tell them of these things, and that this combination of High Priests, Grand High Priests, Sir Knights, Grand Commanders, Captain Generals exists throughout our country, and threatens to set aside the gospel of the blessed God to overthrow and annihilate the last remains of civil and religious liberty..."(13).

Members who take the oath are bound "to conceal murder and treason, and all other crimes of which any of the brotherhood may be guilty - to extricate a brother from his difficulty whether he is right or wrong - to wield the sword in his defense, and in defense of their religion - to look upon the enemies of one as the enemies of all - to stand forth and mete out vengeance to them and bring them to strict and condign punishment"(18).

"As to the nature of these oaths, I may safely say, that sentiments more abhorrent to the human heart - more subversive to the rights of man - more dangerous to the stability of a free government - more incompatible with the mild precepts of Christianity, were never inculcated by the Illuminati of Europe or by the ferocious Jacobins of the French school"(25).

" 'No man,' says the great apostle, 'taketh this honor unto himself;' (to be called High Priest,) 'but he that is called of God as was Aaron'"(28).

Length of Relevant Material: 39 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: History - Corruption of Churches, Sectarian Strife Author: Thomas Hamilton
Title of Book: Men and Manners
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Edinburgh
Publisher: William Blackwood
Date of Publication: 1833
Library Location: HBL Library Bookshelves E 165.H228 1968
Nature of Source: Hamilton is an Englishman travelling throughout the United States and in his section where he describes his travels in New England he describes the prevalence of camp meetings and revivals. Hamilton claims these things to be based in ignorant fanaticism and states that such religious exhibitionism are inconsistent with rational piety. Yet, he recognizes that they still confer benefit to people's character.

Comment: Hamilton's descriptions give the reader an insight into the strife and corruption that was taking place among the Churches of Joseph's time. Hamilton states that religious warfare was being waged with much bitterness, especially in the countryside and small towns. He describes how rival clergymen attacked each other from the pulpit, opposition sprang up to each religion, and even town newspapers were enlisted on one side or another. This background helps one to understand and appreciate the confusion Joseph felt over which Church was right and which one he should join.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): In the country, "differences of opinion rend society into shreds and patches, varying in everything from colour, form, and texture. In a village, the population of which is barely sufficient to fill one church, and support one clergyman, the inhabitants are either forced to want religious ministration altogether, or the followers of different sects must agree on some compromise, by which each yields up some portion of his creed to satisfy the objectives of his neighbor. This breeds argument, dispute, and bitterness of feeling"(407).

"The Socinian will not object to an Arian clergyman, but declines having anything to do with a supporter of the Trinity. The Calvinist will consent to tolerate the doctrine of free agency, if combined with that of absolute and irrespective decrees. The Baptist may give up the assertion of some favorite dogmas, but clings to adult baptism as a sinc qua non. And thus with other sects"(407-408).

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pps.
Nature of Source: Hamilton was an Englishman travelling throughout the United States and recording his experiences and impressions. At one point while travelling through New York he came across a group of Mormons on their way to join the main body of Saints in Ohio. Hamilton had not heard of Mormons previously but was informed about them by a fellow passenger. The information Hamilton was given by his fellow traveler was full of errors and reveals how many of Joseph Smith's contemporaries misunderstood him.

Comment: Hamilton was told that Joseph was a bankrupt storekeeper when he had an extraordinary dream that directed him to a spot to dig. There he found a book and elegant spectacles. The book contained blank paper until Joseph put on the spectacles and he could then see figures. Hamilton was told that two other men actually translated the Book of Mormon and that Mormon was a converted Rabbi who flourished in the days of the Savior. Further the traveler told Hamilton that after getting the Book of Mormon translated, Joseph started his own business under the name of "Mormon, Smith, and Company"(365).

All of these erroneous details illustrate how Joseph's story was often exaggerated and distorted and how wild rumors often were spread about the restoration of the Church.

Excerpt (pages): "Having dug to the requisite depth in the place commanded, he found a book with golden clasps and cover, and a pair of elegantly mounted spectacles...on opening it, though his eyes were good, it appeared to contain nothing but blank paper. It occurred to him to fit on his spectacles, when lo! The whole volume was filled with certain figures to him unintelligible. Delighted with his good fortune, Smith trudged home with the volume in his pocket and the spectacles on his nose, happy as bibliomaniac..."(364).

According to Hamilton's travelling companion, the ancient prophet Mormon was "a converted Rabbi, who flourished in the days of the Savior"(365).

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pps.

Hard Copy: Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Nature of Source: Hamilton is an Englishman travelling throughout the United States and recording his impressions. He talks about the "mania" that had taken place in New York State over the murder of William Morgan. Morgan was a Mason who wrote a book about the secrets of the institution and was subsequently murdered. Two Masons were brought to trial and although a majority on the jury believed them to be guilty, Freemasons on the jury acquitted them. According to Hamilton as a result of this murder and trial there was a mania in New York against the Masonic Order and against all secret and affiliated societies.

Comment: This book is interesting because Hamilton talks about how powerful and numerous the Masons were in the state of New York. His description of their power and influence and of the anti-Masonry mania that resulted from the murder of Morgan make it extremely probable that Joseph Smith was aware of Masonry and some of what it stood for. Further, Hamilton states that people banded together and sought to suppress not only against Masonry but also against anything they deemed a secret or affiliated society. These sentiments may have fueled the fires of opposition to the founding of the Church in New York.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "The circumstances of the jurymen who procured the acquittal being Freemasons, contributed to inflame the public indignation, already strongly excited by the original outrage. The principles of this secret society had not only caused crime to be committed, but justice to be denied"(159). Consequently, according to Hamilton, a large portion of the people "banded together in hostility to all secret and affiliated societies. They pronounced them dangerous and unconstitutional, and pledged themselves to exert their utmost efforts for their suppression"(159).

"Indeed, the mania on the subject is daily spreading. It was at first confined exclusively to the State of New York; it is now becoming diffused over the New England states and Pennsylvania"(160).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: History, Restoration, Gathering - Zion

Author: Reverend Peter Douglass Gorrie
Title of Book: The Churches and Sects of the United States; Containing a Brief Account of the Origin, History, Doctrines, Church Government, Mode of Worship, Usages, and Statistics of Each Religious Denomination, So Far as Known

Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: Lewis Colby
Date of Publication: 1850

Library Location: Special Collections BR 515 .G6 1850 Americana Rare

Nature of Source: Gorrie's book includes a discussion on Mormonism and other contemporary religious movements. He includes a brief history of the Church organization and their journeys from New York to Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and Utah. He mentions Joseph's visits from Moroni, the acquisition and translation of the Book of Mormon, the Church's missionary work and subsequent gathering to Zion, their expulsion from various communities, and Joseph's death.

Comment: Gorrie's brief history is accurate except on one point. On p. 230 he states that Joseph's brother "Hiram" opposed the Mormons' application for the Utah territory to be made a state. Gorrie erroneously claims that Hyrum claimed to be the prophet's successor and that he referred to the Saints that followed Brigham Young to Utah as a band of robbers. He apparently was not aware of the fact that Hyrum was murdered on the same day as Joseph.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "Here (Caldwell and Davies counties) they were suffered to remain for nearly two years, when, by order of the State authorities, they were again compelled to retire from their homes, and about fifteen thousand people were left once more to renew their search for the promised land. During these outrageous persecutions - for in no other light can these proceedings be viewed - many of the Mormons were murdered, or otherwise destroyed, and hundreds died from starvation or exposure to cold"(229).

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: History, Temple

Author:

Title of Book: History of Geauga and Lake Counties, Ohio, With Illustrations and Biographical Sketches of its Pioneers and Most Prominent Men

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: Williams Brothers; Press of J.B. Lippincott & Co.

Date of Publication: 1878

Library Location: Special Collections F497.G2 H57x 1973 Americana Collection Quarto
Nature of Source: This is a history of Geauga and Lake counties, Ohio. Kirtland, where the Saints gathered, is located in Geauga County. The history includes a section on the Mormons.

Comment: The history records that the Mormons arrived in 1831 and departed in 1836. It mentions such things as the building of the temple, the bank, the printing office and paper, and Mormon stores and farms. The history has a negative tone and talks of the hostile attitude natives of the area had towards the Mormons. The county history refers to Mormon practices as "odious" and it is with a sense of pride that this section talks of the people of Geauga County not tolerating the Saints. This section mentions several suits being filed against the Mormons for debt and other offences. It also talks of how the Reverend Nelson Slater obtained a five-year lease of the second and third stories of the Kirtland temple in 1838. The Western Reserve Teacher's Seminary was opened there in September of 1838.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): The County History talks of the Mormon settlement in Kirtland: "It was an event of no inconsiderable moment, and caused at the time no small commotion among the people of this locality. That a people with principles and practices so odious and revolting to every right thinking person should undertake to establish themselves permanently on Geauga soil, here to found, nourish, and enlarge their empire, was a matter of the most serious alarm. The result was that the citizens showed so relentless a hostility to the plans of the Mormons that their stay was of comparatively short duration"(24-25). "They remained long enough, however... to learn that among Geauga people and on Geauga soil their peculiar institution could not thrive"(25).

The history mentions the Mormon exodus from Ohio and the move to Missouri by quoting Mr. Eber Howe's book Mormonism Unveiled: "Executions were issued and their printing establishment and other fixings in Kirtland were levied upon by the sheriff. The night before the removal of the property it was all burned to the ground, and the prophet and many of his apostles fled to parts unknown. Following this was a pretty general breaking up in that place. Thy soon after attempted to make a stand and build up a community near the western order of Missouri, ten miles east of where Kansas City now stands. To that place all the faithful were peremptorily commanded to flee with all possible haste. To obey this command large sacrifices were made by the people who had from time to time enlisted under the banner of the prophet"(25).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Men become Gods

Author: Thomas Dick

Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: R. Schoyer
Dick never says directly that men will become Gods, but he does talk of the souls of men attaining moral and intellectual perfection.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "The soul of man appears to be capable of making a perpetual progress towards intellectual and moral perfection..."(44).

"We are assured that the foundation of the felicity to be enjoyed in that world, rests on the absence of every evil, and the attainment of moral perfection."(181)

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pps dispersed throughout

Hard Copy: Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Moses and authorship of Pentateuch

Author: Edward Robinson and William Smith

Title of Book: Dictionary and History of the Bible

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: R. Worthington

Date of Publication: 1879  (original publication in 1835 by Crocker and Brewster)

Nature of Source: This Bible Dictionary written by Edward Robinson was one of the books in the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institution, donated by John Oakley. Robinson was a professor of sacred literature in theological seminary at Andover.

Comment: Robinson states that Moses was the author of the Pentateuch. He adds that Moses was likely assisted by Aaron and that some parts of the Pentateuch were later added by an inspired hand.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "Moses was the author of the Pentateuch, as it is called, or the five books of Moses. In the composition of them he was very probably assisted by Aaron, who kept a register of public transactions.... Some things were added by a later inspired hand; e.g. the last chapter of Deuteronomy."(211)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.

Hard Copy: Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Topics: Resurrection
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Christian Philosopher
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: E.C. and J. Biddle
Date of Publication: 1849 (original publication in 1826 in New York by G. and C. Carvill)
Library Location: BL 240.D5 1861  Harold B. Lee Library
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester, New York library along with Dick's, The Philosophy of a Future State. The Manchester Library was a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith's family farm and some have suggested that Joseph may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from books in this library. Dick states in the introduction to The Christian Philosopher, that his purpose is to illustrate the connection of science and philosophy with religion.
Comment: Dick acknowledges that at first view, the doctrine of the resurrection seems to involve numerous difficulties and contradictions. However, he firmly believes in the promise of the resurrection and claims that nothing is too hard or impossible for God. Further, he gives numerous examples and analogies from science, which assist one in understanding the possibility of the resurrection and how it will be effected. Such examples include the transformation of insects and chemical changes in matter.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "That a complex organical machine, as the human body is, consisting of thousands of diversified parts for the performances of its functions, after it has been reduced to atoms, and those atoms dispersed to 'the four winds of heaven' - should be again reared up with the same materials, in a new and more glorious form, - is an idea which seems to baffle the human comprehension"(345).
"Though human bodies may remain in a state of putrefication for ages, in the earth and in the waters, yet their component parts remain unchanged, and in readiness to enter into a new and more glorious combination, at the command of that Intelligence, to whom all the principles of nature, and all their diversified changes, are intimately known; and whose power is able to direct their combinations to the accomplishment of his purposes"(348).
Length of Relevant Material: 5 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Salvation Through Knowledge, Intelligences
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: R. Schoyer
Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)
Library Location: 237 D55 1830 Rare Book Collection

Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.

Comment: Dick states that the desire for knowledge is a fundamental part of the constitution of the mind. God created a capacity for knowledge and endowed us with powers to acquire, retain, and treasure knowledge for our eternal progression. Dick states that as part of our terrestrial existence, we have chains on our intellectual capacities. But those in heaven will have renovated faculties, which will be employed in contemplating God's glory. Further, those in heaven will progress to intellectual perfection. Dick believes that the existence of such intellect testifies to God's power and to our own immortality.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Man's desire for knowledge and capacity to gain and retain such attests to the fact that God "has not formed the soul of man for this terrestrial scene alone, but has destined it to a state of progressive improvement, and of endless duration"(42).

"The soul of man appears to be capable of making a perpetual progress towards intellectual and moral perfection, and of enjoying a felicity in every stage of its career, without the possibility of ever arriving at a boundary to its excursions"(44).

"The minds of redeemed intelligences from this world will find ample scope for the exercise of all their powers, and will derive from their investigations of them, perpetual and uninterrupted enjoyment, through an endless existence"(232).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Eternity of Matter
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: R. Schoyer
Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)
Library Location: 237 D55 1830 Rare Book Collection
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.

Comment: Dick characterizes the material universe as one of stability and perpetuity. He claims that the earth and all of God's creations will never fall to pieces nor sink into non-existence. To back up his point, Dick refers to the Psalmist, who after contemplating the scenes of the material creation declared, in reference to those visible manifestations, that "the Glory of the Lord shall endure forever." Dick writes that when the scriptures state that the "stars shall fall from the heavens," or that the "powers of heaven shall be shaken," these are to be understood figuratively, not literally. He states that such references denote changes and revolutions in the moral world, not in God's material creations.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "To suppose, as some have done, that the whole fabric of creation will be shattered to pieces, that the stars will literally fall from their orbits, and the material be blotted out of existence, is a sentiment so absurd and extravagant and so contrary to the general tenor of scripture, and the character of God..."(134).
".....there is no example of annihilation, or an entire destruction of material substances, to be found in the universe, and that it is to the last degree improbable, that any one particle of matter which now exists will ever be completely destroyed, however numerous the changes that may take place in the universe....The materials of which the earth and its atmosphere are composed will still continue to exist, after its present structure is deranged"(134).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Happiness as God's Purpose for Man

Author: Thomas Dick

Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: R. Schoyer

Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)

Library Location: 237 D55 1830 Rare Book Collection

Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.

Comment: Dick states that God is the governor of the world and he has given us laws to help us find happiness. Obedience to such laws leads to happiness and the violation of such laws leads to misery. This teaching is similar to that of Joseph Smith's: "Happiness is the object and design of our existence, and will be the end thereof, if we pursue the path that leads to it; and this path is virtue, uprightness, faithfulness, holiness, and keeping all the commandments of God" (The Teachings of Joseph Smith p. 310-311).

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "The natural tendency of virtue, or an obedience to the laws of God, is to produce happiness; and were it universally practiced it would produce the greatest degree of happiness of which human nature in the present state is susceptible. In like manner, the natural tendency of vice is to produce misery; and were its prevalence universal and uncontrolled, the world would be transformed into a society of demons, and every specious of happiness banished from the abodes of men" (80).

Length of Relevant Material: 7 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Judgment
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: R. Schoyer
Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)
Library Location: 237 D55 1830 Rare Book Collection
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.

Comment: Dick begins his discussion on judgment by recognizing that there is an unequal distribution of rewards and punishments in this life. He gives several examples of virtuous men who were treated cruelly or suffered unjust punishment. He recognizes that such examples cause one to question if God exists. Dick, however concludes that God does exist and is an anxious and concerned spectator of our choices. He concludes that Good sometimes allows vice to triumph and virtue to be oppressed and persecuted in this life. However, all of this will be made right in a future judgment beyond this present existence where virtue will be justly rewarded and vice punished. There are obvious parallels between these ideas and Joseph Smith's teachings on a future judgment and on the importance of works in our personal salvation.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): God's "government of human beings is not bounded by the limits of time, but extends into the eternal world, when the system of his moral administration will be completed, his wisdom and rectitude justified, and the mysterious ways of his Providence completely unraveled"(87).

"Man is accountable for his actions, and that it must be an essential part of the Divine government to bring every action into judgment and to punish or reward his creatures according to their works"(87).

"The full and equitable distribution of punishments and rewards is reserved to a future world"(88).

Length of Relevant Material: 8 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Kolob

Author: Thomas Dick

Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: R. Schoyer

Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)

Library Location: 237 D55 1830  Rare Book Collection

Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.

Comment: Although the author never uses the term "Kolob," his descriptions of the "throne of God" have obvious parallels to the term. Dick states that scriptural references to the throne of God refer to a particular region of the universe where God, Christ, and other worthy persons reside. This place is the center of the universe and is the most magnificent and divine of all of God's creations.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "It is now considered by astronomers, as highly probable, if not certain, from late observations, from the nature of gravitation and other circumstances, that all the systems of the universe revolve around one common center"(224). This center "may, with the most emphatic propriety, be termed the Throne of God...This grand central body may be considered as the capital of the universe"(224-225).
"Here may be exhibited to the view of unnumbered multitudes, objects of sublimity and glory, which are nowhere else to be found within the wide extent of creation. Here, intelligences of the highest order, who have attained the most sublime heights of knowledge and virtue may form the principle part of the population of this magnificent region. Here, the glorified body of the Redeemer may have taken its principal station...and here likewise, Enoch and Elijah may reside..."(225).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Magic
Author: Sir Walter Scott, Bart
Title of Book: Letters on Demonology and Witchcraft
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York:
Publisher: J. and J. Harper
Date of Publication: 1833
Library Location: HBL Library PR 5320 .L54x 1841
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library.

Comment: Scott's book is about witches and demonology and how people have been able to imitate God's power and God's miracles through evil channels. Scott specifically discusses the wizards of Pharaoh that contended with Moses, and Saul's experience with the Witch of Endor who called up the spirit of Samuel. According to Scott, it is unclear whether such feats were accomplished by sorcery or by legerdemain. He does acknowledge that sorcery and witchcraft involves mingling with idols, seeking counsel from false deities, and cooperating with evil spirits.

Scott reiterates that witchcraft and such magical sorcery are portrayed as one of the greatest evils in the Bible. He states that in the Old Testament it was punishable by death and in the New Testament it was ranked in importance after idolatry.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): Wicked men assisted by "fallen angels were enabled to assert rank with, and attempt to match, the prophets of the God of Israel"(54).

Some witches "transform themselves and others into the appearance of the lower animals; raise and allay tempests; frequent the company and join the revels of evil spirits, and, by their counsel and assistance, destroy human lives"(62).

"Neither do the exploits of Elymas, called the Sorcerer, or Simon, called Magus, or the Magician, entitle them to rank above the class of impostors, who assumed a character to which they had no real title, and put their own mystical and ridiculous pretensions and supernatural power to competition with those who had been conferred a purpose to diffuse the Gospel, and facilitate its reception by the exhibition of genuine miracles"(63).

Length of Relevant Material:

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Melchizedek
Author: Edward Robinson and William Smith
Title of Book: Dictionary and History of the Bible
Title of Article:

Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: R. Worthington
Date of Publication: 1879 (original publication in 1835 by Crocker and Brewster)
Library Location: BS 440.R63X
Nature of Source: This Bible Dictionary written by Edward Robinson was one of the books in the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institution, donated by John Oakley. Robinson was a professor of sacred literature in theological seminary at Andover.

Comment: Robinson states that Melchizedek was king of Salem, Priest of the Most High God, and friend of Abraham. He also mentions that Melchizedek was a priest after the order of Melchizedek, and not Aaron. The unusual thing about the entry on Melchizedek was that Robinson states that many inquire as to whom Melchizedek really was. He mentions that some suppose Melchizedek to be the Holy Spirit, the Son of God, an angel, Enoch, and Shem. The most popular of these opinions is that Melchizedek was Christ. Robinson, however, does not support this. He asserts that none of these opinions can be supported by Biblical interpretation.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "It has been a matter of great inquiry among commentators who Melchisedec really was. He has been variously supposed to be the Holy Ghost, the Son of God, an angel, Enoch, and Shem. But the safest and most probably opinion is that which considers Melchisedec a righteous and peaceful king, a worshipper and priest of the Most High God"(205).

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.
Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Missionary work
Author: Joseph Lathrop
Title of Book: The Angel Preaching the Everlasting Gospel
Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Springfield
Lathrop talks specifically about three groups of missionaries: 1.) the disciples Christ commissioned to take the gospel forth, 2.) Protestant reformation missionaries, and 3.) a latter-day missionary effort. When talking of the latter-day missionary effort he mentions scriptures being translated and taken to the people in their own language. However, his primary purpose does not seem to be to convince his audience to leave their homes and country to preach the gospel themselves, but rather to contribute money to the missionary cause.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): Lathrop predicts a day when the "Bible and other books of piety may be translated for, and dispersed among various nations. Thus the gospel may be, and doubtless will be preached to all nations, without the miraculous gift of tongues"(5).

Lathrop pleas for monetary contributions: "These must be supported in their missions by the pious liberality of Christians... As they will be sent among nations of various languages, there will certainly be translations of the scriptures, which may be dispersed among the people to assist the labors, and confirm the doctrines of the preachers"(10).

Length of Relevant Material: 19 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed: ____________________________

Topics: Old and New Jerusalem

Author: Edward Robinson and William Smith

Title of Book: Dictionary and History of the Bible

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: R. Worthington

Date of Publication: 1879 (original publication in 1835 by Crocker and Brewster)

Library Location: BS 440.R63X

Nature of Source: This Bible Dictionary, written by Edward Robinson, was one of the books in the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institution, donated by John Oakley. Robinson was a professor of sacred literature in theological seminary at Andover.

Comment: Robinson gives a brief history and description of the ancient Jerusalem and of the "modern" city. He describes the ancient Jerusalem as one of "great splendor" and the modern one as being "trodden down." According to Robinson, the New Jerusalem is not going to be a real, literal city. Instead it is a symbol of Christianity in general.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "The modern city of Jerusalem is indeed 'trodden down.' It bears the name and occupies the site of the ancient city of David; but in all other respects it presents nothing but the most striking contrasts with its former splendor"(163).
"The New Jerusalem is put as the emblem of the Christian religion. The ancient city was the seat and representative of the Jewish religion; and as Christianity is built upon the former covenant, so in like manner its spread, and prevalence, and worship are symbolically represented under the figure of a new city, a New Jerusalem"(165).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Plural marriage
Author: Ozias Hart
Title of Book: The Christian System, In Its Native Simplicity, or, the Errors of the Different Religious Denominations Corrected
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hartford, CT
Publisher: B & J Russell
Date of Publication: 1816
Library Location: Microfiche 080 Sh64a no. 37806
Nature of Source: Hart writes about what he believes to be errors prevalent in the Christian world as well as errors present in the Bible. One such error that he attacks is the practice of polygamy.

Comment: Hart says there are errors in some historical parts of the Bible and those instances where Biblical patriarchs are said to have practiced polygamy are an example of such historical errors. He denounces polygamy as an invasion of chastity.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "There are some errors, in giving a definition of characters, in the historical parts of scripture, which ought to be particularly noticed, such as, the conduct of Abraham in being guilty of polygamy..." Jacob's "conduct in being guilty of polygamy....The conduct of David ....in being guilty of polygamy. The conduct of Solomon in being guilty of polygamy"(26).
"But it may be truly said, that a rule of chastity is an important gospel rule, and is well known to consist in a regular union of the sexes, for the purpose of mutual happiness, the prevention of polygamy, and to promote the propagation of the human race"(14-15).

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Plural Worlds
Dick states in the introduction to The Christian Philosopher, that his purpose is to illustrate the connection of science and philosophy with religion.

Comment: Like his writings in The Philosophy of a Future State, in this book Dick stresses his firm belief in the plurality of worlds. Dick states that God created so many systems and worlds that they cannot be numbered. Dick even uses the terminology "worlds without end," and asserts that the idea of a plurality of worlds is supported more than once in scripture.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "We have perceived that He has created systems in such vast profusion, that no man can number them. The worlds every moment under his superintendence and direction are unquestionable far more numerous than all the human beings who have hitherto existed, or will yet exist till the close of time"(59).

Dick writes that in our future eternal state we will perceive and enjoy God's vast creations, "worlds without end"(60).

The universe is composed of "ten thousand times ten thousand worlds, peopled with myriads of intellectual beings"(394).

"In those trackless regions of immensity, we behold an assemblage of resplendent globes, similar to the sun in size and glory, and doubtless accompanied with a retinue of worlds..."(37-38).

Length of Relevant Material: 10+ pps dispersed throughout the book

Hard Copy:

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Plural Worlds

Author: Thomas Dick

Title of Book: The Philosophy of a Future State

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: R. Schoyer

Date of Publication: 1831 (originally published in 1829 by G. and C. and H. Carvill)
Library Location: 237 D55 1830 Rare Books Collection
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library. The author's purpose in writing this book is to present discoveries of modern science to convince readers of the reality of an immortal existence and to expand the believer's conceptions of the attributes of the Divinity and of the future world which awaits us.
Comment: Dick states that our universe is infinite and that within it, there is a magnitude of scenery and worlds all created by the same God.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "By the discoveries of modern science, in the distant regions of space, we are fully assured, that the attributes of the Deity have not been exercised solely in the construction of our sublunary sphere, and of the aerial heavens with which it is encompassed, nor has providential regards confined to the transactions of the frail beings that dwell upon its surface, but extend to the remotest spaces of the universe. We know, that far beyond the limits of our terrestrial abode, the Almighty has displayed his omnipotence in framing worlds, which, in magnitude, and in splendor of accomplishments, far surpasses this globe on which we dwell"(188).
"Since in every part of the material system which lies open to our inspection, it appears, that matter exists solely for the purpose of sentient and intelligent creatures... it is beyond dispute, that those great globes which are suspended throughout the vast spaces of the universe are destined to some noble purpose worthy of the infinite power, wisdom, and intelligence which produced them. And what may their purposes by?....they are destined to subserve a similar purpose in the system of nature --to promote a flood of radiance on surrounding worlds...So that each of these luminaries may be considered, not merely as a world, but as the center of thirty, sixty, or a hundred worlds..."(190).
Length of Relevant Material: 5 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Priesthood and Church, God - God's body, Spiritual Gifts - Revelations, Tongues
Author: Reverend Peter Douglass Gorrie
Title of Book: The Churches and Sects of the United States; Containing a Brief Account of the Origin, History, Doctrines, Church Government, Mode of Worship, Usages, and Statistics of Each Religious Denomination, So Far as Known
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: Lewis Colby
Date of Publication: 1850
Library Location: Special Collections BR 515 .G6 1850 Americana rare
Nature of Source: Gorrie includes a discussion of Mormonism and other contemporary religious movements. His writings include sections on Mormon doctrine, Church government, and forms of worship.

Comment: Under Church doctrine, Gorrie talks about all of the following: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, one God with a body, Christ, the gathering, and gifts of prophesy, tongues, healing, etc. In his section on Church government he talks of priesthood organization and mentions offices such as apostles, bishops, priests, and teachers. Gorrie writes very generally and does not go into much detail on any of these points of doctrine.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): "They (Mormons) believe that the gifts of prophesy, speaking unknown tongues, interpretation of tongues, healing, &c.&c., are still vouchsafed to the faithful on the earth" (231).

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Race

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Insurrection in Mississippi"

Title of Periodical: Niles' Weekly Register

Place of Publication: Baltimore

Publisher:

Date of Publication: August 8, 1835

Library Location: Microfiche Z 1236.15 1971 no. 31235-62

Nature of Source: This is an article about a slave insurrection that took place in Columbus, Mississippi in July of 1835. Whites led the uprising and the article was especially critical of them for instigating the slaves.

Comment: Grunder compares this article to D&C 134:12: "We believe it just to preach the gospel to the nations of the earth, and warn the righteous to save themselves from the corruption of the world; but we do not believe it right to interfere with bondservants, neither preach the gospel to, nor baptize them contrary to the will and wish of their masters, nor to meddle with or influence them in the least to cause them to be dissatisfied with their situations in this life, thereby jeopardizing the lives of men; such interference we believe to be unlawful and unjust, and dangerous to the peace of every government allowing human beings to be held in servitude."

According to Grunder, Oliver Cowdery read this verse at a General Assembly of the Church on August 17, 1835. Like the D&C verse, the newspaper article criticizes white men for instigating the slaves and involving them in rebellion.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): The article describes the uprising as follows: "a more diabolical attempt or a deeper laid scheme of villainy, was never brought to light...And what adds to the atrociousness, and to the deep felt indignation, with which we must contemplate it, is the fact that white men were at the head of it. Individuals enjoying all of the privileges of free citizens have, with a fiend-like madness, instigated the ignorant and generally contented African, to rise up against their fellow citizens, and to engage in an indiscriminate butchery..."(403)

The article also printed a proclamation from the Governor of Mississippi: "I do therefore issue this proclamation, exhorting all good citizens, and commanding the officers, both civil and military, to use the most untiring vigilance to suppress all such insurrectionary movements, and to apprehend all suspicious persons"(403).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: revelations, last days - destruction
Author: Charles Phelps
Title of Book: A Lecture Delivered at Marlborough, VT, July 4, 1826.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Brattleboro, VT
Publisher: Printed for the author
Date of Publication: 1826
Library Location: E286.M37x 1826 Amer-Rare - Americana Collection
Nature of Source: This lecture, delivered on the fiftieth anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence condemns the practice of slavery and predicts a time of hostility between the states over the issue of slavery.
Comment: Phelps refers to slavery as a growing evil and notes the hypocrisy in the language of the Declaration of Independence and the institution of slavery. Further, he predicts that if a remedy is not quickly applied to the slave question there will be a storm of hostility in which the slaves themselves will bear arms against their masters. Unlike Joseph Smith's predictions on the coming of hostility between the states over the issue of slavery, Phelps does not specifically mention South Carolina as the starting point for such hostility.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): Phelps questions how any American can justify the evil institution of slavery: "Do we believe that all men are created equally free and independent? Was it true in the case between the British government and these colonies? Is it not just as true, in the case of the African and his American master? It was the principle that was contended for, by those that burst the bonds of British thraldom over these colonies; and where is the difference?"(16).

Phelps further predicts future conflict over slavery: "How long are we assured that unanimity of sentiment between these independent states will continue; and that intestine and civil broils, will not disturb the quiet, in which we are now so secure? If no remedy can be applied to the growing evil, and myriads are to be held in a state of despair, where hope never, never comes, that a storm will burst forth at some future time, and in its fury overwhelm the fairest hopes of our liberty's perpetuity, there is a moral certainty"(17).
"And when the awful day of retribution shall arrive, and they, in their turn, be masters: what horrors of retaliation! - ...In the first moments of hostility between the several states, those slaves will be in arms; and when, and where their bloody hands will be stayed, Heaven only knows"(17).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pps
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Secret Combinations
Author: Richard Rush
Title of Book:
Title of Article: A Letter on Freemasonry by the Honorable Richard Rush, to the Committee of the Citizens of York County, Pennsylvania
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: J. Marsh and Co.
Date of Publication: 1831
Library Location: Univ. of Utah Z 1201 S44 1965 Microfiche, government documents, level 1
Nature of Source: The anti-Masonic Committee of Correspondence for York County wrote Richard Rush inquiring as to his opinion on Masonry. Rush responded to the committee in a letter on May 4, 1831.
Comment: Rush responds by criticizing secret societies and defining Masonry as such a society. He talks of the murder and abduction of William Morgan in New York. Not only does he condemn Freemasonry for its secrecy, but also he calls for all good citizens to fulfill their duty to regulate and censor such societies. This source is part of the anti-Masonic literature from the time period following the Morgan murder. Rush states that the entire public knew of the Morgan murder and subsequent trials. It is obvious that Joseph Smith was aware of the Morgan murder and was aware of the resulting anti-Masonic backlash. Some say that such anti-Masonic literature is similar to the Book of Mormon's condemnation of secret societies and secret combinations.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): The Anti-Masonic Committee of Correspondence wrote Rush on April 26, 1831: "A large body of the freemen of these United States, deem the institution of Freemasonry dangerous to our political and moral welfare, and have united themselves in a determination to put it down"(3).

Rush replied: "I see objections to secret societies, because pursuing objects not known to the public, they act under diminished responsibilities to the public. If the objects be good, why not state them; if bad, they ought to be known"(4).

"If such societies guard their secrets by strong penalties; if they have numbers and antiquity on their side; if their visible outposts are but links of a chain stretching from nation to nation; if the sense of affiliated attachment and union among them is perceived to be exceedingly energetic and zealous; if their whole scheme of discipline, improved throughout ages, has become in a high degree imposing, even terrifying, their operations, will naturally have the more say, and would be watched with more care. Freemasonry is such a society"(5).

Length of Relevant Material:

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Spirit World
Author: Sir Walter Scott, Bart
Title of Book: Letters on Demonology and Witchcraft
Title of Article:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: J. and J. Harper
Date of Publication: 1831
Library Location: HBL Library PR 5320 .L54x 1841
Nature of Source: This book was in the Manchester New York Library, a circulating library located within five miles of the Smith family farm. It has been suggested that Joseph Smith may have derived some of his religious and theological ideas from this library.

Comment: Scott's book is about demonology and witchcraft, but within this topic he puts forth his views on the spirit world. Scott definitely believes in a spirit world and states that it is divided into two parts, one good and one bad. Spirits from both sides can communicate with and exercise their powers over mortals on earth. Scott's division of the spirit world into two such parts has some parallels to Joseph Smith's division of the spirit world into spirit paradise and spirit prison. However, an important difference is that Scott seems to think of the inhabitants of the spirit world as angels on the good side, and fallen angels that followed Lucifer on the bad side. He seems to view these as spirits that have never come to earth and have never possessed a mortal body. For Joseph Smith, the spirit world was a place for spirits to go after they departed their sojourn on the earth and their spirits departed their physical bodies.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Scott defines witchcraft as the "intercourse between the spiritual world and imbodyed beings, for evil purposes"54).

For Scott the spirit world consists of "two grand divisions of angels and devils, severally exercising their powers according to the commission or permission of the Ruler of the universe"(64).

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Spiritual Gifts, Tongues
Author: William Gibson
Title of Book: Report of Three Nights' Public Discussion in Bolton, Between William Gibson, H.P., Presiding Elder of the Manchester Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and the Rev. Woodville Woodman, Minister of the New Jerusalem Church
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Liverpool
Publisher: Franklin D. Richards
Date of Publication: 1851
Library Location: Special Collections BX 8630 .G359r Americana Collection
Nature of Source: This is a series of debates between William Gibson, a Latter-day Saint, and Woodville Woodman, the minister of the New Jerusalem Church. These debates provide a basis for the comparison of early Mormon theology to conventional Protestant theology at the time. On the third night of the debate the topic discussed was Mark 16:17-18 and whether the signs and gifts to follow the believers are literal or symbolic.
Comment: Gibson argues yes, such signs are literal, and Woodman insists that they are not. Woodman argues that when the Bible states things such as: "faith to move mountains," and "take up serpents," it is symbolic of moving our sins, or taking them up and ridding ourselves of them. Woodman acknowledges that the apostles had certain spiritual gifts, but denies that such literal gifts are given to believers. Further, according to Woodman, the gift of tongues is not literal, but instead is symbolic of a new Christian type of speech.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Woodman: "Now the difference between Mr. Gibson's position and mine is, that he is to abide by the letter, and I am to show that these signs are to be understood as bearing upon something that does not immediately appear in the letter...Mind, I do not deny the possession of certain gifts the Apostles had! No; I understand all this; but we do not read of those who believed by their preaching having these gifts, nor of the apostles themselves having the whole of them; no, we have not an instance upon record of them taking up serpents, or drinking any deadly thing; so that if we abide by the letter alone, in this sense, the promise of the Savior was never fulfilled"(31).
On the subject of the gift of tongues, Woodman argues that such a gift "is a new quality of speech...It is a tongue of another quality; namely of a Christian quality. A man speaks with a new tongue when he speaks by the love of God"(41).
Length of Relevant Material: 15 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

-----------------------------------------------

Topics: Temple
Author: Jeremy L. Cross
Title of Book: The True Masonic Chart
Nature of Source: The author is a Mason who has witnessed the mode of lecturing and working in many different lodges and is writing this book with the blessing of the General Grand Chapter of the United States. His purpose in writing the book is for it to be used as a manual of instruction for all Freemasons. The book includes a classification of the Masonic emblems with illustrations that have been approved and adopted by a majority of the Lodges in the United States. Further, the writer includes examples of the following: opening and closing prayers for the Lodges, the prayer for the initiation of a candidate, the ceremonies for all of the raising degrees, the appointments of treasurer, secretary, steward, deacon, and tyler, and the ceremonies for the laying of the foundation stone and the dedication of the Masonic hall.

Comment: Cross describes all of the following as important symbols in Freemasonry: the compass, the square, the beehive, the sun, moon, and stars. It is interesting to note the parallels between the Masonic use of these symbols and the Mormon use of them. He also traces the Masonic Order back to King Solomon, who Masons believe to be the first Most Excellent Grand Master. Further, he describes all of the virtues emphasized within Masonry, virtues such as charity, truth, temperance, fortitude, prudence, and justice.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): For Masons, the symbol of the compass is to remind them to, "circumscribe their desires and keep their passions within due bounds"(10). "The square teaches us to regulate our actions by rule and line, and harmonize our conduct by the principles of morality and virtue"(66). Further, Cross admonishes his people to be different and to be pillars of their community: "keep sacred and inviolable the mysteries of the order, as these are to distinguish you from the rest of the community"(19).

Length of Relevant Material: 77 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Temple, Old Testament as context for doctrine

Author: Lebbeus Armstrong

Title of Book: Masonry Proved to be a Work of Darkness, Repugnant to the Christian Religion; and Inimical to a Republican Government

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: Printed for Author

Date of Publication: 1831

Library Location: Special Collections 252.008 Am 35 Box 2 No. 16 Rare Books Collection
Armstrong was the pastor of the Presbyterian Churches of Northampton and Edinburgh, NY. He describes Masonry as the works of darkness and secrecy and calls on all Christians to separate themselves from the Order. Armstrong accuses Masonry of being a work of darkness because: 1.) it perverts the holy scriptures by taking the names of their signs tokens, passwords, and degrees from the holy scriptures, 2.) its oaths make provision for the commission and concealment of capital and other crimes (he blames the death of William Morgan on Masons), 3.) it subverts justice and is based on imposture.

Comment: Armstrong claims that the Masonic Order has only been popular because of "self exaltation." He says all of the following have helped Masons to exalt themselves: 1.) their claim of divine origin, 2.) their claims to be antiquity in its present form, 3.) their claim to possess in a high degree the virtues of morality, and 4.) their use of such phrases as "Holiness to the Lord." It is interesting to note similarities between these claims and Mormonism. Further, Armstrong criticizes Masons for claiming their heritage from Solomon and for taking much of their symbolism from the Old Testament.

Researcher: Sara Cranford

Excerpt (pages): According to Armstrong, "among the various stratagems of Satan in opposition to God and holiness, and for the purpose of destroying the souls of men, the institution of Speculative Freemasonry holds a pre-eminent rank"(3). Freemasonry "bears decided marks of being one of the confederate powers of iniquity, predicted by the apostle John, on the isle of Palmos. Which would combine the world in arms against God, and be overcome at the battle of the great day just before the millennium."(17). According to Armstrong, the three unclean spirits John saw in Revelations 16:6 are "Mahometanism, Papal Despotism, and Freemasonry....they are three powers of iniquity....Their affinity consists, only, in their agreement to oppose God and holiness, to deceive mankind, and to destroy their souls"(19).

Armstrong claims that "all lovers of God, lovers of mankind, and well-wishers to the best interests of community, are under special obligation to renounce it (Freemasonry), to withdraw fellowship from all who adhere to it; to reprove it by precept and example; and by every laudable effort, endeavor to exterminate its influence from the society of mankind"(19).

Length of Relevant Material: 22 pps.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Date of Publication: 1850
Library Location: Special Collections BR 515 .G6 1850 Americana rare
Nature of Source: Gorrie includes a discussion of Mormonism and other contemporary religious movements. His writings include sections on Mormon doctrine, Church government, and forms of worship.
Comment: Gorrie describes the Kirtland and Nauvoo temples and mentions the Mormon belief in baptism for the dead. Gorrie mentions the dimensions of these early temples and the price of construction.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Gorrie talks of the Nauvoo temple, "the walls were of polished stone, and in the interior it was designed to have a splendid font for baptizing, and a sea of brass resting upon the shoulders of twelve oxen, the whole designed to be completed after the manner of Solomon's temple"(234).
Length of Relevant Material: 3 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Three degrees of glory
Author: Edward Robinson and William Smith
Title of Book: Dictionary and History of the Bible
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: R. Worthington
Date of Publication: 1879   (original publication in 1835 by Crocker and Brewster)
Library Location: BS 440.R3X
Nature of Source: This Bible Dictionary written by Edward Robinson was one of the books in the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institution, donated by John Oakley. Robinson was a professor of sacred literature in theological seminary at Andover.
Comment: Robinson talks of the "highest heaven," and states that it is the same as the third heaven. Some of his writing is similar to the Mormon concept of the three degrees of glory and especially to the characteristics of the celestial kingdom. He quotes Paul in 2 Cor. 12:2, where Paul talks of the third heaven. Robinson states that the third heaven is the place of God's residence and where angels and blessed spirits dwell. He mentions specifically that God does not dwell in heaven in general, but just in this third part. He defines this third heaven as a place of the highest exaltation and glory. Robinson never mentions a first and second heaven, but by talking of the third heaven implies that there must be a first and second.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "The third heaven is the same as the highest heaven and both are used to express the idea of the highest exaltation and glory"(128).
"God dwells not only in heaven, but above the heavens, in the third, or very highest heaven"(128).
Length of Relevant Material: 1p.
Topics: Three Separate Beings
Author: William Gibson
Title of Book: Report of Three Nights' Public Discussion in Bolton, Between William Gibson, H.P., Presiding Elder of the Manchester Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and the Rev. Woodville Woodman, Minister of the New Jerusalem Church
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Liverpool
Publisher: Franklin D. Richards
Date of Publication: 1851
Library Location: Special Collections BX 8630.G359r Americana Collection
Nature of Source: This is a series of debates between William Gibson, a Latter-day Saint, and Woodville Woodman, the minister of the New Jerusalem Church. These debates provide a basis for the comparison of early Mormon theology to conventional Protestant theology at the time. On the second night of the debate, the question was: "The Godhead: Are the Father and Son two distinct separate persons?"
Comment: Gibson argues that the Godhead is composed of three distinct beings and Woodman argues that they are not separate. Woodman emphasizes places in the scriptures where Christ states, "I and my Father are one." Woodman insists that this is literal and not metaphorical.
           Gibson, on the other hand, defends his argument by talking of Stephen's vision where he saw God the Father and Jesus Christ, as two separate beings.
           The debate focuses on God and Christ and does not talk about the role of the Holy Ghost in the Godhead.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Woodman insists: "Now I have shown you that God never manifested himself but through a medium, and that Jesus Christ was the medium through which he was manifested in the flesh.... As my soul is manifested through my body, so the Father dwelling in Christ, manifested himself through Christ"(25).
           Woodman continues: "And now, Jesus Christ is the Everlasting Father from eternity to eternity, but not of time but of state; and , moreover, as we have showed, the divine nature cannot be divided: the Father dwelt in him, and he became one with him, and , therefore, he is the Everlasting Father"(29).
Length of Relevant Material: 16 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Women's role
Author: Ozias Hart
Title of Book: The Christian System, In Its Narrative Simplicity, or, the Errors of the Different Religious Denominations Corrected
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hartford, CT
Publisher: B & J Russell
Date of Publication: 1816
Library Location: Microfiche 080 Sh64a no. 37806
Nature of Source: The author points out points of doctrine among other religions that he thinks are erroneous. He states that he has come to a system of doctrine that is agreeable to the Saviour and therefore publishes his views to help all men come to the "knowledge of the truth." One such error that Hart finds disturbing in many denominations is the inequality of the sexes.
Comment: Hart calls for equality of the sexes and claims that men must not exercise authority over their wives. In the appendix of his book he lists what he thinks are errors in the Bible. Hart claims that the Bible is in error when it says that women should not speak in Church, and when it tells men to rule over their wives.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "There is nothing in the law or the gospel, directing men to rule over women....Men must not exercise authority over their wives"(23).
"The apostle was in a gross error when he said the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the Church"(23-24).
In the appendix Hart listed errors in scripture that should be expunged: "I. All that the apostle said of men ruling their wives, and of women obeying their husbands, must be expunged. II. The apostle was in error when he said that it is a shame for a woman to speak in the Church"(26).
Length of Relevant Material: 10 pps.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Word of Wisdom
Author: Stereotyped by L. Johnson
Title of Book:
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: Journal of Health  No. 10, Vol. 1
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Jan. 27, 1830
Library Location: Microfilm 051.B Reel #479
Nature of Source: This is an excerpt from The Journal of Health discussing the use of tobacco in general and the use of snuff specifically.
Comment: Similar to the Word of Wisdom, this article condemns the use of all tobacco. It specifically lists health problems that can result from the use of snuff. Specific problems mentioned include: indigestion, and nervous disorders such as tremors, palsy, and epilepsy.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): "The habitual snuff taker consents to have greatly impaired, if not destroyed the senses of smell and taste, for both, together with the voice, suffer by this vile practice - as repugnant to true fashion and politeness, as it is injurious to health..."(154).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy:

---

Topics: word of wisdom
Author: Henry H. Porter
Title of Book: The Catechism of Health
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: Office of the Journal of Health Journal of law and Family Library of Health
Date of Publication: 1831
Library Location: RA 776.P84 1831 a Amer-Rare - Americana Collection
Nature of Source: This is a series of 264 questions and answers dealing with general issues of health. The author especially directs his answers to the young in an attempt to convey to them means to promote health and vigor and to prolong life. Porter's writings are especially interesting in that they parallel the word of wisdom with cautions against alcohol, tobacco, tea, and consuming excessive amounts of meat.
Comment: Porter admonishes people to base their diet on a wide variety of grains, fruits, vegetables, and meats, but with a caution to use the latter sparingly. Further, he says persons in "perfect health" may use alcohol moderately but should avoid using it as a common drink. Porter declares tobacco to be a poison and denies that tea is conducive to health.

Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Porter specifically lists the ill effects caused by tobacco alcohol, and tea. "When used in large quantity they (beer, porter, and ale) occasion a bloated condition of the body, injure the digestive powers of the stomach, cause drowsiness, depression of spirits, and giddiness of the head, and render the system liable to sudden death"(80).

"Tobacco is a poison, and by its action upon the nerves and stomach it destroys the appetite, prevents the perfect digestion of the food, creates an unnatural thirst, and renders the individual who uses it nervous and otherwise diseased"(86).

Tea "impairs the powers of the stomach, produces various nervous symptoms, a pale and sallow hue of the skin, heartburn, and all the usual train of morbid feelings which accompany dyspepsia"(169).

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pps
Topics: word of wisdom
Author: Ebenezer Porter
Title of Book: The Fatal Effects of Ardent Spirits
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hartford, CT
Publisher: Peter B. Gleason and Co., Printer
Date of Publication: 1811
Library Location:
Nature of Source: A sermon on the sin of intemperate drinking delivered by Porter in 1805 in Washington, CT. The sermon followed the death of a transient man who perished in the snow with a bottle of spirits at his side about a mile from the local meetinghouse. The sermon, made public in 1811, is considered to be instrumental in the beginning of the temperance movement in the United States.
Comment: Porter discusses eight effects of intemperate drinking: 1. destroys industry, 2. destroys health, 3. produces poverty, 4. impairs reason, 5. produces subject unfit for duties and comforts of social life, 6. leads to other vices, 7. extinguishes sensibilities of the heart, and 8. produces a miserable death. Porter condemns intemperate drinking for threatening to destroy one's character, livelihood, family, life, and salvation. Further, he calls on retailers of alcohol, lawmakers, parents, physicians, and religious leaders to seriously consider the problem of intemperate drinking before it destroys more individuals, families, and communities.
Researcher: Sara Cranford
Excerpt (pages): Porter bases his sermon on Isaiah 5:2: "Wo unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them"(2). He claims that intemperate drinking has "proved a greater foe to human life and happiness than war, pestilence, and famine"(4). "It requires no supernatural penetration to see that without a thorough reformation, the day of our calamity is at hand"(17).
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics:
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Topics: Adam; covenant

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XVII."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Dec., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "that each individual of the human race stands charged, in the sight of God, with having transgressed the divine law in Adam's first sin, as really as if each individual had himself committed that sin... naturally and unavoidably follows, from Adam being a covenant head. The very essence of that relation consisted in this very thing, that his act was to be considered and treated, as the act of each of those whom he represented. ... By that sin he transgressed the covenant of his God, and thenceforward he was no longer the covenant head of his posterity; and of course, all his subsequent sins had no more relation to them, than the sins of any other individual." (531)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Topics: Adam; Eve; covenant

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XVI."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Oct., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: Through an admittedly personal analysis of the Genesis account of the Fall, the author arrives at the conclusion that Adam and Eve were promised salvation and will rejoice with their posterity in the afterlife. Compare Moses 5:4-12.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "And to my apprehension, the scriptures although they do not, in so many words, say that they [Adam and Eve] were pardoned, yet intimate it with sufficient clearness. To them the first promise of the covenant of grace was made - the promise of salvation through a Redeemer - namely, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head: and it seems to be made in such a manner as clearly to intimate their personal interest in it. Other passages, also, lead to the same desirable conclusion. On the whole, there is, I apprehend, no reason to doubt, that Adam and Eve are among the redeemed of the Lord, and that our first parents will meet in heaven with all their offspring who shall be admitted there . . . ." (434)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Adam; Eve; The fortunate fall

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XV."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Aug, 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: This is a theologically speculative essay on creation and providence as it relates to the Westminster Catechism.

Excerpt (pages): "As to the formation of angels . . . .It once appeared most probably to me, that they were created some considerable time before man. I now rather think it probable that they were formed on the first day of creation. It would seem, from a passage in Job, that they were the witnesses of the formation of man . . . ."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Topics: basis of authority
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Mr. Duncan on Creeds and Confessions."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: A. Finley
Date of Publication: Oct., 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.
Comment: This is article is one in a series of refutations of "Mr. Duncan's" arguments against the use of creeds. Here the author is protesting "Mr. D's" charge that the use of creeds is an "imposition" of the "doctrines of men" and, hence, without authority. The author asserts that the Bible constitutes the basis of authority, but implicitly admits the interpretive nature of the exercise in devising creedal statements.
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "He [Mr. Duncan] has, in fact, told us, as we understand him, that no man who denies the divinity and atonement of the Saviour, ought to be allowed to take his seat at a sacramental table; and that no one who rejects the doctrine of the Trinity, ought ever to be permitted to offer up his child to the God of Christians in baptism. And this, though they might both profess to believe the Bible. If Mr. D. were asked, by what authority a church would act in excluding such persons, we presume he would say, without hesitation - by Divine authority. Because, although there is not to be found in the great Statute-Book of the Redeemer's kingdom any law which, in so many words, directs that no such persons be received in any act of Christian communion; yet the spirit of such a law is plainly enjoined in many parts of Scripture. What would he reply, then, to an infidel, or Socinian blusterer, who, for secular purposes, should wish to join his church, and who should complain, that a list of 'supposed scriptural doctrines was imposed upon his conscience, by human authority, as a term of communion?" Would he not deny the charge, and pronounce it as unreasonable as it was cruel? Would he not contend, that when a church acts in conformity with Scripture, its acts are to be considered as resting on the ground of Divine authority?
"Our readers will readily perceive the application of these principles to the case at hand. If a church, in the forming of her creed, do really introduce into that creed no article but what she finds in the Bible; if she call upon those who seek admission into her bosom to believe nothing but what the Bible calls upon them to believe; and if she demand their reception of those articles, not because she herself believes them, but because the Bible teaches them; - can she, in this case be charged with imposing anything on the human conscience, in virtue of her own authority? . . . . Again, suppose the church in question not only to put nothing into her creed but what she really finds, or thinks she finds, in scripture; but also to insert no article but what she is verily persuaded the Bible authorizes her to insert, for promoting the unity of faith: . . . . If a church, indeed, substitute 'for doctrines the commandments of men,' and call upon those who wish to come within her pale, to believe what Christ himself does not call upon them to believe; then she is justly chargeable with guilt in the sight of both God and man. But if the divine authority is that on which she really rests, and to which she constantly appeals, in all that she does; and if this authority is made to operate only on those who deliberately and of choice bring themselves within its reach; - it is manifestly an abuse of terms, as well as an unjust accusation, to speak of her as imposing her dogmas upon the consciences of men." (457-458)

Length of Relevant Material: 13pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Bible translation; corruption of Bible

Author: W. C. Brownlee

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Miscellaneous No. V: Gleanings and Hints Towards an Argument for the Authenticity of I John, v.7."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Feb., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: The author argues that the manuscripts originating in the Eastern Church are superior to the Western with respect to the subject verse I John 5:7 -- "There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one."

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "Amid the doubts and difficulties with which the Biblical critick occasionally finds himself beset, the pious mind will distinctly perceive, and devoutly acknowledge, the hand of the Divine Preserver of the doctrinal purity and integrity of the sacred text. Copies of the Scriptures were multiplied to a great extent, over the face of the Churches, at the earliest periods. And when it happened that in one section, or nation, the carelessness of transcribers, or the malignant purposes of an enemy, or the cowardly jealousy of a friend, had committed an injury on the sacred text; an abundance of witnesses started up in other sections and nations, to correct, to restore, and to preserve the integrity of the whole. Over the whole history of this, the eye of the scholar cannot but recognise the supervision of an invisible hand, mysteriously bending every design, and overruling every event, to the establishment of the perfect doctrinal integrity of the holy scriptures."

"The criticks of the German school . . . use unjustifiable liberties with the sacred style; particularly with that of John. . . . But we may fearlessly say that no scholar can impeach the grammar of an inspired writer: or can convict him of a gross solecism. A priori, the thing is impossible. It is enough to say that he Holy Spirit was with him. He who gave the gift of tongues, would not give it in imperfection: far less with the drawback of palpable blemishes; still less would he bestow a gift involving false grammar, and absurdities which would expose to the ridicule of men his venerable apostles, employed in discoursing on the most grave subjects." (70)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Hard Copy (pages): 3 cols.

Date when Photocopying was Completed: ____________________________

Topics: Christianization of the Old Testament; temple

Author: John M'Kinney

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Miscellaneous. On Psalmody."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Dec., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: In the course of discussing the appropriateness both of using psalmody, but not limiting hymns to the Psalms, the writer gives a traditionally Christian reading of Old Testament text as prophesying Christ; makes a classically Protestant statement of the obsolescence of the temple rites; and employs such terms as "dispensations" and "adoption" to make his point of liberation in Christ.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "As I said in the preceding letter, I say again, the Psalms, as well as the books of Moses, contain the eternal truth of God, 'written for our learning,' &c., 'profitable for doctrine,' &c.; and it is our duty and our privilege to use them for these purposes. But the command to sing them always referred to the temple worship; and like the commands to circumcise - to keep the passover - to keep up all the types of Christ in lively view - ceased to be binding when the temple service ceased. You will keep in mind that there is as great a difference between the Psalms themselves, and the ceremony of singing them, as there is between the record of the types of Christ, and the ceremony of exhibiting those types. If you ask why the record of the types would not do before the coming of Christ as well as after? - why they might not have been spared all the expense and trouble of sacrifice, &c. - I answer, Because, as all types and prophecies are necessarily dark and mysterious till after the fulfilment, it was necessary to have sacrifice actually performed, in order to keep up a distinct and lively view of the type itself on the mind, till the Antitype should come. With types it was necessary to connect prophecy; and no plan could be better devised than what the Lord did appoint. The prophecies contained in the Psalms were to be sung in close connection with the typical rites, that when Christ should come they might see both the types and prophecy which were every day exhibited and uttered, fulfilled in him.

". . . But when those types and prophecies were fulfilled, then the same necessity did not exist, and the people of God were set free from the obligation of either exhibiting the one or singing the other. They were then permitted to leave off all their antecedent forms, and to look to Jesus himself through the clear revelation of the New Testament . . ."

"The Apostle, in Gal. v.1-7, draws a lively comparison between the two dispensations: . . . Here is a contrast sufficiently strong between the Old Testament and New Testament children, to give us a satisfactory reason why the former should be confined to the temple service and the singing of the prophetical psalms alone, but we be at liberty to worship God in every place, and to speak his praises according to the influences of that spirit of adoption which he has given us, to enable us to cry Abba! Father!" (541-542)

Length of Relevant Material: 5 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: church discipline; principles of church government; lay priesthood and preaching, call to preach, educated ministry; proselyting, taking the gospel to all the world; ordination

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Synod of New-York. Narrative of the state of religion within the bounds of New-York - Oct. 1833."

Place of Publication: New York, NY.

Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.

Date of Publication: Oct. 26, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The committee of bills and overtures reported a memorial and petition from the Presbytery of Chillicothe, Presbytery of Miami, and Presbytery of Oxford, complaining of the ordination of evangelists (sine titulo) by the 3d Presbytery of New-York, ad praying for their dissolution . . . .

"Resolved [upon receipt of requested information from the accused, it was concluded] that the 3d Presbytery did, in the month of October, 1831, ordain eight young gentlemen as evangelists, with special reference to missionary service in the Valley of the Mississippi, under the impression that the measure was not only required by the small number of settled pastors at the West, and their distant location from each other, but would prove in all respects a grateful service to the churches in that region. This impression the Presbytery had gained from what they considered sufficient evidence subsequent information, however, convinced the, that it was not desirable, on several accounts, to multiply ordinations sine titulo; and since that time (for the term of more than two years,) the Presbytery have not ordained a single licentiate for the West.

"Resolved, that the Synod transmit the above communication from the 3d Presbytery to the brethren complaining of their acts, with the hope that it may prove satisfactory to them, as it is satisfactory to the Synod.

"The report and resolution were accepted and adopted." (169)

Length of Relevant Material:
Hard Copy (pages): 3 paras.
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: consecration; covenant

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Religious: To Pious Young Men."

Place of Publication: New York, NY.

Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.

Date of Publication: Oct. 12, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment: Of particular note in this excerpt is the language of both the nature of the duty imposed and the witnesses to it.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "Young Men, - Are you duly sensible of the claims which the Lord and the world have upon you? Do you [re]flect that yourselves, your time, talents, all, are God's property? Do you not acknowledge God's right in you, . . .claims upon you, when you said, 'Here, Lord, I give myself away; every power and thought be thine - . . .entirely; through eternal ages thine?" [ellipses mark illegible text in margin of microfilm] When you publicly professed religion, did you not solemnly covenant, before God, angels, and men, to devote yourselves to the interest and honor of the Godhead?" (161)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: covenant; happiness as God's purpose for humans
Author:
Title of Book: "Lectures on the Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XIV."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: A. Finley
Date of Publication: May, 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.
Comment: In the context of a discussion of the events in the Garden, the author speaks of God's purposes in terms of human "happiness" and the accomplishing of those purposes through obedience to covenant. See also June, 1825 issue at page 241.
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "But the promise of eternal life to Adam, if he remained faithful, during the period of his probation, insured to him a higher measure or degree of happiness, than any which could have been claimed or expected, if God had not promised it to him by covenant. There was grace, therefore on the part of God, even in the covenant of works - grace in the Creation condescending to treat at all with his creature in the way of covenant; and grace in covenanting to raise him to a higher state of happiness, if obedient, than that to which he could otherwise ever have risen" (194).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages): 1
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: covenant, presidency, basis of authority, order, lay priesthood and preaching
Author: John Starkweather
Title of Book: The Object and Importance of a Church Covenant: A Sermon
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: Place of Publication: Providence, [R.I]
Publisher: Philanthropic Press
Date of Publication: 1833
Nature of Source: A 20-page sermon on the meaning of convent ritual in early 19th century Congregationalist churches.
Comment: This sermon provides an instructive contrast to L.D.S concepts of covenant and church order during the 1830's.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The members of these churches have adopted, and are constantly acting upon the principle, that no man, or body of men, has any right to preside over or govern them, unless they have unanimously delegated that right. They claim and exercise the right of choosing their own officers, and regulating their own concerns, responsible to none but Jesus Christ, the sovereign Head of the Church." (11)

Length of Relevant Material: 20 pp.

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: covenant, presidency, basis of authority, order, lay priesthood and preaching

Author: John Starkweather

Title of Book: The Object and Importance of a Church Covenant: A Sermon

Title of Article: "To the Ministers of the Gospel Belonging to the Reformed Dutch Church in the United States of America."

Let then the christian [sic] who reads of wars, and rumors of wars, on the ill-fated continent of which she constitutes a part, and who sees its different nations madly rise and destroy each other at a moment's warning, view all their movements without distraction, and even when he sees them rolling in each other's blood, let him remember that these things are preparing the way for the coming of that blessed time . . . . But the greatest indication that the day-spring from on high is soon to visit the benighted parts of our world, is the extensive out-pouring of the Holy Spirit upon the church. . . . Since then the signs of the times seem to indicate the approach of the millennial day, it is an inquiry which ought to be instituted by every christian [sic], whether he is doing all he can to forward it. This inquiry will necessarily involve the subject of foreign missions.

(177)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 paras.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: discipline

Author:

Title of Book:  "Minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America."

Title of Article:  The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication:  Philadelphia, PA

Publisher:  A. Finley

Date of Publication:  Sep., 1825

Nature of Source:  A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: This is a portion of the minutes of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church and consists of rules discipline for dealing with persons who have been absent for long periods of time or who have affiliated with another denomination. Subsequent pages deal with issues of church order, i.e., the validity of ordinances performed by suspended clergy, the propriety of entertaining sermons from or communing with Cumberland Presbyterians.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Church members, therefore, who have been absent for a number of years in unknown places, are by no means to have their names erased from the churches to which they respectively belong; but are to be held responsible to their respective churches; and if they should ever return, or be heard from, are to be regularly dealt with according to the word of God, and the principles of our church; and although great caution and tenderness ought to be exercised toward those whose withdrawing from Christian privileges may be occasioned by the unavoidable dispensations of Providence without any material fault of their own, yet in all cases in which a church session has good reason to believe that any of the church under their care have absented themselves with design, either from disregard of Christian privilege, or from a wish to escape from the inspection and discipline of the church, they ought without unnecessary delay to declare such persons suspended from the privileges of the church, until they give evidence of repentance and reformation: and, of course, in making their statistical reports, ought to enumerate such among the members under suspension." (422)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: earth and environment
Author:
Title of Book: "Lectures on the Shorter catechism of the Westminster Assembly of divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XII."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: A. Finley
Date of Publication: Feb., 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.
Comment: This excerpt occurs in the context of a discussion of human dominion over creatures.
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "The inferior animals, in various ways, feel the effects of man's transgression. . . . We have seen that we have the divine permission [after the Flood] to use the inferior animals for food. We have, also, a right to avail ourselves of the strength and labour of such of them as can be employed, to diminish or assist the toil of man. But all mere sporting with the lives or feelings of any of these animals - the infliction upon them of unnecessary pain or suffering, either while they live, or when we take their lives
- all this is unwarranted by our common Creator - it is wanton, wicked cruelty, contrary to God's revealed will, and to every dictated of humanity." (54)

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Egyptian

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Literary and Philosophical Intelligence: Sea Provisions"

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Mar., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "It is stated that M. Champollion has found, among the numerous rolls of Egyptian Papyrus in the Royal Museum at Turin, twenty historical manuscripts which relate to the 18th and 19th dynasty of Manethon. These precious documents, it is expected will throw great light on a portion of ancient history, respecting which we have so few remains." (33)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 sentences

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Egyptian

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, etc."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Jan., 1825.

Nature of the source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: These are series of short, news-worthy items. The instant entry contains a description of the place in which the artifact was found; the artifact's measurement and physical properties; etc.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "A magnificent Sarcophagus, has been brought to Paris, from one of the ancient sepulchers of Memphis . . . . It is covered with hieroglyphics, mythological figures and symbols, executed in a superior style." (36)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 paragraph

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: [end of prophecy, diverse philosophies]

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: presidency

Title of Periodical: The Literary and Theological Review

Publisher: D. Appleton & Co.(NY); William Pierce (MA); O. Rich (London)

Date of Publication: Jan., 1834 (Vol. I)

Nature of Source: Founded and edited by Leonard Woods, this periodical was the organ of the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations. It contained articles written by clergy and teachers, and although orthodox theology was the chief material, it also included some literary criticism and articles on education, social questions, and science. In 1837, Charles D. Pigeon assumed the editorship. Its stated purpose was "the statement and vindication of the doctrines of the Christian religion, as held by the great body of the Reformed Church." (Advertisement, Vol. 1, p. 1.)

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "It has been the method of Providence in past ages, to raise up single individuals, prepared by a peculiar training and by eminent endowments of wisdom and piety, whose higher station should enable them to descry from afar any threatening danger, and whose more ascendant influence should enable them to adopt the necessary measures of precaution. But in the wider diffusion of knowledge, and consequent equalization of influence, this method would seem to be forsaken, for one more consonant with the altered condition of society. . . . since, then, we can look to no official or recognized guardians of the momentous affairs of the cause of Christ, how important is it that private Christians should accustom themselves to more enlarged views, should enquire into the ultimate bearings and consequences of prevailing opinions and practices, and feel especially that they are sacredly bound to guard that system of faith, upon whose purity the whole prosperity of religion depends!" (19)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Topics: endless punishment
Author: Robert Hall
Title of Book: "Select Paragraphs."
Title of Article: "Select Paragraphs."
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Nov. 9, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment: Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "The dissolution of the body, so far from exhausting the curse of sin, is but a preparation; like knocking off the chains and fetters from a prisoner who is about to be led forth to the place of execution. The opposite of eternal life is eternal death - the death of the soul, which consists in the perpetual loss of hope; a cutting off from the presence and favor of God; a sense of his eternal wrath, which burns like devouring fire." (180)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: gathering

Author: Joseph Wolff, Missionary of the Jews

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Mr. Wolff's Farewell to his Indian Friends."

Place of Publication: New York, NY.

Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.

Date of Publication: Jun. 8, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "To my dear English friends scattered throughout India . . . . Soon, very soon, the sign of the Son of Man shall be seen in Heaven, and the Captain of the Lord's Host, the Lion of the tribe of Judah shall appear, and gather his chosen people from one corner of the earth to the other; and he shall reign at Jerusalem one thousand years glorious, and the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, and the waters cover the sea!" (92)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: God; angels; Council in Heaven

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter catechism of the Westminster Assembly of divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XII."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Feb., 1825

Nature of the Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: This is an exegesis of the use of the plural pronoun "us" in the account of the creation of man. The author reviews three explanations, rejecting two: namely, as a "royal we" and as referring to angels or other creatures. Concludes with defense of Trinity.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "When the world was formed and completely furnished for his residence, a council of the Godhead is held on the creation of man - 'Let us make man.' . . . It was the purpose of God, though not then revealed, that the second person of the Godhead should become man; . . ." (49)

"[A]ssociating them [angels] with himself [God], in the exercise of the divine prerogatives [of creation], seems to savour [sic] at once of the extravagance of folly, and the extreme of impiety." Such a concept is "monstrous in the extreme." (50)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Competed:

---

Topics: God; spirit, soul and body; intelligences; spirit and matter; progressive

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter catechism of the Westminster Assembly of divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XII."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Feb., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "When it is said, however, that man was created in the image of God, there is probably no reference whatever, either figurative or literal, to his bodily form. We are forbidden even to imagine any resemblance between the Creator and any modification of matter whatsoever. Man's being made in the image of God, therefore, must refer entirely to the incorporeal part of our nature. (1.) The soul of man is a spiritual being. In this it resembles his Maker, who is a pure and infinite spirit. The intellectual part of man is indeed to the infinite intelligence of God, but as a ray or particle of light to the sun. But as every beam of light bears a resemblance to the sun, so does every human soul bear a spiritual resemblance to its Creator.

"(2.) The soul of man is immortal. . . . God formed the human soul to endure, from its creation, as long as himself. In this respect man is formed in the image of his Maker. "(3.) As man resembles his Creator in the nature of his soul, so he also does in its exercises or acts. Mere matter is incapable of intelligence; and the mere animal creation want he endowments of reason and judgment. Man can reason, compare, and judge; he can will, choose and refuse; he is capable of great, probably of an endless, progression or improvement in knowledge. In this knowledge, and in these intellectual exercises, he bears some resemblance to the great fountain of wisdom and intellectual excellence.

"(4.) And chiefly - Man, in his original formation, bore the image of his Maker, in his moral powers." (49-52)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 49-52
Date when Photocopying was Completed:
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topics</th>
<th>Jehovah</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Author</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title of Book</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title of Article</td>
<td>&quot;Miscellaneous. On Psalmody.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title of Periodical</td>
<td>The Christian Advocate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Place of Publication</td>
<td>Philadelphia, PA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Publisher</td>
<td>A. Finley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Date of Publication</td>
<td>Nov., 1825</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nature of Source</td>
<td>A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Comment</td>
<td>The article is devoted to a controversy over the &quot;system of sacred song which ought to be used in the publick worship of God.&quot; The central question is the value of Old Testament terminology in Christian hymns. Within the article, a letter of July 4, 1825, by &quot;John M'Kinney&quot; is printed which explicitly associates the term &quot;Jehovah&quot; with the Trinity.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Researcher</td>
<td>Kathleen Flake</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Excerpt (pages)</td>
<td>&quot;'I use psalms and hymns, the sentiments of which are all taken from the word of God. They contain nothing new. They are the scriptural praises of the Triune Jehovah, conveyed poetical language.'&quot; (490, quoting John M'Kinney)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Length of Relevant Material</td>
<td>3 pps.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hard Copy (pages)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Date when Photocopying was Completed:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topics</th>
<th>Jews; Israel; ten tribes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Author</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title of Book</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title of Article</td>
<td>&quot;Religious Intelligence: A Narrative of the State of Religion within the Bounds of the Presbyterian Church, and its corresponding Churches in the United States.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Title of Periodical</td>
<td>The Christian Advocate</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Place of Publication</td>
<td>Philadelphia, PA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Publisher</td>
<td>A. Finley</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Date of Publication</td>
<td>Jun, 1825</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nature of Source</td>
<td>A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: In this report on the status of Presbyterian institutions, the reference to the "restoration of the lost tribes of Israel" apparently includes all twelve tribes and relates to the condition of their souls, not their geographic location.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The American society for meliorating the condition of the Jews, is tell in active operation - It ascends to the first and most powerful elements of success, in the great work of converting the world - when it attempts the restoration of the lost tribes of Israel. They are a peculiar people in peculiar circumstances - and call for peculiar methods of doing them service. Among the methods devised for their recovery, some one must soon and mightily triumph. God speed that day!" (280)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching, call to preach, educated ministry; proselyting, taking the gospel to all the world

Author:

Title of Book: "Revivals."
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Nov. 2, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment: This article provides an example within Presbyterianism of lay missionary activity in the context of a revival. This may reflect a "new light" practice only, given that "old light" Presbyterianism disapproved of revivals.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "Before our meeting commenced, the church members went out two and two to invite the people in all sections of the town, and in the adjacent neighborhoods in Canada, to attend the meeting. They made the visits a serious matter, by conversing with individuals on the subject of personal religion. While the meeting was in progress, some of the brethren went abroad with their carriages and brought in the poor and neglected, from neighborhoods too remote for women to walk." (174)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching, call to preach, educated ministry
In some preceding numbers of the Recorder we briefly expressed our sentiments upon the subject of Lay-Preaching: and we still consider it as unwarranted by the Word of God, and as fraught with danger to the peace, purity, and spiritual prosperity of the church Christ. It was not, however, our design to discourage, in any degree, the exertions of lay-men in their proper spheres, to promote the important interests of evangelical piety. On the contrary, we believe that they are able and under obligations to do much, in various ways, to advance the kingdom of God; and may not only be efficient auxiliaries to pastors of churches, but highly useful in vacant congregations. . . . many congregations never assemble together on the Sabbath for religious worship when no minister is expected to attend; or if they assemble to hear the word of God, but the minister fails to attend, they return home without engaging in any religious exercises, because there are no persons present who are willing to lead in the worship, and the sentiment prevails that it is the exclusive business of ministers to conduct public worship, and that it is improper for elders or other church members to pray and read a chapter of sermon in the congregation. From such a state of things may all our churches be delivered!" (186)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages): 186

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching, call to preach, educated ministry; proselyting, taking the gospel to all the world
Mr. Cloud, who was ordained at the Wall street church last Sabbath evening, and who is about to sail as a missionary to Africa in the ship Jupiter, from Norfolk, is to derive his whole support, it seems, from the churches within the presbytery of Miami in Ohio. This was resolved upon at the meeting of the presbytery at Piqua on the 18th ult. The following account of their proceedings in relation to this matter is from the Cincinnati Journal.

'An item of business of the greatest general interest, relates to the reception by Presbytery of a young man as their missionary to a foreign land. A short history of this case may not be unacceptable. An agent of the Western F. M. S. located at Pittsburgh, attended a meeting of Presbytery held last spring, and addressed the Presbytery on behalf of said society, after which Presbytery resolved to become auxiliary to said society, and that, in reliance upon a kind providence, they would support a missionary in a foreign field, under the direction of the Board of Pittsburgh. The Board having it in view to send a mission to Central Africa, and having selected Mr. John Cloud, licentiate of the Presbytery of Ohio, as one of this mission, directed him to repair to this presbytery, in order that there might be an opportunity for forming an acquaintance with him; and should it be agreeable to the members, they might select him as their missionary, whom they would sustain in a foreign field.

'Mr. Cloud was selected by this presbytery as their missionary, and a meeting was held on the second day of the sessions, in reference to his being set apart to the important and arduous work of a missionary in a heathen land. At half past 10 o'clock the congregation convened, when the exercises of the day were introduced with singing and prayer by the pastor of the congregation; after which an interesting address on the subject missions was delivered by Mr. Cloud. Then after singing an appropriate hymn, a very solemn charge was delivered to the missionary, by Mr. Crane, who was followed by Mr. Stevenson with an appropriate address to the congregation. All the exercises appeared solemn and impressive; and we cannot but hope that an impulse was given to the cause of missions, which will be felt for many days to come.' (166)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Topics: location; barbarism to civilization as related to religion.

Author:
For the Christian Advocate: Christian Emigration.

The Christian Advocate

Philadelphia, PA

A. Finley

Aug, 1825

A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: The author laments the barbarism of the new territories and recommends the Puritan model of settlement where immigration was not undertaken without ministers and schoolmasters. This pages illuminate both the perception of clergyman as purveyors of civilization and the new territories as existing "beyond the region of gospel light."

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "It appears to us that the great and general want of ministers of the gospel, and of all Christian ordinances and institutions, in our new and extensive settlements, is, in a considerable degree, owing to a great criminality in professing Christians themselves, who have rashly removed beyond the region of gospel light, to one of the darkness of which they now loudly and justly complain; but which, as we think, they ought to have foreseen and avoided, and therefore have too much reason to consider as a divine chastisement." (340)

"We know that it has always been difficult in our country to find clergymen and teachers of youth, qualified and willing to go into an uncultivated wilderness. But this difficulty would have been greatly diminished - we believe it would have been nearly annihilated - if ministers and schoolmasters had been sought for by a Christian company before its removal from home; so that they might have had the sure prospect both of employment and a degree of support; and not that of being left among a rude population, without friends, patronage, or much hope of usefulness. . . Had this plan been adopted, in making settlements on our frontiers, immediately after the close of our revolutionary war, and been continued to the present time, the moral wastes and desolations that now meet the view, and pain the heart of every Christian who looks to the borders and territories of the United States, would, to say the least, have worn a far less dismaying aspect." (342-343)

Length of Relevant Material: 9 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: millennial conditions

Author:

Title of Book:
Title of Article: "General Assembly."

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment: This entry illustrates the Presbyterian view of the "latter days" and includes their understanding of the faithful's proper response to them. Compare D&C 41 & 124.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "DAY OF PRAYER FOR THE CONVERSION OF THE WORLD. The committee appointed to consider the expediency of appoint a special season of fasting, humiliation and prayer, in refutation to the conversion of the world to God, &c. . . made a report, which being read and amended, was adopted and is as follows, viz. The General Assembly, deeply impressed by the signs of the times, and while they are called as office-bearers in the church of Christ, to take an active part in the recommending and prosecuting of measures for the spread of the Gospel, judge it to be weightily incumbent on them to call the special attention of the churches and people under their care to this important and interesting concern. It is believed that no well intentioned Christian, who seriously and impartially contemplates the aspects and movements of Protestant Christianity at the present time, can resist the conviction, that the prophetic annunciations, relative to the latter-day glory of the church militant, are rapidly tending to their accomplishment. The varied indications . . . are public and palpable and every man of our people, with an exemplary zeal and liberality, have connected themselves with the institutions and operations which concentrate their influence like so many different rays of light, in one common and glorious point, to scatter the moral millennial day." (89)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Topics: missionary work; consecration

Author: Rev. Horatio Bardwell, formerly Missionary to India.
included some literary criticism and articles on education, social questions, and science. In 1837, Charles D. Pigeon assumed the editorship.

Comment: In the course of explaining why the ancient church was so successful in propagating Christianity throughout the Roman Empire, the author notes the universality of missionary activity by all believers irrespective of status and regrets abandonment of this principle in contemporary practice. Ultimately, he explains this shift in terms of a failure to consecrate everything to Christ, as did the early believers.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The church in the apostolic age, considered the conversion of the world to Christ a work of common interest, and of immediate and paramount importance. . . . They made it a common cause; clergy and laity, male and female, young and old, all lived and acted for the universal promulgation of the gospel. . . . There was not then one standard of duty for the ministry, and another for private Christians. Then, I apprehend, there was not much said of missionary spirit, as a special gift of the Holy Ghost to a favoured few, while the majority felt themselves under no obligations to act by the same rule. . . . Oh! That the church had never wandered from the path of primitive purity and faithfulness . . . . There is one fact pertaining to the first age of the Christian church, which is very unlike anything that has obtained since. The church in that age, as has been remarked, took a common interest in the promulgation of the gospel; as a body, they case their all into a common fund to be appropriated to the great cause. It was indeed a voluntary contribution, but it was entire. . . . But in no succeeding age has this practice obtained, unless it be at our missionary stations. I would not be understood to advocate the literal application of the common-stock system, as it respects the property of the church at the present day. The circumstances of the church in this age, are such as would render it obviously inexpedient. All I would plead for is the principle on which they acted; which is entire consecration to Christ. . . . This uniform and entire consecration to God is necessary to give efficacy to the prayers of the Church for the spread of the Gospel. " (96, 98, 99-100)

Length of Relevant Material: 13 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Mormonism

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The Mormonites."

Place of Publication: New York, NY.

Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.

Date of Publication: Nov. 9, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "A friend from the upper part of Oxford County [Maine] informs us, that one Mormon preacher from Ohio and another from New-Hampshire, reinforced by a pair of preachers from Saco, have been making a great stir somewhere about Lake Umbagog. In the plantation of Letter B. In the vicinity of Lake Umbagog, nearly the whole of a Freewill Baptist Church, numbering thirty persons with their pastor, have gone over to the Mormonites, and avowed their faith in the book of Mormon. They have all been re-baptized in the waters of the Lake. In Andover the preachers have had some trouble with the citizens, and were rather unceremoniously dismissed. - Portland Adv."

(179)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Mormonism
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Regulating the Mormonites."
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Aug. 24, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment:
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "We copy from the St. Louis Republican the following account of the high-handed measures pursued by the people of Jackson county, in Missouri, with a view to rid themselves of the Mormonites. The principle acted upon is the same with that adopted by the Georgians in the case of the Cherokees, and by the Canterbury people in the case of Mss Crandall. As the editor of the Republican truly observes, these proceedings 'are wholly at war with the genius of our institutions,' and it requires but little discernment to perceive that if they should be tolerated by the public opinion they will very naturally prepare the way for an extensive invasion of the liberty of the people both civil and religious.

'Some very extraordinary proceedings have recently taken place in Jackson county, in this state, against the sect of fanatics called Mormons. These proceedings may find some justification in the necessity of the case, but they are wholly at war with the genius of our institutions, and as subversive of good order as the conduct of the fanatics themselves. Perhaps, however, it was the only method which could have been effectively put in practice to get this odious description of population out of the way.

'A meeting of the citizens of Jackson county to the number of four or five hundred, was held at Independence on the 20th of July. Their avowed object was to take measures to rid themselves of the Mormonites. Col. Richard Simpson was called to the chair. A committee was then appointed to report an address to the public, in relation to the object of the meeting. They submitted an address, which was unanimously adopted; and in which the conduct and views of the obnoxious sect are expounded. They represented that the Mormonites number some 1200 souls in that county, and that each successive spring and autumn pours forth its swarms among them, with gradual falling off in the character of the people, until they have now nearly reached the low condition of the black population; that the citizens have been daily told, that they are to be cut off, and their lands to be appropriated to the Mormonites for inheritances; but they are not fully agreed among themselves as to the manner in which this shall be accomplished whether by the destroying angel, the judgment of God, or the arm of power. The committee express their fears that, should this population continue to increase, they will soon have all the offices of the county in their hands; and that the lives and property of the other citizens would be insecure, under the administration of men who are so ignorant and superstitious as to believe that they have been the subjects of miraculous and supernatural cures; hold converse with God and his angels, and possess and exercise the gift of divination and of unknown tongues; and are, withal, so poor as to be unable to procure bread and meat. The committee say, that "one of the means resorted to by them, in order to drive us to emigrate, is an indirect invitation to the free brethren of color in Illinois, to come like the rest to the land of Zion. True, the Mormons say this was not intended to invite, but to prevent emigration; but this weak attempt to quiet our apprehension, is but a poor compliment to our understandings." The invitation alluded to, contained all the necessary directions and cautions, to enable the free blacks, on their arrival there, to claim and exercise the rights of citizenship. Finally the committee say:

"Of their pretended revelations from heaven - their personal intercourse with God and his angels - the maladies they pretend to heal by the laying on of hands - and the contemptible gibberish with which they habitually profane the Sabbath, and which they dignify with the appellation of unknown tongues, we have nothing to say. Vengeance belongs to God alone. But as to the other matters set forth in this paper, we feel called on by every consideration of self-preservation, good society, public morals, and the fair prospects that, if not blasted in the germ, await this young and beautiful country, at once to declare, and we do hereby most solemnly declare,

"1. That no Mormon shall in future move and settle in this county.

"2. That those not there, who shall give a definite pledge of their intention within a reasonable time to remove out of the county, shall be allowed to remain unmolested until they have sufficient time to sell their property, and close their business without any material sacrifice.

"3. That the editor of the "Star" be required forthwith to close his office, and discontinue the business of printing in this county; and as to all other store and shops belonging to the sect, their owners must in every case strictly comply with the terms of the second article of this declaration, and upon failure, prompt and efficient measures will be taken to close the same.

"4. That the Mormon leaders here, are required to use their influence in preventing any farther [sic] emigration of their distant brethren to this county, and to counsel and advise their brethren here to comply with the above requisitions.

"5. That those who fail to comply with these requisitions, be referred to those of their brethren who have the gifts of divination and of unknown tongues, to inform them of what awaits them."
'Which address being read and considered, was unanimously adopted. And thereupon it was resolved that a committee of twelve be appointed forthwith to wait on the Mormon leaders, and see that the foregoing requisitions are strictly complied with by them; and upon their refusal, the said committee do, as the organ of this county, inform them that it is our unwavering purpose and fixed determination, after the fullest consideration of all the consequences and responsibilities under which we act, to use such means as shall insure their full and complete adoption, and that said committee, so far as may be within their power, report to this present meeting.

'After an adjournment of two hours, the meeting again convened, and the committee of twelve reported that they had called on Mr. Phelps, the editor of the "Star," Edward Partridge, the bishop of the sect, and Mr. Gilbert, the keeper of the Lord's store-house, and some others, and that they declined giving any direct answer to the requisitions made of them, and wished an unreasonable time for consultation, not only with their brethren here, but in Ohio.

'Whereupon, it was unanimously resolved by the meeting, that the "Star" printing office should be razed to the ground, and the type and press secured. Which resolution was, with the utmost order, and the least noise or disturbance possible, forthwith carried into execution, as also some other steps of similar tendency; but no blood was spilled nor any blows inflicted [sic]. The meeting then adjourned till the 23d inst. to meet again to know further concerning the determination of the Mormons.

The citizens again held a meeting on the 23d of July, 1833, which was composed of gentleman from all parts of the country, and much more numerously attended than the meeting on the 20th inst. The meeting was organized by the chairman taking his seat, when seventeen gentleman were appointed to wait upon the Mormon leaders, who had intimated a wish to have a conference with said committee. After an adjournment of two hours, the meeting again convened, when the committee reported to the meeting that they had waited on most of the Mormon leaders, consisting of the bishop, Mr. Partridge, Mr. Phelps, editor of the Star [sic], Mr. Gilbert, the keeper of the Lord's store-house, and Messrs. Carrol, Whitmer, and Moseley, elders of the church, and that the said committee had entered into an amicable agreement with them, which they had reduced to writing, which they submitted; and that the committee had assured Mr. Phelps that whenever he was ready to move, the amount of all his losses should be paid to him by the citizens.

The written agreement is as follows:

"Memorandum of agreement between the undersigned of the Mormon society, in Jackson co. [sic] Missouri, and a committee appointed by a public meeting of the citizens of said county, made the 23d of July, 1833.

"It is understood that het undersigned, members of the society, do give their solemn pledges, each for himself, as follows, to wit:

"That Oliver Cowdery, W.W. Phelps, William McCleland, Edward Partridge, Lyman Wight, Simeon Carter, Peter and John Whitmer, and Harvey Whitlock, shall remove with their families out of this county, on or before the first day of January next, and that they, as well as the two hereinafter named, use all their influence to induce all the brethren now here to remove as soon as possible - one half, say, by the first of January next, and all by the first day of April next. To advise and try all means in their power, to stop any more of their sect from moving to this county; and as to those now on the road, they will use their influence to prevent their settling permanently in the county, but that they shall only make arrangements for temporary shelter, till a new location is agreed on for the society. John Carrol and Algernon Gilbert are allowed to remain as general agents to wind up the business of the society, so long as necessity shall require; and said Gilbert may sell out his merchandise now on hand, but is to make no new importation.

"The 'Star' is not again to be published, nor a press set up by any of the society in this county.

"If the said Edward Partridge and W.W. Phelps move their families by the first day of January, as aforesaid, that they themselves will be allowed to go and come in order to transact and wind up their business.'

"The committee pledge themselves to use all their influence to prevent any violence being used so long as a compliance with the foregoing terms is observed by the parties concerned, to which agreement is subscribed the names of the above named committee, as also those of the Mormon brethren named in the report as having been present.'

'The report of the committee was unanimously adopted by the meeting, and it was then adjourned.'(135)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
We perceive by a letter from Independence, Missouri, to the Editor of the Cincinnati Journal, that difficulties have already begun in the Mormon community, at Mount Zion, in that quarter; one of the members having sued the bishop, in a court of justice for fifty dollars, which had been sent by plaintiff to said Bishop, from Ohio, "to purchase an inheritance for himself and the saints in Zion in these latter days." The jury found for the plaintiff; it appearing that though the bishop had indeed appropriated the money "to the purchase of an inheritance," yet he had procured the deed to be drawn in his own name, to his heirs, &c. The writer states that on this decision several other members are ready to make similar demands on the bishop. It appears by another letter from the same gentlemen, (Mr. Pixley, a clergyman,) that since their settlement at Mount Zion - or Jerusalem, as they sometimes term it - four or five hundred, including men, women, and children have arrived there. Seven others are said to be preparing to start there, from Cincinnati, in the course of a few weeks. - Ohio Courant.
A correspondent of the Journal of Commerce under date of Lexington, mo. July 25th says: 'Six hundred or more Mormonites have emigrated within the last two years to Jackson City, in the next county to this, and have rendered themselves obnoxious to the citizens by holding out inducements for free negroes to settle in the county, and urging slaves to be unfaithful. Last week the citizens organized themselves for the purpose of breaking up the establishment. Their [the Mormonite] printing press was torn down, - store and machine shop broken up, - the leaders tarred and feathered and a time set for their departure. What course may be pursued towards the followers, is not yet known." (131)

Topics: Mormonism

Author:

Title of Book:

"Civil War in Missouri."

Title of Article: The New York Observer.

Title of Periodical: Vol. XI, No. 49. - whole no. 552.

Place of Publication: New York, NY.

Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.

Date of Publication: Dec. 7, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment: This issue of the paper provides two stories from opposing perspectives on the war between the Missourians and the Mormons. This excerpt consists of the commentary by the editors of the Observer to a letter from Rev. Pixley, which is not included here because of length. Portions of Orson Hyde's account are excerpted in a separate entry. Rev. Pixley's account is a defense of the reasonableness of the citizen's actions against the Mormons.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "On our last page we have given an account of a war between the Mormonites and their neighbors in Missouri, from the pen of a Mormonite. The following letter from the Rev. B. Pixley to the editors of the New York Observer, gives a different coloring to some parts of he story. There seems, however, to be no doubt that the enemies of the Mormonites have always been te aggressors. . . . It may be very unpleasant to have such men as the Mormonites for neighbors, but so long as they do nothing worse than 'invite free negroes to join them from all parts of the country,' and merely publish the prophecy that the present inhabitants of the counties in their vicinity are destined 'to be driven off, and that they, the Mormons, are to possess the country,' we think they might have been safely left to themselves. There can rarely be a case in which the people need any other protection against 'fanatics' than that which is afforded by the laws of the land, and we have not yet seen any reason for making this case an exception to the general rule." (194)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
We lament to say that the following account, in its most essential features, is confirmed by other passengers in the steam boat to Charleston:

"On board the steam boat Charleston, St. Louis, Nov. 9th, 1833"

"Messrs. Editors, - I take this opportunity to give you and your readers a brief sketch of the most flagrant and outrageous violation of the constitution of our country, that has taken place since it was framed."

'I am a member of the church [sic] of Christ, (reproachfully called Mormons or Mormonites,) and am directly from Independence, the seat of war, and bloodshed in the United States. On Thursday night, Oct. 31, some forty or fifty of the citizens of Jackson county, Mo., . . . in part demolished twelve of the dwelling houses of our people who occupied them at the time. . . . They took two of our men and beat them with stones and clubs . . . . Friday night, Nov. 1, the mob broke open the store of Gilbert & Whitney, and scattered their goods through the street. . . . demolished Mr. Gilbert's brick dwelling house and broke in the doors and windows of all the dwellings in Independence of our people. . . . Saturday, our people left their dwellings . . . . Night came on, and the mob came along with it, and commenced their ravages . . . after they had fired five or six guas [sic] upon our people without effect, our people fired upon them and one of their number exclaimed "O my God! I am shot!" The mob then dispersed . . . . On Monday last the mob collected again, . . . to the number of two or three hundred, well armed; they called it, calling out the militia. . . . they were met by a part of our people . . . . Two or three of their number fell dead on the ground, and a number mortally wounded."

'[After several failed attempts to obtain legal redress,] I am satisfied that it is useless to undertake to enforce the laws in that county under the present circumstances, because there is no one to enforce them. Every officer, civil and military, with one or two exceptions is either directly or indirectly engaged in the mob.
"Under these painful circumstances what remains to be done? Must we be driven from our homes? . . . . Will not the Governor or President lend a helping hand in this dreadful extremity? . . . . Perhaps some of my friends, on reading this letter, will be ready to ask me what I think of my religion now; I have no reply other than this: Paul said, "He that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution."

'Editors, throughout the United States, are requested to publish this letter, if they are willing to confer the favor upon those who are journeying through much tribulation. 'I am, sirs, though a stranger, your friend and fellow servant. Orson Hyde." (196)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages): p. 196
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: only true church; basis of authority
Author: Samuel Miller (Princeton)
Title of Book: "Letters to Presbyterians. On the Present Crisis in the Presbyterian Church in the United States. - No. 11. Voluntary Associations."
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Feb. 9, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment: The writer is trying to find middle ground between those in his denomination who argue that the church should support only the ecumenical missionary boards and those who argue that the church should only sponsor only its own missionary activities. He concludes that the church's duty is to do both. In the course of reaching his conclusion, the writer provides insight into the nature of denominational allegiance.
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "My first and warmest affection I acknowledge, is given to the [Presbyterian] General Assembly's 'Board of Missions,' as the organ for strengthening and extending that church which I verily believe to be the purest and most apostolical on the earth. To that church I consider my special and peculiar devotion as due. Just as I suppose that every father of a family owes his first attention and solicitude to his own household, to which he is, of course, bound by peculiar ties. He who has solemnly joined himself by formal vows to a particular Christian denomination, because he professed to think it nearer the scriptural model than any other; and yet feels himself under no special obligation to consult the welfare and advancement of that denomination; must labor under some grievous intellectual or moral obliquity. To call a man 'bigoted,' a 'sectarian,' ora 'high-churchman,' because he decisively prefers to all others the church to which he has solemnly pledged his membership and his affection; and to insist that he is equally bound to approve, and equally bound to sustain, all other denominations; - is as perfect on [sic] affront to common sense, as it is to every sober ecclesiastical principle. . . . Can you as Presbyterians then, be considered as acting a consistent or commendable part, if you abandon the appropriate institutions of your own church, and prefer those which, though devoted to the general interests of religion, have not in view the enlargement of that portion of Christ's family which you profess to believe is purer, more scriptural and better adapted to promote the real prosperity of the kingdom than any other?" (1)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Opposition in All Things
Author: Rev. Enoch Pond, Professor of Theology, Bangor, ME
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Song of the Angels."
Title of Periodical: The Literary and Theological Review
Publisher: D. Appleton & Co.(NY); William Pierce (MA); O. Rich (London)
Date of Publication: Sep., 1834 (No. III)
Nature of Source: Founded and edited by Leonard Woods, this periodical was the organ of the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations. It contained articles written by clergy and teachers, and although orthodox theology was the chief material, it also included some literary criticism and articles on education, social questions, and science. In 1837, Charles D. Pigeon assumed the editorship.

Comment: Compare II Nephi 2:6-11.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "But it is doubted by some, whether this is the best conceivable plan. It is admitted that this is the best practicable one - the best that God could carry into effect. But could he not conceive of a plan, which should embrace all the good of the present system, with none of its evils - a plan which should have excluded sin and misery for ever? To this I answer, that God certainly could not have conceived of a plan, which should embrace all the blessings which flow from redemption, and still not include redemption. And he could not have conceived of a plan which should include redemption, and still not include sin. In other words, he could not have conceived of a thing which, in itself, is inconceivable and impossible. Without doubt God could have conceived of a plan, and might have adopted it, which should have excluded sin. But in excluding sin, it must have excluded redemption from sin, and all the surpassing, overbalancing blessings which flow to the universe in consequence of redemption; that such plan must have been not the better than that which is going into operation, but greatly inferior to it. (437-438)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: ordination
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Missionary Designation"
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Nov. 9, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment: This brief announcement of a missionary "setting apart" which included the token of "the right hand of fellowship" provides an interesting example of Baptist rituals for empowering missionaries.
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "On Thursday evening, an interesting religious service was held in the First Baptist Meeting-house in Salem, for the purpose of solemnly setting apart the Rev. Mr. Cook as a missionary of the American Baptist Board to Siam. The Rev. Professor Ripley, of the Newton Institution, delivered an impressive address. The Rev. Dr. Bolles then read the letter of instructions from the Board to their missionary. The Rev. Mr. Stow, of Boston, presented to the missionary the right hand of fellowship. Prayers were offered . . . ." (178)
Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: paid clergy
Author: Norris Bull, Stated Clerk
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Synod of Genesee. Narrative of the State of Religion."
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Oct. 26, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment: Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "Few of our churches have settled pastors. Most of them are barely supplied from year to year with temporary supplies, who have scarce learned he wants of the people, and begun to adapt themselves and their instructions to their special sphere of labor, are their term of service has expired and their vacated places are supplied by a new set of shepherds, who have just to begin to learn what their predecessors had about acquired - the knowledge requisite to adapt them to their present stations. From this immutable state of the ministry, to which it is believed, both ministers and people have mutually contributed, - arise a great variety of evils, which cannot be too deeply felt and deplored . . ." (169)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 paras.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: paid clergy; basis of authority
Author: Rev. George Bush, Professor of Hebrew and Oriental Literature in N.Y. City University

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The Earthly Triumphs of Christianity."

Title of Periodical: The Literary and Theological Review

Publisher: D. Appleton & Co.(NY); William Pierce (MA); O. Rich (London)

Date of Publication: Sep., 1834 (No. III)

Nature of Source: Founded and edited by Leonard Woods, this periodical was the organ of the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations. It contained articles written by clergy and teachers, and although orthodox theology was the chief material, it also included some literary criticism and articles on education, social questions, and science. In 1837, Charles D. Pigeon assumed the editorship.

Comment: This is an argument for the exercise of Christian influence over temporal institutions.

Taking an elitist approach throughout, the author argues that the more spiritual aspects of religion, especially scriptural prophecy, are properly limited to clergy who have the authority and the education to read ancient languages.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "We affirm, then, that the book of Revelation, containing the great outlines of the plan of Providence to the end of time, is especially, mainly, pre-eminently intended for the Christian ministry; for their instruction, guidance, and comfort. It is a hieratic rather than a demotic writing; and that not out of an invidious favouritism towards a privileged order, but simply because they were to be supposed possessed of superior advantages for unravelling [sic] its hidden senses. They, if any, were to be considered as having a knowledge of the original languages of Scripture, the master-key to its mysteries." (349)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: plural marriage

Author:

Title of Book:
In their original formation there was one man and one woman. That this was intended to denote, from the equality of the sexes, that the marriage relation should subsist only between two persons, one of each sex, to the end of time, there can be no reasonable doubt. . . . Polygamy is, indeed, of ancient origin, and is, at this day, prevalent among the nations of the eastern world, which are not Christian. Yet the most ancient records, both sacred and profane, represent the original state of things to have been, the union for life of one man and one woman. Goquet, in his origin of laws, fully establishes this point; and the remarkable equality of the sexes, in all ages, shows that this must be the law of nature.

Some modern travellers [sic], indeed, have maintained that this equality is not found in the eastern countries. They affirm that the females there, are to the males, in certain places, as three or four to one. . . . on the supposition of its truth, I should think it would afford the strongest of all evidence of the ill effects of polygamy; because, as this was not the original state of things, and certainly does not take place where polygamy is not practised [sic], there would be every reason to believe that this unhappy inequality itself, had originated from polygamy, and ought to be prevented by removing its cause. The existence of polygamy among the ancient patriarchs is no evidence of its lawfulness. It is nowhere warranted in scripture, but only tolerated as an inveterate evil, which was permitted to remain during an imperfect dispensation.

In European and Christian nations, the small inequality which really exists, is found in the greater number of males than females. . . . The small surplusage of the male sex, it has been justly observed, seems intended to supply the greater waste of that sex by war, and by other hazardous occupations. This equality of the sexes in all ages, is one of the most striking proofs and examples of that particular providence, which is constantly extended to all the works of the great Creator." (51-52)
Topics: plural marriage
Author:
Title of Book: "Character of the Turks"
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Feb. 9, 1833.
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment:
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "He [Ali Bey, the host] appeared to possess a good share of intelligence, and I had a pleasant conversation with him about America and its customs. He at first expressed the opinion, that we were to be pitied in being confined to one wife; but, on my telling him, that ours could read and write, and enlarging on the ten thousand other good qualities they are allowed to possess, he at length acknowledged, that one good wife was worth a dozen poor ones, and that, in this respect as well as many others, the people of Turkey were, to use his own expression, barbarians and brutes."(4)
Length of Relevant Material: 2 sen.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: plural worlds; atonement
Author: Rev. Enoch Pond, Professor of Theology, Bangor, ME
Title of Book: "The Song of the Angels."
Title of Article: The Literary and Theological Review
Title of Periodical: The Literary and Theological Review
Publisher: D. Appleton & Co.(NY); William Pierce (MA); O. Rich (London)
Date of Publication: Sep., 1834 (No. III)
Nature of Source: Founded and edited by Leonard Woods, this periodical was the organ of the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations. It contained articles written by clergy and teachers, and although orthodox theology was the chief material, it also included some literary criticism and articles on education, social questions, and science. In 1837, Charles D. Pigeon assumed the editorship.
Comment:
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "There is reason to believe, in view of what has been said, that this earth is an object of intense interest to the inhabitants of other worlds. We know not that redemption has been accomplished in any world but this. Indeed, we have no reason to suppose, that such has been the fact. Why should it have been? Christ could add nothing to the glory or the moral effect of his sacrifice, were he to repeat it a thousand times. It seems necessary only that the story of redemption should be told in other worlds . . . ."
"This earth is physically but an insignificant part of the material universe; - a little island in an infinite ocean of space - a little province of an unbounded empire. And yet we know, that to the inhabitants of other worlds, it is a most interesting spot. I have sometimes thought of it, not indeed as the sun of the created universe, but rather as the silver moon. It shines with a reflected light; but yet it is all radiant with the glory of God, and is pouring forth light upon a multitude of topics connected with the divine character and conduct, which otherwise must have remained impenetrable darkness.

"Redemption - whatever my readers may have been accustomed to think of it - redemption is the glory of the earth. And its is glory enough for one world, to have been the theatre of such mighty achievements." (438-440)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 338-440
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: priestcraft
Author: W.C. Brownlee
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Roman Catholic Controversy. Letter XXIII."
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Nov. 26, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment:
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "The Romish Church has always united Church and State, . . . No Roman priest can be a Republican, without being guilty of the damning sin of perjury on his soul! . . . Hence, we frankly avow, that we oppose your priests and their system of priestcraft, not on account of their religion, merely as a religion." (173)
Length of Relevant Material: 2 paras.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: principles of church government
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Synod of Philadelphia."
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Nov. 9, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment: This extract from the minutes of the Synod of Philadelphia concerns a presbytery which divided itself based on internal disagreement and without prior approval of the Synod. New boundary lines based on geographic distribution, rather than preference, are enacted by the Synod.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "Resolved . . . . that it is destructive of order and discipline, and contrary to the spirit and scope of the constitution of the Presbyterian church, that a Presbytery should ever be formed on what has been denominated the principle of elective affinity; that is, of individuals whose views, feelings, and doctrinal tenets are believed to harmonize with each other, but which are known to be opposed in many important particulars, to those of their brethren from whom they are separated." (178)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: principles of church government; apostles, high priests, seventies, elders, bishop; ordination

Author: Rev. Hollis Reed, missionary at Ahmednuggur.

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Letter from India."

Place of Publication: New York, NY.

Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.

Date of Publication: Aug. 31, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "I wrote to you a few weeks ago enclosing an application to one of the Presbyteries in your city, to join myself to that body. I therein expressed my assent to the articles, as required by the confession of faith, for admission to a Presbytery. Hoping that will reach you, and will be approved, and I admitted a member of your body, I now through you make application in behalf of the little church under my pastoral care at Ahmednuggur, that we may be associated with this Presbytery of New-York, as a sister church with those under their charge. We shall until we hear from you consider ourselves as such. We have as you know but two churches in our mission. I hope we may soon be able to form a Presbytery in India. . . . On the first Monday in March we organized ourselves into a church on Presbyterian principles - adopted a confession of faith, used by Presbyterian churches in the United States, which I have translated in Maharratta for that purpose. Babujee, our Christian Bramin being previously elected ruling elder, and Dejaber deacon, were ordained by prayer and the laying on of hands. . . . Our church now consists of ten Hindoos, and ourselves. There still remain six or eight inquirers who have asked baptism. They have renounced Hindooism, and are undoubtedly convinced of the truth of christianity [sic], but I do not yet find so clear an evidence of the work of the spirit as is desirable. It is certainly the safe course to delay. (138)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 paras.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: principles of church government; order; paid clergy; presidency
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Great Quaker Cause."
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Aug. 24, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment: This reference to church order occurs in the Observer's account a suit between to factions of Quakers, in the course of which each are required to stipulate their beliefs.
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "Stacy Decow, on behalf of the Hicksite party, in his answer to the bill of interpleader filed by Shotwell, studiously avoids a detailed exposition of doctrines; alleging that 'the society of Friends acknowledge no head but Christ, and no principle of authority or government in the church, but the love and power of God operating on the heart, and thence influencing the judgment and producing a unity of feeling, brotherly sympathy and condescension to each other. . . . he further describes the policy of the Society of Friends, as being that of 'a pure democracy, all its members having equal rights as brethren and sisters; neither ministers, elders, overseers, clerks, or other officers, having any eminence over their brethren, in right, authority, rank, or privilege - and carries this principle of equality throughout all the ramifications of their government. 'That all propositions, questions, or other matters properly submitted to any meeting, were to be determined by the voice of the majority present.' . . . The Orthodox [allege] . . . that the Society of Friends were never in their meetings, governed by the voice of the majority, but by the sense of the meeting gathered by the clerk." (136)
Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: proselyting
Author: Robert Hamilton
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Religious Intelligence. Bechuana Country."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: A. Finley
Date of Publication: Mar., 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment:
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "I have never witnessed in Africa anything like what I have seen here. When I was standing amid the heathen multitude, preaching the Great Salvation, and saw the lanes of the town thronged with crowds coming to hear the word of God, I was ready to adopt the words of Jesus at Jacob's well, 'Lift up your eyes and behold the fields are already white to the harvest;' but where are the labourers, the holy men of God in Britain, who have given themselves, soul and body, to Christ?" (139)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Religion and Civilization; New Jerusalem, City of Zion
Author: Rev. George Bush, Professor of Hebrew and Oriental Literature in N.Y. City University

Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Earthly Triumphs of Christianity."
Title of Periodical: The Literary and Theological Review
Publisher: D. Appleton & Co.(NY); William Pierce (MA); O. Rich (London)
Date of Publication: Sep., 1834 (No. III)
Nature of Source: Founded and edited by Leonard Woods, this periodical was the organ of the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations. It contained articles written by clergy and teachers, and although orthodox theology was the chief material, it also included some literary criticism and articles on education, social questions, and science. In 1837, Charles D. Pigeon assumed the editorship.

Comment: The author argues for the creation of the ideal state through the infusion of Christian principle: classic statement of the contrast between Presbyterian social reform and L.D.S. notions of creating Zion by gathering out of the world.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "There are signs in heaven, and signs on earth, to which we cannot close our eyes with impunity. That the religion of Christ is destined to work a great work of rectification on earth, and that it has actually commenced its career . . . . Only let the true genius of Christianity thoroughly reform the established institutions of society, and we need no farther guaranty of the complete regeneration of the whole social fabric. It was thus that the gospel imperceptibly, but effectually, supplanted the Judaic dispensation upon which it was grafted. It was thus that the secret inwrought energies of Christianity, without directly assaulting, eventually overthrew the throne of the Caesars, and converted the whole empire into an ecclesiastical state . . . . In saying that an ecclesiastical aspect will then be superinduced upon the face of society, we mean that the organization of men into innumerable small religious bodies, not sects, but congregations, will constitute a distinguishing feature of the scene, and will supesede [sic], in fact, those more extended systems of civil and sacred polity which have hitherto been deemed so indispensable to the interests of the world." (356-357)

Length of Relevant Material: 25 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: revelations; new scripture

Author: Joseph I. Foot, Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church Salina, N.Y.

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The New Dispensation,' or Modern Antinomianism, Commonly Called Perfectionism"

Title of Periodical: The Literary and Theological Review

Place of Publication: New York, NY; Boston, MA; London, England.

Publisher: D. Appleton & Co.(NY); William Pierce (MA); O. Rich (London)

Date of Publication: Dec., 1834 (No. IV)

Nature of Source: Founded and edited by Leonard Woods, this periodical was the organ of the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations. It contained articles written by clergy and teachers, and although orthodox theology was the chief material, it also included some literary criticism and articles on education, social questions, and science. In 1837, Charles D. Pigeon assumed the editorship.

Comment: The author is alarmed at the claims of a "New Dispensation" and outpourings of the Holy Spirit, especially "west of New-York" (558). He understands this as an outbreak of the old heresy of placing oneself above the law or Antinomianism. In response, he provides a classic argument for the all-sufficiency of the Bible and the cessation of revelation with the apostolic age.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The condition of the churches, in many parts of our land, has long been a source of serious alarm to those of whom age and reflection has qualified to discern the signs of the times. A tendency to depart from the received doctrines of religion and from the wholesome usages of the church, has distinctly manifested itself (554). . . . individuals in many churches, and in different parts of the country, have abandoned the faith and the ordinances of the Gospel, and professed to receive a New Dispensation (555). . . . [which] has its origin in THE PRIDE OF SUPERIOUR LIGHT, AND UNUSUAL INTERCOURSE WITH GOD (556). . .
.the fact cannot be concealed, that the New Dispensation is a resurrection of Antinomianism. (557)

. . . . .

"Even if it be conceded then, that men now receive such revelations, it does not thence follow, that they are Christians. But this cannot be conceded. When our Lord ascended on high, he told his disciples, 'the Comforter, whom the Father will send in my name, shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance whatsoever I have taught you.' This passage cannot be proved to extend to Christians in any age subsequent to that of the apostles. The circumstances in which it was spoken, clearly involve the idea, that it was limited to them. All religious truths, then, were revealed to the apostles, and all those which had been taught by the Saviour, were brought to their remembrance. These truths were recorded by them under the infallible direction of the Holy Spirit, for the instruction of all coming generations, thus superseding the necessity of future revelations. . . . . And at the close of the last book which the Holy Spirit indited, a heavy wo is pronounced against the man who shall dare to add anything to it, or take any thing from it. . . . . Where ever in the work of bringing men out of Satan's kingdom and preparing them for eternal glory, it is necessary that they be instructed, the Spirit is not represented as revealing new truths, but simply as using those which are recorded in Scriptures. . . . . In none of the operations of grace are new revelations necessary, and hence there is no reason to believe, that any are communicated. Indeed the Scriptures explicitly affirm, that faith, hope, and charity, shall be permanent in the church, and they as explicitly declare, 'Whether there bye prophecies, they shall fail, whether there shall be tongues, they shall cease, whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away.' That the apostle is here speaking of miraculous knowledge, or inspiration, is evident from the circumstance, that in the context he classes it with other supernatural gifts, of which he declares in this place, 'they shall cease.' Nor can it be supposed to relate to knowledge acquired in the usual manner, without being contrary to the whole current of Scripture and experience." (566-67)

Length of Relevant Material: 29 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: role of women

Author: A. P - .

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Hints Addressed to the Wife of a Clergyman"

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Feb., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative
Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: The article is devoted to advising clergymen's wives to stay at home and not engage in social visiting. Attending the sick and those who mourn is "profitable," if beforehand one prays for "protection from vain conversation . . . " (78)

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "Some degree of intercourse with our friends is proper and almost necessary; but it admits of a question, whether too much is not worse than none; for is it not the greater evil that our own families are deserted, and the business and retirements of our friends interrupted? This is often indeed the case, when the mistress of the family is not a 'keeper at home.' It is a most important office which we fill who have the charge of a family, and which requires not only close application, but all the energies of our nature, to execute it faithfully." (77)

Length of Relevant Material: 6 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: sacrament of the Lord's Supper
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Religious Intelligence"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: A. Finley
Date of Publication: Feb., 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: The except constitutes the introduction to a conversion story in an unidentified congregation.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The little church in this [unspecified] place is in the habit of renewing its covenant to be the Lord's alone, over the memorials of CHRIST, CRUCIFIED, at the beginning of the New-Year. Yesterday, the first sabbath in this year, we, in course, kept the feast." (92)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 sentences

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Topics: school of the prophets

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "General Synod of Ref. Dutch Church."

Place of Publication: New York, NY.

Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.

Date of Publication: Jun. 22, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment: This paragraph is a part of the report of the committee on the State of Religion made to the General Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church. It is included for its use of certain terms commonplace in L.D.S. thought. Unfortunately, the context of the terms does little to explicate their meaning.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "Impelled by the glory of God, loving the pure doctrines of the Bible, and their expression in the standards of the church, they [the "sons" of the church in "the beginning of the present century"] early planned a school of the prophets, and by steady counsel, persevering effort, and untiring patient, that interesting institution has been and now is like a healthful fountain, sending forth streams to make glad the city of our God."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: sealing; descent of authority; basis of authority

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Proceedings of the General Assembly"

Place of Publication: New York, NY.

Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.

Date of Publication: Jun. 1, 1833

Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.

Comment: This excerpt is from a debate by the Presbyterian Assembly regarding whether to accept Roman Catholic baptisms as validly performed for Presbyterian purposes. The debate is interesting for its reference to issues of authority generally and, more specifically, the difference of opinion among the Presbyterians as to whether scholarship is a locus of authority which rivals the Assembly itself.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The report, while it recognized the right of church sessions to judge in ordinary cases of the qualifications of those to be received to sealing ordinances; declared that the services of those professed ministers who had received only lay ordinance, or who had been deposed, to be unscriptural and unwarrantable; and attendance on their services to be not according to the order of the gospel, and that it ought to be discountenanced. - The report was adopted.

"The moderator then laid before the Assembly a report from Dr. Alexander, who had been the chairman of a committee appointed to the last Assembly to consider and report on the validity of baptism administered by a Romish priest, accounting for the reason why no report had been prepared . . . and suggesting the expediency of forbearing to press the subject to a speedy conclusion, and of leaving it open to discussion until there should be greater unanimity of views as regard to it: but in the mean while recommending that the Faculty in each of the theological Seminaries inquire into the subject, and submit their respective views to the Assembly.

"Mr. Jessup was opposed to requiring the views of the seminaries; it was a bad precedent.

. . . . .

"Mr. Harding said he had no wish to have his conscience hampered by an authoritative decision of the Assembly in this matter. He did not wish to find himself so situated that he must either go against his conscience, or break his vow to submit himself to his brethren in the Lord. The difficulty felt by man arose from collateral subjects: many feared to declare Popish baptism invalid, lest they should involve themselves in the question of Popish ordination. The old scheme of tracing up ordination to the apostles hung round their mind and fettered it." (85-86)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: secret combinations

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "General Intelligence: Riot in Maryland."

Title of Periodical: The Literary and Theological Review

Publisher: D. Appleton & Co.(NY); William Pierce (MA); O. Rich (London)

Date of Publication: Dec., 1834 (No. IV)

Nature of Source: Founded and edited by Leonard Woods, this periodical was the organ of the Congregational and Presbyterian denominations. It contained articles written by clergy and teachers, and although orthodox theology was the chief material, it also included some literary criticism and articles on education, social questions, and science. In 1837, Charles D. Pigeon assumed the editorship.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "Unfortunately new scenes of violence and bloodshed have recently occurred on one of the public works near the borders of Maryland and Virginia. Towards the close of November, attacks were made on private buildings and property, near the line of the Baltimore and Washington Rail-road, in the counties of Anne Arundel and Prince George, by some of the labourers employed; and several murders were committed on the inhabitants. At a public meeting subsequently held on the subject, it was declared in the form of resolutions, that the labourers were found to have formed secret associations, and bound themselves by awful and solemn oaths to keep each other's secrets, and therefore the directors of the rail-road were urged to discharge them, as persons dangerous to the public peace." (695-696)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: spirit, soul, and body; premortal existence

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter Catechism of the Westminister Assembly of Divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XVII."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Dec., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: The excerpted material imagines an existence of the soul prior to the formation of the body and is part of a discourse on how the soul is corrupted by the spirit.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The scripture gives us abundant and unequivocal evidence, that the soul may and will exist, separately from the body - Of course, the soul is immaterial in its nature, and therefore can be no part of that material organization which we derive from our parents . . . . if we must speculate and form a theory on this subject, the safest and most rational is, to suppose that all souls were created at the beginning of the world; that they remain in a quiescent state, till the bodies which they are to inhabit are formed; that on union with these bodies, they receive all their original impressions by means of the external senses; that the whole system of bodily appetites and propensities, with the fancy or imagination which is closely connected with them, having become irregular, excessive and perverted, by the fall, do unavoidably corrupt the soul, and enslave it to sin." (530)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
As part of discussion of the means by which the soul is corrupted by the body, the author speculates on the existence of the soul prior to the body.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "The scripture gives us abundant and unequivocal evidence, that the soul may and will exist, separately from the body - Of course, the soul is immaterial in its nature, and therefore can be no part of that material organization which we derive from our parents . . . if we must speculate and form a theory on this subject, the safest and most rational is, to suppose that all souls were created at the beginning of the world; that they remain in a quiescent state, till the bodies which they are to inhabit are formed; that on union with these bodies, they receive all their original impressions by means of the external senses; that the whole system of the bodily appetites and propensities, with the fancy or imagination which is closely connected with them, having become irregular, excessive and perverted, by the fall, do unavoidably corrupt the soul, and enslave it to sin." (530)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Nature of the Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages):
"... we are struck with wonder, when we contemplate the visible and material creation; but that the invisible, immaterial, spiritual creation, is still far more wonderful. The soul of man - that thinking principle, my children, by which you now attend to this subject of creation - is far more wonderful, and far more noble, than the whole material creation. It was for spirit that matter was formed. It was for souls that the world which you behold was created." (5)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 page

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: spirit and matter

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines - Addressed to Youth. Letter XI. (Concluded from page 531 of Vol. II.)"

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Jan., 1825

Nature of the Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "To suppose it [matter] is eternal, is infinitely absurd, as well as contrary to scripture. To suppose it created is not absurd, is not irrational; for to create it was competent to infinite wisdom and almighty power."(4)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Author: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "But where shall they [the Catholics] find in the Bible any thing favorable to purgatory. The Bible speaks plainly enough of two places beyond the grave, but it says nothing about a third place. . . . It is true that some hundreds of years afterwards certain writers speak of it [purgatory] as a Christian doctrine, but I want to know why the older, and inspired writers say nothing about it. . . . Ah, but does not St. Peter say that Christ went and preached to the spirits in prison? Where were they but in purgatory? But were all the giant sinners before the flood in purgatory? If so, there may be some hope for us heretics. But why should Christ go to purgatory to preach to spirits there? It is not by preaching, according to the Catholics, that souls are liberated from purgatory, but by prayers and masses well paid for. And why should Christ select out the antediluvian sinners, and preach only to them? Indeed I think the friends of purgatory had better give up that text; and not attempt to support their dogma by scripture, but be content with tradition, consoling themselves with the reflection that though nothing is written about it, yet it has been handed down." (162)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: This is an exegesis of Gen. 2 - "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." and includes a discourse on the Presbyterian terms "spiritual, physical and eternal death." See also definitions of these terms in the June, 1825 editions at page 241.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): ""Human life, since the fall of Adam, had been but a disease, ending in certain death. In addition to all, death, in the third sense of the term - eternal death - began to be inflicted: . . . An overwhelming sense of guilt and shame, remorse and horror of conscience, tormenting fear of evil to come, the pain arising from disordered, unhallowed, and disappointed desires and passions, - these are often the beginnings of endless misery, which are commenced in the present life . . . . Thus, then we see, that spiritual death, which was the parent or productive cause, both of temporal and eternal death, actually and fully took place on the very day that Adam and Eve ate the forbidden fruit; and that the other kinds of death also, then began to be inflicted on them" (148).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: the fortunate fall; Christianization of the Old Testament
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "For the Christian Advocate: Reliquiae Evangelicae. No. V."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: A. Finley
Date of Publication: Apr., 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: This is an exegesis of Gen. 2 - "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." and includes a discussion of the doctrines of "spiritual, physical and eternal death." The subject quotation suggests some measure of a pre-Christ revelation to Adam and Eve of the atoning mission of Christ.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): ". . . hence our first parents, after their fall, could not, and did not know exactly, what course their offended Maker would take with them; and were filled with anguish, horror, guilt, shame, the upbraidings of conscience, and dreadful perplexity and forebodings about the issue; and yet were not in a state of unqualified despair . . . . A Mediator was provided . . . . How much of the details of that plan was then made known, on the earth and in heaven, we cannot exactly say -- enough certainly to be the object of faith and hope, through every age, till the advent of the Saviour." (150).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: the fortunate fall; happiness as God's purpose

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XVII."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Nov., 1825

Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment:

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "On the continuance of a race of sinners . . . is grounded the whole plan and work of redemption by Christ: . . . a work which will raise the redeemed of the Lord to higher happiness than they could have known, if they had not fallen: and a work which, notwithstanding the endless misery of those who perish, may produce - for aught we know - an infinite counterbalance of happiness, in the moral and intelligent creation." (483)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: unpardonable sin

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Lectures on the Shorter Catechism of the Westminster Assembly of Divines - Addressed to Youth. Lecture XVI."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: A. Finley

Date of Publication: Oct., 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.

Comment: The author's definition of that sin which leaves the soul with remedy in the atonement contrasts with D&C 76:34-35.

Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): ". . . is it yet possible that any sinner should reject this Saviour! Yes, it is all so - sinners thus guilty, polluted, condemned, and perishing, do reject this Saviour - presented to them, and pressed to their acceptance! Ah! This is the sin of sins; the sin that cuts the soul off from its remedy and seals its perdition: - this is the damning sin of unbelief! And will any of you, my young friends, continue in this sin, and risk its consequences?" (435)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Topics: women's role
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Letters from a Mother to a Daughter, on the Subject of Early Education. Letter I."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: A. Finley
Date of Publication: Nov., 1825
Nature of Source: A religious periodical which superseded Presbyterian magazine in 1823; suspended 1834. It was edited by Ashbel Green, D.D. Although claiming to be largely non-sectarian and eclectic, the Christian Advocate was definitely conservative Presbyterian, opposing revivalism and union with Congregationalists in the West. Much of its material was taken from other publications. It emphasizes biography, essays, and religious and secular news.
Comment:
Researcher: Kathleen Flake

Excerpt (pages): "He [the husband] prepares them [the children] for time; it is yours [as mother] to prepare them for eternity. He teaches them how to live for themselves; you must each them how to live for God." (494)
Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.

Topics: Zion
Author:
Title of Book: "New York Lutheran Synod"
Title of Article:
Place of Publication: New York, NY.
Publisher: Sidney E. Morse & Co., Editors and Proprietors.
Date of Publication: Oct 12, 1833
Nature of Source: An orthodox, though not conservative Presbyterian publication begun in 1823 by Sidney E. and Richard Morse and concerned mainly with religious topics.
Comment: In this short report on the Lutheran activities for the year, the author describes the Lutheran community as "Zion" and includes in its concern for equity with the poor and a sentiment akin to oneness of heart.
Researcher: Kathleen Flake
Excerpt (pages): "During the past year, God has been doing wonders for the cause of our Lutheran Zion. Not only have our churches increased in numbers, but they have aroused from their slumbers, and shaken the dust from their feet; they have zeal to extend the privileges they enjoy to the destitute, and to advance the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour. . . . All seem actuated by one spirit and desirous of one aim - the glory of God and the salvation of souls." (164)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

>A Book Ahead of Its Time:
Concepts of Lamanite Culture and the White Man's Indian Researcher: Fluharty

Critics such as Dan Vogel argue that influences from Joseph Smith's environment can be seen in the Book of Mormon, particularly in its theories of Indian origins and the Mound Builder myth. But while relevant information was potentially available to Joseph Smith during the process of translation, perceived correspondences between Nephites and Lamanites and whites and Indians have been more facile than factual. Without doubt, elements of its Lamanite portrayals struck a superficial chord of similarity for readers familiar with common Indian symbols, but overall it was relatively incompatible with the many more subtle and complex white conceptions of Indians. Recent scholars criticize the books' presumed racism and outdated notions of savagery and civilization. In reality, though, the book provided rare glimpses into remarkable concepts of culture that would not find expression by anthropologists until the latter half of the nineteenth century.

Christopher Columbus' "discovery" of the New World was a major impetus for European traditions that conceived of Native Americans through images and stereotypes and therefore failed to grasp "how these people called Indians lived and saw themselves." Anthropologist Thomas W. Murphy implicated early Mormons as well, arguing they applied the homogenous label Lamanite to Indian tribes "that were still quite diverse and lacked any common conceptions of themselves as a distinct supratribal or national group." Unsurprisingly, given his assumption that the Book of Mormon contains Joseph Smith's "own desires and cultural assumptions," Murphy ignored the ancient authors' perspective that Lamanites who had "dwindled in unbelief" would need to be informed of their status as an Israelite remnant. Moreover, the Book of Mormon contained a world of religious, cultural, and tribal diversity that was hardly consistent with the flat and static representations of Indians prevalent in Joseph's day.

For centuries before and after Mormonism's emergence, Europeans' and Americans' moral evaluations of Indians perpetuated stereotypes. With Christianity and "civilization" as their criteria, the "Spaniards found the Indian wanting in a long list of attributes: letters, laws, government, clothing, arts, trade, agriculture, marriage, morals, metal goods, and above all religion." When subsequent missionaries remade Indians in their own images, their ethnocentric values and preconceptions of savagery made it virtually impossible to view American Indians on their own terms.
As these attitudes toward New World inhabitants developed, Euro-Americans predictably tried to fit Indians into their biblical worldview. Indians were soon considered the remnant of ancient migrants from the Old World. Whether part of the planet's repeopling following the flood, or scattered in the aftermath of the Tower of Babel, Indians were inserted by Euro-Americans into existing biblical narratives that explained their descent from Adam and Eve. As Indian languages and customs struck many whites as derivative of ancient Hebrews, the Lost Tribes theory of Indian origins found frequent expression. Consequently, Vogel finds "striking" evidence that Joseph Smith adapted these theories of Israelite origins while crafting the Book of Mormon. However, a closer examination of the philosophical underpinnings of these theories reveals incongruities with the Book of Mormon that Vogel conveniently omits.

Scholars estimate that between 1815 and 1830, whites abandoned any remaining views of the potential equality of Indians in favor of a new theory of "savagism." Before this transition, Euro-Americans had long used the notion of degeneracy to reconcile the biblical account of common origins with the diverse forms of primitivism that had emerged across the world in just a few thousand years. Assuming human nature was the same throughout time, some thinkers concluded that their own societies—the pinnacle of civilization—could use similar principles to transform primitive peoples. Consequently, whites theorized a conjectural history that ranked Indians as savages and argued they needed to progress through higher towards civilization. At the same time, Enlightenment thinkers fused this doctrine of degeneracy with environmentalism in order to include the effects of physical environment in their explanations of social and cultural diversity.

The Book of Mormon advanced a much different philosophy of history and human nature. It taught that prosperity and achievement could only be maintained with widespread spirituality and obedience and contradicted environmentalism directly. Nephites and Lamanites maintained extreme cultural differences even though they lived in the same climate and traced their descent from common and recent ancestors. Murphy accuses the Book of Mormon of containing "colonial metaphors and racially charged symbolism." He assumes the scripture's juxtaposition of barbarous dark-skinned Jewish Lamanites to civilized light-skinned Christian Nephites reflected and sanctioned the prejudice and power abuses of frontier relations between Indians and whites. However, more careful readers will find it invoked the word "civilization" in only two instances—both of which described Nephite deficiencies. Furthermore, its Lamanite labels included "wild" but none of the typical terms for Indians such as "savages," "infidels," "natives," "aborigines," "pagans," "barbarians," "heathens," or "sons of the forest." In short, the Book of Mormon's presumed resemblance to notions of civilization, savagery, and race in Jacksonian America actually diminishes the more carefully we examine the book's complexities.

Vogel claims "[t]he Book of Mormon's description of Lamanites sometimes sounds like an exaggerated version of contemporary stereotypes about North American Indians." Admittedly, Nephites resorted to terms such as "wild, and ferocious, and a blood-thirsty people," "hardened," "dark, and loathsome, and a filthy people," "idle," "abominable," "drunken," and "indolent." In addition, the Book of Mormon evoked Indian imagery when it spoke of "tribes" who worshipped the "Great Spirit," lived "in a state of nature," fought with "bows" and "arrows," surrendered their dead to "mother earth," marked the passage of time by "moons," and lifted the "scalp[s]" of "chiefs." On the other hand, though, it never employed typical Indian words like papoose, powwow, sachem, squaw, tomahawk, wigwam, and wampum. All told, the Book of Mormon avoided hundreds of terms with indigenous origins. Coincidence likely explains the Book of Mormon’s similarity to these common Indian symbols; its uniqueness becomes more apparent when we look at the ideas behind the symbols.

When the earliest Mormon missionaries promoted the Book of Mormon as a history of ancient Indians, they correctly perceived and benefited from a resurgent American interest in Indians. One scholar measured this public fascination when she noted that of the "109 works [of American fiction] published between 1820 and 1829, one in six featured American Indians . . ." Literary critics generally agree this generation considered Indians a useful subject matter. Anxious to construct a national identity, American authors worked towards literary independence. Serving as both a uniquely American subject and a useful link to the nation's prehistory, noble and ignoble savages appeared frequently in works by popular authors such as James Fenimore Cooper. But whereas Cooper and his contemporaries imagined that Indians were vanishing, the Book of Mormon had little affinity with these romantic notions about America’s future and frontier.

Cooper produced four novels in the 1820s that kicked off his popular and prolific career. With titles like The Last of the Mohicans (1826), these frontier romances fixed the Noble Savage in the American imagination and popular culture. Like many of his peers, Cooper condoned Indian removal as the inevitable but lamentable demise of the Vanishing American. Like most Americans, he believed that Native Americans were passing away because white and Indian worlds were incompatible. Colored by this perspective, Cooper reinforced myths about Indians that supposedly showed their shortcomings as savages. For instance, despite indigenous agricultural practices, virtually all whites of this period believed Indians subsisted exclusively by hunting. In addition, Cooper inspired lasting imitation by making his Indian characters speak with stunted vocabularies, and often substituting gestures for words. On the contrary, Book of Mormon peoples held no illusions comparable to myths of noble savages, commonly practiced shepherding and farming, and waxed "mighty in . . . speaking."

In serious contrast to philosophies of its day, the Book of Mormon undermined nascent notions of race and Manifest Destiny. Although full-blown scientific racism had not yet emerged, Americans began to use an Anglo-Saxon ideology to justify territorial and economic expansion. These racialist ideas were particularly evident in views on the blending or mixing of Indians and whites. Initially, Jefferson and some of his contemporaries believed that interracial marriage might leaven the Indian population and facilitate their assimilation, yet their attitudes towards miscegenation with blacks nonetheless demonstrated the undercurrent of racialism in American thought. Tellingly, missionaries to the Indians in the late eighteenth century began the practice of befriending mixed-bloods. Since they believed that white blood carried intellectual and moral capacity, they targeted these so-called "half-breeds" for their potential to adopt civilized outlooks and Christian values. Yet since they believed Indians were an inferior race, most Americans supported the passage of the 1830 Indian Removal Act. Significantly, the Book of Mormon ran roughshod over this political context with its condemnation of racial inferiority, anticipated roles for Lamanites, and prophesied chastening of Gentile America.
In virtually every respect, Book of Mormon peoples perceived themselves and each other within ethnic categories that had little in common with the racism of Jacksonian America.  Americans used the language of biology to divide up the world's population into discrete races. They believed in racial essences, claiming this blood tainted "half-breeds" who pass for white. Convinced races with dark-skins were inferior to whites, they often segregated to maintain racial purity. Book of Mormon peoples, on the other hand, never imagined that "blood" or anything else transmitted racial essences. The book depicts white Lamanites, wicked Nephites, and "compound" Lamanites, proving white skin color was no guarantee of divine approval. For these and other reasons, Murphy and others commit an anachronistic mistake when they assume Nephites and Lamanites perceived themselves and each other in racial terms comparable to nineteenth-century Euro-American paradigms.

Under the combined authority of science and racialist ideology, Americans at this time found new ways to expand their claim to a national heritage. Curiously, Vogel omits this point in his discussion of the Mound Builder myth. Focusing instead on the seeming parallel between the Book of Mormon's extinction of Nephites at the hand of Lamanites and the story of a white race of Mound Builders who were killed off by savage Indians, he apparently fails to appreciate the reasons for which some early archaeologists perpetuated this myth. Many intellectual historians of American archaeology have argued their discipline "began as a colonial venture that downplayed the achievements and skills of a vanquished people to excuse the reduction and subjugation of that people." As verification for Americans' assertion of racial superiority and Manifest Destiny, this myth provided justification to inherit the Mound Builders' mantle, thus legitimizing the claims of whites to America's history, heritage, and land. Robbing them of their past, whites imagined Indians "had been static in prehistoric times and lacked the initiative to develop on their own." Needless to say, the Book of Mormon's discussion of Lamanite destiny and complicated historical narratives shared little similarity with this imperialist project.

Book of Mormon prophecies, according to G. St. John Stott, made a radical departure from these ideas of "racial elitism." The prophet Mormon reminded Lamanites of the latter-days that they "are numbered among the people of the first covenant." Secondly, the covenant linked Lamanites to Gentile converts when it promised the latter would not only be "numbered among . . . the remnant of Jacob," but as Nephi was told, "they shall be numbered among the seed of thy father." Lehi envisioned a gathered Lamanite nucleus by prophesying the brass plates "should go forth unto all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people who were of his seed." Thus, in a day when whites viewed Indians with condescension, the Book of Mormon insisted Gentiles needed adoption into the covenant in order to become partners with the Lamanites. As Stott put it, there was "nothing derivative in [its] view of Lamanite-gentile relations." The Book of Mormon unsettled notions of Manifest Destiny. It foresaw that even though the Lamanites would be initially "scattered" and "smitten" by the Gentiles, these whites would become "nursing fathers" and "nursing mothers" who helped the Lamanites to "gather" and "obtain" the "land of their inheritance." Lehi foresaw the rise of a latter-day Lamanite prophet among the descendants of his son Joseph. Rejecting white paternalism, the book envisioned Lamanites ultimately holding prominent positions of Church leadership over Gentiles. As the Lord explained, the Gentiles would be privileged to "assist my people, the remnant of Jacob . . . that they may build a city, which shall be called the New Jerusalem." At the same time, the book was also "understood by its readers as heralding the imminent end of the 'fulness of the gentiles.'" Anticipating that most Gentiles upon "the promised land" would reject the gospel, it predicted Lamanites would overthrow wicked Gentiles "as a lion among the beasts of the forest. . . [who] both treadeth down and teareth in pieces." As Stott remarked of this inversion of the usual frontier roles of whites and Indians, the "originality of this scenario is striking."

The Book of Mormon's presentation of ancient Nephite and Lamanite "customs" and "traditions" anticipated the modern concept of culture many years in advance. Through the mid-nineteenth century, the word culture was a singular noun that meant "cultivated" and "civilized." Its connotations included human progress and the accumulation of art, science, and knowledge. Edward Tylor's 1871 book, Primitive Culture, introduced the modern concept of culture. This idea challenged prevailing understandings of both race and class and, by retreating from notions of "civilization" and "high culture," declared that the differences among us were learned rather than inborn. Over the next few decades, anthropologists like Franz Boas repudiated ethnocentrism by adding the idea of cultural relativism to their understanding of culture. These former notions, common or emerging in Joseph Smith's day, relied on notions of biological and environmental determinism, supported systems of social stratification, and divided humans into superior and inferior groups.

In the Book of Mormon, culture was transmitted by social rather than biological mechanisms. The prophet Lehi evidenced this conviction when he told his Lamanite grandchildren "I know that if ye are brought up in the way ye should go ye will not depart from it." Other Book of Mormon authors demonstrated the potency of traditions when they explained why the Lord placed a darker skin color upon the Lamanites. The reason for this mark rendering Lamanites unattractive to Nephites was not because the blending of genes or skin colors was inherently dangerous; instead, the Lord designed it "that they might not mix and believe in incorrect traditions which would prove their destruction."

Some critics argue the Book of Mormon reflects the ethnocentrism of Joseph Smith's day because the Nephites expected their Lamanite coverts to assimilate. Keith Parry argues some early readers used the Book of Mormon "to invest the life style of the pioneer farmer and its environing 'civilization' with absolute moral value, while denying any value to the life style of the Indian." The example of the people of Ammon, however, demonstrates the book's uniqueness. In the only recorded instance of Nephite laughter, the sons of Mosiah faced ridicule and scorn for thinking they might "might save some few [Lamanite] souls." Seeing instead potential in their Lamanite brethren, these young men "were desirous that salvation should be declared to every creature, for they could not bear that any human soul should perish." The fruits of their mission indicate the degree to which the Book of Mormon reverses Nephite ethnocentrism.

Though both rapid and sweeping, the people of Ammon's conversion and cultural adaptation hardly turned them into imitation Nephites. For instance, these Lamanite converts used the word "correspondence" to describe how their receipt of gospel knowledge was characterized by a mutual exchange of thoughts and feelings. They actively sought and constructed their own new identity with the name "Anti-Nephi-Lehies." Though the Nephites abstained from the people of Ammon's pacifist covenant, they nonetheless recognized and respected their "view."\textsuperscript{57} When Korihor preached to these Anti-Nephi-Lehies, they bound him and brought him before the high priest because they "were more wise than many of the Nephites."\textsuperscript{58} The Anti-Nephi Lehies probably inspired later Lamanite converts. In one instance, about three hundred Lamanite converts departed from the usual format of Nephite proselytizing and presented their message within a cultural-specific framework. This method proved so successful that "the more part of the Lamanites were convinced of them, because of the greatness of the evidences which they had received."\textsuperscript{59} As their numbers grew, these converted Lamanites polished their skills in cross-cultural communication enough to preach "the manner of their [own] conversion" in order to "exhort [the Nephites] to faith and repentance."\textsuperscript{60} By preaching to their white brothers, these steadfast Lamanites bring the Book of Mormon full circle, challenging us to engage in Christlike interpretation as we learn to cherish those elements of gospel truth that are both possessed and enriched by all cultures.\textsuperscript{61}

If critics would approach the Book of Mormon with "eyes to see and ears to hear," they will find it hardly resonated with the range of stereotypes people held about Indians in early nineteenth-century America.\textsuperscript{62} Properly understood and appreciated, the Book of Mormon contradicts most contemporaneous white conceptions of Indians. Its remarkable concepts of culture, nonetheless, show that it was decades ahead of its time. As it deconstructs its own ethnocentrism, the Book of Mormon invites us to hasten forth that future day "when every nation, kindred, tongue, and people shall see eye to eye."\textsuperscript{63}

Endnotes

1\textsuperscript{\textsuperscript{1}} Dan Vogel, \textit{Indian Origins and the Book of Mormon: Religious Solutions from Columbus to Joseph Smith} (Salt Lake City: Signature Books, 1986); Dan Vogel, Dan Vogel's Reply to Kevin Christensen, copyright 2002, \texttt{http://www.xmission.com/~research/central/reply.htm}, accessed on 17 July 2002.

2\textsuperscript{\textsuperscript{2}} Robert F. Berkhofer Jr., \textit{The White Man's Indian: Images of the American Indian from Columbus to the Present} (New York, 1978), 3.

3\textsuperscript{\textsuperscript{3}} Thomas W. Murphy, Other Mormon Histories: Lamanite Subjectivity in Mexico, \textit{Journal of Mormon History} 26 (Fall 2000): 185.

4\textsuperscript{\textsuperscript{4}} Thomas W. Murphy, From Racist Stereotype to Ethnic Identity: Instrumental Uses of Mormon Racial Doctrine, \textit{Ethnohistory} 46 (Summer 1999): 456; Mormon 7:1-2, 10.

5\textsuperscript{\textsuperscript{5}} Robert F. Berkhofer Jr., \textit{The White Man's Indian: Images of the American Indian from Columbus to the Present} (New York, 1978), 10.

6\textsuperscript{\textsuperscript{6}} Robert F. Berkhofer Jr., \textit{The White Man's Indian: Images of the American Indian from Columbus to the Present} (New York, 1978), 34-37.

7\textsuperscript{\textsuperscript{7}} Dan Vogel, \textit{Indian Origins and the Book of Mormon: Religious Solutions from Columbus to Joseph Smith} (Salt Lake City: Signature Books, 1986), 66, 71-73.

Thomas W. Murphy, From Racist Stereotype to Ethnic Identity: Instrumental Uses of Mormon Racial Doctrine, Ethnohistory 46 (Summer 1999): 456-457. Murphy was probably thinking of Mulekite ancestry, or more likely D&C 19:27, when he connected Lamanite degradation with Jewishness.

Alma 51:22; Moroni 9:11-12.

For a sample of this list see Mark Rosenfelder, Words in English from Amerindian Languages, <<http://www.zompist.com/indianwd.html>>, accessed on 3 August 2002.

24 2 Nephi 33:1.

28 Notwithstanding the Nephite king-men professed the blood of nobility (Alma 51:21) their claim was merely a political distinction from similar-looking Nephites.

30 See John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, 54-55 for a discussion of socially constructed ethnicities in the Book of Mormon; notwithstanding these ethnic identities, I believe many Lamanites possessed phenotypic features that visibly and physically distinguished them from Nephites (see Alma 19:18; 20:10; 55:4-8; Helaman 9:33-34; and 14:10.

36 Mormom 7:10, emphasis added; see also 1 Nephi 15:13-18.

38 1 Nephi 5:17-19, emphasis added.

41 For prophecies of the Gentiles' nursing, see 1 Nephi 21:1, 8, 17-26; 1 Nephi 22:6-12; 2 Nephi 10:2, 7-10, 18-19, 21; and Mormon 5:9-13, 15, 20-21, 24.

42 For prophecies of the Gentiles' nursing, see 1 Nephi 21:1, 8, 17-26; 1 Nephi 22:6-12; 2 Nephi 10:2, 7-10, 18-19, 21; and Mormon 5:9-13, 15, 20-21, 24.

44 Steven Epperson, Mormons and Jews: Early Mormon Theologies of Israel (): 34.

48 2 Nephi 4:5.

49 2 Nephi 5:21-23; quote from Alma 3:8; see also Richard L. Bushman, The Lamanite View of Book of Mormon History, in John M. Lundquist and Stephen D. Ricks, eds., By Study and Also by Faith ( ), vol. 2, page 62.

Essay on the Methodist Quarterly Review

In similar fashion to the Methodist Magazine's earlier shift in 1829, away from "mere miscellany" and toward a more intellectual and cultured format, the Review superseded the Magazine in 1841 under the new editorship of George Peck. He announced that the journal's pages would henceforth "be devoted to theology, ecclesiastical polity, education, science, and general literature." Pointing to the significance of its title, Peck explained that the journal would primarily provide "extended and elaborate reviews . . . of many of the leading publications which from time to time issue from the American and European presses . . .," as well as shorter "critical notices" of other new publications.a

Peck's introductory essay also expressed his hopes for the Review's readers. By sharing the substance of new books through the journal's reviews, he desired to assist readers in their purchasing decisions. The Review, however, aimed to do much more than merely pander to subscriber's tastes. As Peck proclaimed, it would offer sophisticated treatments of the gospel and counter false philosophy, speculative theology, and "unbridled dogmatism." Moreover, his journal sought to serve the Methodist Episcopal Church by "being always prepared to defend and explain our own peculiar institutions at length when need requires." Although religious topics would occupy most of its pages, Peck intended for the Review to enlighten its readers' in secular matters too. He cited "scientific discovery" and "ancient and modern literature" as "useful arts"-worthy subjects for the Review that would "make its readers wiser and better."b

Notwithstanding Peck's intentions, reviewers for the journal sometimes struck an uncompromising balance between secular and religious interpretations. These critical reviewers, who were most likely Methodist ministers, complained about what they perceived as excessive secular and historical context for biblical stories, as well explanations that undermined or minimized the supernatural and miraculous nature of events in the Old and New Testaments. For instance, one reviewer protested against an author's naturalistic interpretation of the events at the Mount of Transfiguration.c
Topic(s): Christianization of the Old Testament; Religion and government; Priesthood and Church; Bishop; Descent of authority; Basis of authority; Ordination; One true church; Temple; New Church; History; Primitive Church; Apostasy; Corruption of the churches, Old Testament as context for doctrine; Modern recapitulation of biblical events; Dispensations.

Author: None listed.

Title of Book:

Title of Periodical: Methodist Quarterly Review

Place of Publication: Conference Office, 200 Mulberry Street, New York

Publisher: G. Lane & P. P. Sandford, for the Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Jan. 1841

Library Location: American Periodical Series, Film 051 B, Reel #330

Nature of Source: This reviewer took to task this publication from Oxford. Disagreeing with the authors' premise that the Church of England is Christ's church, the reviewer advanced various arguments to discredit their logic.

Comment: Though the reviewers ultimately rejected the idea that Christ established a corporate church, or that such exists in modern times, his reasons suggest the difficulty early Mormons might have faced in convincing Protestants that Christ actually ever intended to have a one true church. Interestingly, he finds antecedents to three Christian priesthood offices (bishop, presbyter, and deacon) in the positions held within pre-Christian Jewish synagogues. This often unrecognized continuity, in his view, demonstrates that Christ and his apostles merely utilized existing forms and did not establish an official church. Similarly, he trivializes the claims of churches to have unbroken lines of successively ordained clergy by arguing that Christ would have never let his church temporarily languish in corruption. Notwithstanding the reviewer's inability to locate evidence of an "ecclesiastical polity" within the New Testament, his reasoned approach might have resonated with early Mormons who viewed the emergence of Christ's kingdom as only possible through restoration, not reformation.

Researcher: Sterling Fluharty

Excerpt (pages): "There are few things which the Christian world more generally agree in than to wonder how the Jews could adopt and retain with such invincible tenacity the doctrine that the Messiah would be a temporal prince, who should exalt them under the Mosaical dispensation to a state of the greatest visible power and magnificence; and yet there are few things in which we more resemble the Jews than in this very particular. We do not, indeed, expect to see our Messiah reigning personally over mankind, but we substitute for the monarchical theory of the Jews our doctrines of the visible church of Christ; which, under various exhibitions, we magnify to such an extent of authority and power, that, in reality, the difference between Jew and Christian for the most part is small. The popes of Rome claim to be viceroys for Christ, and exercise that power as temporal and spiritual princes over a very large portion of Christendom. The Church of England exhibits their theory under an aristocracy of bishops; and similar features are continually furnished us in the ecclesiastical systems of various Protestant denominations under more democratic constitutions; but which, like the mustard seed of one of our Savior's parables, only require opportunity to attain to a portentous magnitude. In former times these peculiarities were much more prominent than at present, for there has been a great moral improvement going on during the last hundred years, which has greatly softened down ecclesiastical presumption; and has, at least with the great body of Protestants, induced a more distinct perception of the truth of our Redeemer's declaration, that his kingdom is not of this world; that it is within us; that it is a spiritual kingdom; that it belongs alone to the understanding and conscience, and that it is perfectly consistent with various forms of ecclesiastical polity. The direct influence of this conviction has, in the United States, established it as an undoubted truth, that no one sect of Christians can be regarded as the only true church of Christ, nor that any one is better entitled to the protection of the laws than other Christian sects. But we must not forget that our conviction of the truth of this doctrine has been chiefly obtained through the peculiarities of our republican institutions; and, consequently, that in the ancient monarchies of Europe, where particular sects have long enjoyed an especial protection of the state, we must not be surprised that the doctrine of the equality of all religious sects is not only a novelty to many persons, but that it is regarded with great abhorrence by all those who benefit from the ecclesiastical patronage of the state" (58-59).

"Now, to understand the constitution of the primitive church correctly, a short exposition only is necessary to show the fallacies of the positions assumed on this subject, not only by the Oxford divines, but by other writers on ecclesiastical polity. These controversialists, for the most part, very ignorantly suppose that the terms bishop, presbyter, and deacon were first used in relation to the church by our Savior or his apostles, and that they were consecrated by them, for the first time, to designate the ministry of the Christian church. But never was there a more grievous mistake; for the words bishop, presbyter, and deacon were names of officers in the Jewish synagogues, and were familiarly used as such among the Jews for centuries before out Saviour's advent. . . ." (67-68)

"It is also abundantly clear that the synagogue, with all its customs, though excellent in their design and use, were not of divine appointment. The synagogue service stood in relation to the temple service, which was of divine appointment, very much as a prayer meeting with us at the present day does in relation to the regular public service. The synagogue necessarily was much more conspicuous than our prayer meetings, because there was and could be but one temple to the whole Jewish nation; but throughout Judea, and everywhere among the Gentiles, the Jews could, and thought themselves obliged to, establish synagogues. Hence they are prominent in the latter periods of Jewish history as places of public assembly for religious worship. Our Saviour and his apostles continually attended the Jewish synagogues, and the first disciples were members of them until they were expelled by the unbelieving Jews. But when the first Christian believers had become sufficiently numerous, they assembled together as a body under the accustomed forms of the synagogue, as is evident from the manner in which their religious worship was performed, and in the appointment of the ordinary synagogue officers, namely, bishops, presbyters, and deacons, whose functions were perfectly well understood as being old institutions to which they and their fathers had been accustomed for centuries. But though Christ and his apostles thus used the form of the old Jewish synagogue, they nowhere tell us that they had conferred the sanction of a divine approbation upon that form, as being obligatory upon Christians for ever; consequently, as they have not done this, we cannot come to any other rational conclusion than that they considered the assemblies of Christians to be under ordinary synagogue usages, and which, as being perfectly understood, required no instruction from them. We therefore cannot look upon the primitive Christian churches to have been anything else than mere synagogues, whether it regards the appointments of the ministers, or ceremonial or religious services. By these simple facts, as well as, every particular belonging to the history of the earlier Christians; for it becomes a very easy matter to understand how corruptions were superinduced upon synagogue users, and how the simple bishops, presbyters, and deacons of the first Christian synagogues, in the course of three centuries, should have attained to an eminence altogether inconsistent with the original theory of their appointment as synagogue officers. On the contrary, the notion that Christ or his apostles did actually establish a church under positive appointments, is altogether irreconcilable with the fact that the Scriptures nowhere recognize any such condition" (68-69).

"But notwithstanding this specific promise of Christ that he would be with the church to the end of the world, the Oxford Tracts directly state that the Catholic Church, during the progress of a thousand years, fell into grievous errors of faith, doctrine, and practice!!! . . . But then, again, we are assured by the Tracts the Church of England purified herself entirely from all the errors and corruptions that had occurred in the Catholic Church, and that she now possesses the original holiness and perfection of the church as at first constituted by Christ or his apostles. The Church of England, therefore, is the true and only catholic church, seeing the dissenters are all schismatics, and that the Romanists have, according to the conclusion of the thirty-fifth Tract, ‘so corrupted the truth of God’s word, that they are not to be listened to for a moment.’ Now, we are free to confess that nothing can be more vexatiously incomprehensible than the above statement; for, in the first place, we cannot understand how a church having the promise of Christ’s continuous presence until the end of the world could possibly become corrupt. And, again, when from the notorious corruptions of the Romish Church we could satisfy ourselves that the nature of Christ’s promise to the church has been altogether misunderstood, so that the contradiction is from the absurd interpretation, and not from any failure of Christ’s promise,—we say, when we have become convinced of this, our understanding is utterly confounded in being told by the Oxford Tracts that the promise of Christ stands fast according to the Romish interpretation, has never failed, and is yet the peculiar boast and privilege of the Church of England!!!" (72-73).

"But, according to the doctrine of the Oxford Tracts, Christ’s promise to be with the church to the end of the world is fulfilled by the simple preservation of episcopal succession among the clergy. The promise of Christ was not to preserve the church from error in faith, doctrine, or practice, but that an episcopally ordained succession of ministers should never be wanting to the church. This promise then has never failed, so that no matter how profligate any of this apostolically ordained ministry may have become, nevertheless their wickedness does not the less make them the ministers of God to us, and through whom alone we may with confidence expect to obtain that salvation for which Christ died. But this position of the Oxford divines, instead of removing difficulties, only makes matters more confused; for, if the claim of the Church of England to be the true catholic church of Christ rests not upon a profession of the true doctrines of Christianity, but upon her episcopal succession from the apostles, how are we to regard the Greek Church, the Nestorian, Coptic, and other Eastern churches, that have an episcopal succession as well as the Church of England? Nay, so has the Church of Rome, undeniably. How can we then determine to which of these divinely constituted hierarchies our allegiance properly belongs? According to the doctrine of the Tracts it would seem to be an indifferent matter which we submitted to, seeing they all have episcopal ordination and succession. But then if this be true, is it not supremely absurd for the Church of England to obtrude herself on our consciences as being the only true catholic church, seeing her only argument is the apostolic succession of her clergy, which apostolical ordination is equally conceded to the Romish, the Greek, and various Eastern churches?" (73).

"Notwithstanding the promise of Christ that the gates of hades should prevail against his church, and notwithstanding his promise to be with that church until the end of the world, yet he never taught his followers to expect that his kingdom should be established after the model of any of the things of this world, not did he ever teach them to expect they should cease to have tribulation in this world, though he told them, in the very same verse, 'to be of good cheer, for that he had overcome the world,' John xvi, 33" (82).

"In strict conformity to this declaration, we learn from various passages of the book of Revelation, that the saints, certainly the true followers of Jesus Christ, are everywhere represented as enduring afflictions, persecutions, and death: see Rev. vi, 9, 10, 11; vii, 13, 14; xiii, 7; xviii, 6, &c. Nor is there any entire deliverance intimated to them until after the downfall of antichrist and the mystical Babylonian harlot. Both of these events, all Protestant commentators of any reputation consider, are yet to be fulfilled. But among all the various exhibitions of the apocalyptic vision, of the various metaphorical beasts that should exercise dominion on the earth, and amid all the varieties of human operation there delineated, both as acting and as suffering, there is no corporate existence, nor any corporate agency in the transactions of these anticipated events of future Christian history" (82).

Length of Relevant Material: Pages 58-83.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topic(s): Elijah; Elias; Priesthood and Church; Descent of authority; Basis of authority; Keys
Author: "L."
Title of Book:
Title of Article: Book review of David Francis Bacon, Lives of the Apostles . . , New Haven: Young & Ulhorn, [1835 or 1836].
Title of Periodical: Methodist Quarterly Review
Place of Publication: Conference Office, 200 Mulberry Street, New York
Publisher: G. Lane & P. P. Sandford, for the Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 1841
Nature of Source: This article was mostly critical of Bacon's book. It faulted the author for straying from the scope promised by the title of his book. The reviewer lamented how Bacon squandered his opportunity to present an inspiring devotional work highlighting the religious life of the apostles. He complained about what he perceived as excessive secular and historical context for stories of the New Testament. Ever on the lookout for naturalistic explanations, the reviewer criticized Bacon for presenting unfaithful interpretations of miraculous biblical events that "might satisfy a German neologist or semi-deist . . ." (18). Much of the review contested Bacon's conclusions about Peter's apostolic supremacy. Among other things, the reviewer claimed the book sympathized with Catholic doctrines and argued that, contrary to the author's position, Christ did not make Peter "the foundation of the church!" (33). Although this reviewer's criterion are in keeping with the journal's uplifting editorial aims, this book's inclusion probably says more about the periodical's dual mission to defend Methodism and intellectually stimulate its readers.

Comment: The reviewer focused almost all of his critique on two topics: the supernatural events on the Mount of Transfiguration and the misunderstood supremacy of the apostle Peter. This book's contested portrayal of these biblical phenomena and persons takes on added significance for their similarity to contemporary LDS doctrinal developments. Given that this book may have been published in the same year as the dedication of the Kirtland Temple, Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery's claim that Moses, Elijah, and Elias visited them and restored priesthood keys may have affronted Protestants and their notions of priesthood—just as this reviewer condemned Bacon's interpretations that sounded like Catholic doctrines.

The reviewer of this book, Lives of the Apostles, sided with Luke in saying that the act of prayer, on the part of both the Lord and his three companions, was what precipitated the glorious events of the transfiguration. The sleep attributed to the apostles by Luke, the reviewer maintained, lasted only a short while, ended before they beheld the heavenly visitors, and in no way implied (as the author believed) their experience on the mount was merely a dream. The reviewer, however, provided little explanation for the reason and meaning of this miraculous manifestation. In his view, apparently, Christ's summoning of these Old Testament prophets was incidental; the Lord primarily intended to provide his chief apostles with an unprecedented display of glory.

That the reviewer turned immediately from his discussion of the transfiguration to a denunciation of Bacon's unjustified elevation of Peter suggests something of how Protestants may have accused Mormons of borrowing from Catholic ideas of priesthood authority. For instance, summer fellow David Holland's essay noted that "Mormon missionaries in England wrote [in 1840] to their family and friends in Nauvoo that 'when we speak of priesthood they call us Catholics'" (12). Although Holland's essay did not discuss differing doctrines of priesthood keys, the reviewer included keys in his list of Bacon's borderline Catholic views. This mention of keys raises interesting questions that Mormon scholars need to confront if they wish to fully understand how Protestants conflated Mormon and Catholic concepts of priesthood.

Catholics and Mormons both believe Peter received priesthood keys from Christ. The passing of these keys to successive generations of Church leaders, as a necessary condition for the Church's authority, was and is a common doctrine to both Catholics differ from Mormons, though, in their interpretation of what they call the Petrine texts: Matt. 16: 17-19; Luke 22:31-32; and John 21:15-17. The passages, in their view, evidence that Christ promised and granted Peter the position of supremacy among the Apostles. Interestingly enough, Catholics consider Christ's labeling of Peter as the rock of the Church, and the explanation that the keys of the kingdom of heaven held the power of binding and loosening, as merely the promise that Peter would soon receive these keys to carry out the duties consist with his ascendant station. The actual receipt of these keys, they further believe, did not occur until the resurrected Lord instructed Peter to "Feed my lambs. . . . Feed my sheep." In contrast, Joseph Smith taught that, in order to restore Christ's Church in a new dispensation, he and Oliver received keys on more than one occasion. Not only did he claim that they received keys from Peter, James, and John (in connection with the Melchizedek Priesthood) but he also asserted they received keys anew from the same Old Testament prophets who had bestowed keys upon these same three Apostles at the Mount of Transfiguration. Significantly, Protestants may have also considered this unbroken chain as proof that Mormons believed priesthood keys were invested in individuals and that they somewhat bypassed Christ's grace and authority by stretching back to Old Testament times. To the degree that Protestants perceived these or similar similarities, it is possible they reasoned Mormons had recast Catholic priesthood doctrines in a restoration context. Thus these connections between key bearers and the transfiguration, which reflected the reviewer's original juxtaposition, deserve further attention in our attempt to understand the Catholic context in which some Protestants may have viewed Joseph's claims about the supernatural means and messengers that accompanied the restoration of priesthood power and keys to him and his fellow church members.

Researcher: Sterling Fluharty

Excerpt (pages): "Thus we are taught by a Protestant Christian author [of the book under review, Lives of the Apostles,] that the adorable Saviour, to prepare his chosen disciples to witness the most magnificent display of his glory he ever deigned to exhibit to mortals in the body, of set purposes beguiled their imagination by scenes of grandeur, calculated to produce the same lofty emotions of sublimity and awe in the feelings of the deist, the heathen idolator, and the mere sentimentalist professing the Christian faith! That such emotions are often mistaken for true piety, and substituted for the spirit of devotion, we have little reason to doubt. They are excited not only by the romantic grandeur of 'earth-o're-gazing mountains'-the high places of idolatry-but also by the sombre aspect of the stately Gothic cathedral, and the grace tones of the majestic organ, aids to devotion which are sought only in the absence of the spirit of it."

"It was by that abstractedness of the thoughts from the world, and [end of page 16] deep devotion of heart before God, which continuous and ardent prayer produces, and not by dazzling the imagination with external grandeur, that the Saviour prepared the disciples for the manifestation of his glory which he was about to make to them" (16-17).

"[Peter was the Church's] "foundation," the "rock" on which it was built; the "chief apostle," sustaining a "perfectly commanding pre-eminence;"and the honored bearer of its sacred "keys." Such are the views set forth by our author, and inculcated in every possible form throughout his work" (24).
"The most obnoxious feature of the thesis in question is, that it makes Peter the foundation of the church! So he is distinctly denominated again and again in the volume before us. This is popery outright" (33).

"Christ is the living stone-having life in himself; and as such he is the only foundation of the spiritual temple" (36).

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topic(s): Religion and government, last days
Author: "L."
Title of Book:
Title of Article: Book review of David Francis Bacon, Lives of the Apostles . . , New Haven: Young & Ulhorn, [1835 or 1836].
Title of Periodical: Methodist Quarterly Review
Place of Publication: Conference Office, 200 Mulberry Street, New York
Publisher: G. Lane & P. P. Sandford, for the Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 1841
Library Location: American Periodical Series, Film 051 B, Reel #330
Nature of Source: This article was mostly critical of Bacon's book. It faulted the author for straying from the scope promised by the title of his book. The reviewer lamented how Bacon squandered his opportunity to present an inspiring devotional work highlighting the religious life of the apostles. He complained about what he perceived as excessive secular and historical context for stories of the New Testament. Ever on the lookout for naturalistic explanations, the reviewer criticized Bacon for presenting unfaithful interpretations of miraculous biblical events that "might satisfy a German neologist or semi-deist . . ." (18). Much of the review contested Bacon's conclusions about Peter's apostolic supremacy. Among other things, the reviewer claimed the book sympathized with Catholic doctrines and argued that, contrary to the author's position, Christ did not make Peter "the foundation of the church!" (33). Although this reviewer's criterion are in keeping with the journal's uplifting editorial aims, this book's inclusion probably says more about the periodical's dual mission to defend Methodism and intellectually stimulate its readers.

Comment: The reviewer invoked commentary from Adam Clarke to refute the author's portrayal of Peter's alleged apostolic supremacy. In so doing, Clarke's analysis shed light on Protestant concepts of the Kingdom of God.

By citing the verse in Mark to make his point about the Lord's kingdom, Clarke seemed to draw no distinction between the "kingdom of heaven" and the "kingdom of God." In fact, Clarke likely considered the two terms synonymous: the former phrase is unique to only Matthew (out of the four gospels), whereas the latter shows up in each of the four gospels (including the cited verse of Mark) and elsewhere throughout the New Testament. Apparently, in Clarke's view, the phrase "kingdom of heaven" carried spatial connotations; a kingdom fit for Jesus was, by definition, "not of this world!"

Notwithstanding the divine location Clarke envisioned necessary for God's kingdom, he saw no contradiction in believing the apostles had initially "viewed the kingdom of Christ" as a "temporal" organization upon the earth.

Although it was not stated here, perhaps Clarke accounted for this preliminary apostolic perspective by recognizing that New Testament Jews had anticipated an apocalyptic Messiah who would secure their deliverance from Roman oppression. The political dimensions of this awaited kingdom, which Christ never delivered in his first coming, may have informed latter-day differentiations between the various forms of the Lord's kingdom—even though Clarke never criticized modern interpretations at variance with his own views. These biblical antecedents, moreover, might suggest whether and why some Christians of the early- to mid-nineteenth century stopped using the designations "kingdom of heaven" and "kingdom of God" interchangeably. To be sure, Mormons conceived of a kingdom of God both upon earth and in heaven; as somewhat separate kingdoms, the Church served mortals who were (hopefully) progressing toward residence in the celestial kingdom in the next life. In addition, their millenarian thought, especially as it was conditioned by scriptural exhortations to "build" the kingdom, caused early Latter-day Saints to transform the Christian idea of the Lord's kingdom from an abstract notion about heaven into a full-blown Zion community. That this entailed a governmental framework, political leaders, military forces, and economic policies—in order to usher in Christ's millennial reign—apparently never surprised Mormons. Future studies of biblical interpretation and denominational theology for this time period might compare and contrast Mormon thinking about the Lord's various kingdoms with that of contemporary denominations to determine the definitions Christians applied to scriptural language about kingdoms—especially in those few instances where they spatially grounded it within this temporal sphere and connected it with prophecies about the last days and restoration.

Researcher: Sterling Fluharty

Excerpt (pages): "In the eighteenth chapter of Matthew, first and second verses, it is said, 'At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is greatest in the kingdom of heaven?' Dr. Adam Clarke, in his note on this passage, says, 'Could these disciples have viewed the kingdom of Christ in any other light than that of a temporal one? Hence they wished to know whom he would make his prime minister—whom his general—whom his chief chancellor—whom supreme judge, &c., &c. Is it he who first became thy disciple, or he who is thy nearest relative, or he who has most frequently entertained thee, or he who is the oldest, merely as to years? Peter, James, and John were surely more spiritual in their views! And yet how soon did even these forget that his kingdom was not of this world? See Mark x, 25, &c.; John xviii, 10, &c. The disciples having lately seen the keys delivered to Peter, and found that he, with James and John, had been privileged with being present at the transfiguration, it is no wonder if a measure of jealousy and suspicion began to work in their minds. From this inquiry we may also learn that the disciples had no notion of Peter's supremacy; nor did they understand, as the Roman Catholics will have it, that Christ had constituted him their head, either by conversation mentioned chap. xvi, 18, 19, or by the act mentioned in the conclusion of the preceding chapter. Had they thought that any such superiority had been designed, their present question must have been extremely impertinent. Let this be observed" (30-31).

Length of Relevant Material: Two pages
"About two months after Samuel Fitch believed the gospel, being at Watervliet, and having received a great manifestation of light and understanding, he spoke to Mother and said, 'Christ is called the second Adam, and thou art the second Eve.' She answered, 'Flesh and blood has not revealed it unto thee, Samuel; but God has.'

"Job Bishop, being with Mother at Watervliet, opened some visions that he had seen, of some of the Apostles. Mother, turning to Elder James, (who was present,) exclaimed, "Aha James! These are great gifts of God; they are ministering spirits. I have often seen saint Peter and saint Paul, and conversed with them, and with all the Apostles, and with Christ Jesus, my Lord and Head: for no man is my head, but Christ Jesus; he is my Lord and Head." (209-10)

"The same year, David Slosson and many other's being at Watervliet, were present with Mother and the Elders, when Mother appeared to be clothed in majesty, and her visage was exceeding glorious. She spoke with great power, and said, 'I am married to the Lord Jesus Christ? He is my head and my husband, and I have no other! I have walked, hand in hand, with him in heaven! I have seen the patriarchs, prophets and apostles; I have conversed with them, and I know them! I have seen King David, with his robes on, which were of vast extent, and inexpressibly glorious! I have seen Job, saint Paul and others.' She also described their statures & their glory & majesty." (211)

"At Watervliet, a little before her decease, in the presence of Anna Mathewson, Lucy Wright and others, Mother expressed her great love to Christ, saying, "He is my Lord and Lover; I feel great union with him, and walk with him in union, as with a lover. I see the opening of the heavens, and I see the heaven of heavens, as it were glory beyond glory; and still see that which does excel in glory!" (213) given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp.,
The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The various chapters in the second part of the book related reminiscences of those that knew Ann Lee. Lee was illiterate and left no writings, so these reminiscences are the core source of information of what she may have taught and done. Teachings of her close associates, Elders William Lee and James Whittaker, are also included.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman

Date: 23 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "At Watervliet, in 1780, Hannah Cogswell and others being present, Mother related some visions which she had seen, and at the same time said, 'I see an angel with a glorious trumpet, and he is sounding it. Again she said, I see another angel sounding a trumpet.' Hannah do you believe that I see these things?' Hannah answered,
'Yea.' Mother said, 'Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet believe.'

"Again. Elder William said, 'I know the condition of souls that have left the body, I see a thousand in the world of spirits.' Mother and Elder James often spoke in the same manner, concerning their intercourse with the world of spirits.

"The winter after the gospel opened, Mary Mosely was at Watervliet, in the room with Mother, and Mother said, 'I see the room full of angels, and they are female angels.' Then turning to Mary, she said, 'You must leave off sinning, and serve the living and true God.'

"At another time, while the brethren and sisters were worshipping God in the dance, Mother came into the room, and sung awhile. After they stopped dancing, Mother spoke and said, 'The room over your heads, is full of the angels of God. I see them and you could see them too, if you were redeemed from the nature of the flesh.'

"The first time Mother visited Enfield, Mary Tiffany went, one evening, to see her; and Mother said, 'I see your deceased kindred all around you.' Mary asked if it was her mother, or her child. She said, 'It is all your kindred, both upon you father's and mother's side; they are nearer to you than I am.

"The next day, Mary, with a number of other sisters, went to see Mother, and asked her how she did. She answered, 'I have been under great sufferings for the dead, last night, and I saw your souls, in vision, as plain as I can see your bodies, standing shoulder to shoulder, clothed in white. Do you hear me Molly?' Yea Mother,' answered Mary. 'I saw your soul, (said Mother,) clothed with a long white robe, down to your feet.'

"... At Watervliet, in the presence of Cornelius Thayer, William Scales and others, Mother said, 'I saw William Scales in vision, writing that which was not according to the simplicity of the gospel; and the evil spirits hovered round him, and administered evil to him. They looked like crows.' And Mother reproved William sharply.

"Again Mother said, 'I have seen Michael and his angels fight with the Dragon and his angels; and the Dragon was cast out of heaven, and there was no place found for him. I saw it as plain before my eyes, as ever I saw any natural thing.' (229-31.)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages

Hard Copy (pages):
Topics: apostle; three degrees of glory
Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.
Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses
Title of Article:
Title of Publication:
Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts
Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.
Date of Publication: 1816
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921
Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12. The volume was recalled after it was published due to the controversy it engendered among the Shakers themselves.
Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The various chapters in the second part of the book related reminiscences of those that knew Ann Lee. Lee was illiterate and left no writings, so these reminiscences are the core source of information of what she may have taught. They may, however, be more revealing about the third generation of Shakers than the first. Teachings of her close associates in the Shaker leadership, Elders William Lee and James Whittaker, are also included.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 28 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Father William was 'a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief;' he was truly an apostle in sufferings; and when he was released, it seemed as if his soul was in the third heavens." (338)
Length of Relevant Material: 1 page
Hard Copy (pages):
And it was revealed, and manifested to the Believers at large, the first, Joseph Meacham, and afterwards Lucy Wright, were raised up, prepared and appointed, by the gift and power of God, each in their own order, to take the first lead and spiritual concern in the order and government of the Church; and they were mutually acknowledged by all, as our beloved parents, standing in the visible order, and relation, of the first Father and Mother of our redemption, who are the invisible first pillars upon which the spiritual house of God is built.

These were first pillars in the spiritual building and visible order of the Church; Father and Mother, in spiritual relation, and first in relation to all others. And by these, with others as helps in the ministry, the Church was established, and set in that order and correspondent relation . . .

Ministers were likewise raised up and appointed by the gift of God, and sent forth from the Church, by the ministry, to labour among distant believers, in word and doctrine, to purge out iniquity, to reprove the disobedient, to strengthen and encourage the weak, and confirm the faithful.

Deacons and Deaconesses also come forth in their proper gift, order and office, in the temporal affairs of the Church; and each, according to their gift and talents for usefulness, were felt and mutually acknowledged by all, according to the order and gift of God by which they were appointed.

Therefore, as each member of the body is dependent on another, and as the light of the body is the eye; so the whole body, that came forth into visible church-order, were subject to the visible head, the joint parentage, who stood in Christ the invisible head, as the medium through which the whole visible body is full of light. . . .
"Misters, Elders, and Deacons, all without exception, labour with their hands; excepting at such times as are taken up by each in their particular gifts and callings, which all tend to the mutual increase and benefit of the whole. And no member or members, from the eldest to the youngest, are constrained or compelled, by any law, rule or custom in the Church, to go beyond their abilities, or in any matter to act contrary to their own faith and voluntary choice.

"The order and regulation of the Church, in all spiritual matters, in intrusted, by the gift of God, to the Ministry and Elders, or elder Brethren of each community and family. To them also is committed the charge of sending out ministers to preach the gospel to the world of mankind.

"None of the Ministry hold any title to lands or property, as individuals, more than any other members; nor have they any pensions or salaries: but whatever they need for their support at home, or expenditure abroad, they receive at such times as they need it. (502-03, 511-12)

Length of Relevant Material: 8 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: basis of authority; second coming; only true church
Author: Calvin Green (Theodore E. Johnson, ed.)
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Biographical Account of the Life, Character, & Ministry of Father Joseph Meacham, the Primary Leader in Establishing the United Order of the Millennial Church"
Title of Periodical: The Shaker Quarterly
Place of Publication: Poland Spring, Maine
Publisher: United Society
Date of Publication: 1970
Library Location: Not at BYU
Nature of Source: Calvin Green, a prominent Shaker historian/theologian of the early nineteenth century, compiled this account. The title page lists 1827, yet the manuscript is dated 1859. It remained in manuscript form until 1970 when it was edited and introduced by Theodore Johnson, the general editor of the Shaker Quarterly. The entire account stretches over numbers 1-3 of volume 10, and is found on pages 20-32, 51-68, 92-102.
Comment: Joseph Meacham is a prominent figure in early American Shakerism. He was the first American convert of Ann Lee, the sect's charismatic early leader. After Lee's death, her close English associate, James Whittaker, took over leadership of the group. He was followed by Meacham. Meacham is credited with publishing the sects first theological tract, and was instrumental in "gathering" the Shakers into communities across New England and New York. Green compiled this account during a period of intense historical and theological development in Shakerism. Sources are sparse for the period of the early Shaker leaders, so much of what we know is based on later work like this. It may be that these later sources tell us more about the state of Shakerism in the 1820s than they do about the 1790s, the decade of Meacham's leadership.
At length he was fully convinced that these strange people professed the spirit, kingdom, & work for which he had so earnestly prayed, & sought, & of which he had prophesied. And that indeed their testimony was the voice of the son of God; His last great objection was that a woman should govern or stand at the head of the Church which thing was so diametrically contrary to the doctrine of St. Paul, who even forbid women to teach in the church.

"Father James mentioned the above named objection to Mother; upon which she directed an answer thus, 'Tell him (Joseph) that in the natural state, the man is first in the government of the family; but when the man is absent the government belongs to the woman.' By this wise answer, Father Joseph easily caught the beautiful idea, that Christ Jesus in his first appearance, being present, in the body very properly took the lead, but now Jesus being absent from the earth and the real life of Christ exemplified as his second appearance in a woman; it was her right to lead and govern the family, or children of the new creation, which constitutes the true Church of God on earth. He was fully satisfied that Mother Ann was the Bride, the lambs wife, & soon after he became a faithful member of the society." (26)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 page

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: basis of authority; women's role

Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.

Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts

Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921

Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.
Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The excerpt below is the report of a conversation between Mother Ann Lee and Joseph Meacham, a New Light Congregationalist that eventually became Lee's first American convert.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman,
Date: 18 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Joseph sent . . . Mother . . . the following query, namely: 'Saint Paul says, Let your women keep silence in the Churches: for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn any thing, let them ask their husbands at home: for it is shame for a woman to speak in the Church. But you not only speak, but seem to be an Elder in your Church. How do you reconcile this with the Apostle's doctrine?'

"Mother answered, 'The order of man, in the natural creation, is a figure of order of God in the spiritual creation. As the order of nature requires a man and a woman to produce offspring; so, where they both stand in their proper order, the man is the first, and the woman the second in the government of the family. He is the father and she the Mother; and all the children, both male and female, must be subject to their parents; and the woman, being second, must be subject to her husband, who is the first; but when he man is gone, the right of government belongs to the woman: So it is with the family of Christ.

"Joseph clearly saw that the new creation could not be perfect in its order, without a father and a mother: That as the natural creation was the offspring of a natural father and mother; so the spiritual creation must be the offspring of a spiritual father and mother. "He saw Jesus Christ to be the Father of the spiritual creation, who was now absent; and he saw Ann Lee to be the Mother of all who were now begotten in the regeneration; and she being present in the body, the power and authority of Christ on earth, was committed to her; and to her appertained the right of leading, directing and governing all her spiritual children." (21-22)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: corruption of Biblical texts;
Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green
Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, New York
Publisher: E. and E. Hosford
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127
Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808. Youngs wrote the first edition, and Calvin Green worked to revise and expand the second edition.

Comment: This work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response to perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii). Shakers had resisted writing doctrinal or historical works until this time (with the exception of Meacham, Concise Statement . . . , 1790). This work ushered in a period of formalization of Shaker theology. This work was somewhat controversial. Shakers were located in two general regions, with centers in New York and Ohio-Kentucky. Youngs was part of the western group. The general leadership in New York assigned Green, part of the eastern group, to bring Youngs' work into conformity with their views on contested issues. It may be instructive to compare the two editions—the first edition is in the Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #16776.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 16 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Those Books which have been collected into one, under the title of Holy Scriptures, are so called from their being written by holy men, who were moved by the Holy Ghost. And as far as they have been preserved entire, in their original sense, free from the errors of translators and transcribers, they are justly denominated "The Scriptures of Truth." (604)

Length of Relevant Material: 7 pages
Hard Copy (pages):

---

Topics: descent of authority; basis of authority
Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.
Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses
Title of Article:
Title of Publication:
Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts
Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.
Date of Publication: 1816
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921
Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12. The volume was recalled after it was published due to the controversy it engendered among the Shakers themselves.

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The various chapters in the second part of the book related reminiscences of those that knew Ann Lee. Lee was illiterate and left no writings, so these reminiscences are the core source of information of what she may have taught. They may, however, be more revealing about the third generation of Shakers than the first. Teachings of her close associates in the Shaker leadership, Elders William Lee and James Whittaker, are also included.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman

Date: 28 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Father James was, evidently, ordained of God to be Mother's successor, in the Ministry. After attending her funeral, and speaking to the assembly, under a great wight of grief and sorrow, he returned home; and the Believers being assembled, he spoke and said, 'My two friends and Elders are gone! I pray God to help me!'

"He then called upon all the brethren and sisters, to help him keep the way of God; and urged the necessity of their being more faithful and watchful, than they had been, to keep the way of God; since those, who had the greatest gift for their protection, were gone. The tears flowed abundantly. He spoke of the great weight that fell upon him, with respect to the protection of the Believers, and his concern and labor that the gospel might be kept and honored.

"So solemn and impressive were his words, at this time, that they had a great effect upon every feeling Believer. It was plainly seen and felt, that Mother's mantle had fallen upon him; and that God had anointed him to lead and protect his people." (355-56)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: descent of Israel; gathering; spirit, soul and body; resurrection

Author: Valentine W. Rathbun

Title of Book: Some Brief Hints of a Religious Scheme, Taught a propagated by a Number of Europeans, living in a Place called Nisqueunia, in the State of New-York.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher:

Date of Publication: 1783

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Evans collection, #18145
Nature of Source: This 36 page pamphlet is an early attempt by a Shaker dissident to expose his former sect. It is valuable because of its early date, written years before the Shakers themselves gave any printed description of their theology.

Comment: Rathbun describes the communities of the Shakers, their doctrine, and errors. Also included is a "scriptural" refutation of Shaker beliefs, a personal testimonial of the author's experience with the sect, and a warning against involvement with the sect. The following is an excerpt from Rathbun's telling of how the Shakers bring one under their influence.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman  Date: 18 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Then they tell the person that they shall never die, and also all those that obey them, and get to be perfect, shall also never die, but be changed in a moment, and go home body and soul: But all the bodies of those that die in their sins, shall never rise.-They further tell him, that the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were sealed, twelve thousand out of each tribe, is a work yet to be done; and that they are of the tribe of Benjamin, though the youngest tribe, and last in the account, yet first in the order, of being sealed; and that they are the first fruits of that tribe; and that all that are to be brought in, in America, will belong to that tribe: And thus the last is to be first, and the first last." (14-15)
"They speak highly of their teachers, and say those men at Nisqueunia are the angels of God, sent forth to gather in the God's elect." (18)
Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: dispensations; apostasy; preparation of the earth and preceding events; one true church; covenants with Israel; Abraham; Christianization of the Old Testament
Author: Joseph Meacham
Title of Book: [pamphlet] A Concise Statement of the Principles of the Only True Church According to the Gospel of the Present Appearance of Christ
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Bennington, Vermont
Publisher: Haswell and Russell
Date of Publication: 1790
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Evans collection, #22664
Nature of Source: This pamphlet was a Shaker missionary tract, published along with a 1785 letter written by James Whittaker, a prominent Shaker leader. Another Shaker source, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810 [Shaw and Shoemaker #22127]), notes that the pamphlet was "written to a deaf man, by particular request" (v). This document is thought to be the earliest printed statement of Shaker theology.

Comment: This brief Shaker doctrinal exposition outlines the process by which God's covenant was offered to Abraham and the Patriarchs, then to Israel through Moses, and then to humanity at Christ's first and second appearance. It contains a host of biblical proof texts and covers variety of topics.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 15 June 1999

Excerpt (pages):

"We believe that the first light of salvation was given or made known to the patriarchs by promise; and they that believed in the promise of Christ, and were obedient to the command of God made known unto them, were the people of God and were accepted of God as righteous, or perfect in their generation; according to the measure of light and truth manifested unto them... And altho' they could not receive regeneration or the fulness of salvation from the fleshly or fallen nature in this life; because the fulness of time was not yet come, that they should receive the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire: for the destruction of the body of sin, and purification of the soul... (3)

"The second dispensation was the law that was given of God to Israel, by the hand of Moses; which was a further manifestation of that salvation of which was promised through Christ by the gospel, both in the order and ordinances which was instituted and given to Israel, as the church and people of God according to that dispensation... (5)

"... but there was another day prophesied of, called the second appearance of Christ, or final and last display of God's grace to a lost world: in which the mystery of God should be finished as he has spoken by his prophets since the world began: which day could not come, except there was a falling away from that faith and power that the church then stood in: in which time anti-christ was to have his reign, whom Christ should destroy with the spirit of his mouth and brightness of his appearance: which falling away began soon after the apostles, and gradually increased in the church, until about four hundred and fiftyseven year from Christ's birth (or thereabouts) at which time the power of the Holy People, or church of Christ, was scattered or lost by reason of transgression: and anti-christ, or false religion, got to be established. ... (9-10)

Length of Relevant Material: 17 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: dispensations; gathering; spirit world; seeing God; second coming

Author: Stephen J. Stein

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "A Candid Statement of Our Principles': Early Shaker Theology in the West"

Title of Periodical: Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Publisher: American Philosophical Society

Date of Publication: 1989

Library Location: BYU Lee Library, Q11 .P52

Nature of Source: Stein provides a brief introduction to Shakerism and context for the document, followed by a transcription of the manuscript "Candid Statement of Our Principles." The article appears in volume 133 of the journal listed above, no. 4 (December 1989).
Comment: Stephen Stein, Professor of Religious Studies at Indiana University, is a noted scholar of American Shakerism. His Shaker Experience in America (New Haven, 1992) is the best recent history of the sect. This article is quite significant in that it presents the full text of the "Candid Statement of Our Principles," published for the first time. This early attempt to articulate Shaker theology departed from a decades-old practice of refusing to publish anything approaching a creedal statement. The only earlier published doctrinal work of the Shakers is Joseph Meacham's Concise Statement of the Principles of the Only True Church (Bennington, VT: 1790). The authors of this Shaker document borrowed heavily from Meacham's work. Stein was the first scholar (according to his article) to discuss this document and its importance in understanding the theological development of Shakerism.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman        Date: 28 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The fist dispensations of light were under Abm & Moses. And the place of gathering of souls was in the land of Canaan-In the intervening night of darkness, Pharoah & Nebuchadnezzer, were the chiefs & Egypt & Babylon, head quarters for the spirits of the night.

"Now do you ask where Abel, Enoch, Noah & the spirits of the just were thro' the dispensation of the Law & the prophets? We answer they were with the people of God in the land of Canaan.

"Do you enquire where Cain & the wicked Antideluvians were in the reign of Nebuchadnezzer? We answer they were in Babylon-that was their day-The righteous & wicked had day about: & what was day to the one was night to the other.

"When the son of god appeared it was the brightest day that ever shone to souls that were looking for redemption-But to spirits that were after the pleasures of sin it was the darkest night that ever overspread the globe-the place of gathering was still denominated according to the former name mount Zion-But the real place was the manifestation of God in the flesh. thousands thousands stood &c

"Christ is revealed more than in the man Jesus. he was revealed in Paul that he might preach among the Gentiles.

"We believe that no man could see the father with bodily eyes nor know him but as the Son revealed him, neither is the Son in his glorified state any more visible to the natural eye, nor can he be known but as he is reveal in his saints-it is not by making any visible appearance like the great men of the earth that he judges the world-but is by his saints, that are transformed into his likeness. (515-16)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

_______________________________________________________

Topics: Elijah; visions, dreams, revelations; primitive church

Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green (David Darrow and John Meacham are listed with Youngs at the end of the preface as authors of the preface?)

Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, New York
Publisher: E. and E. Hosford
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127
Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808(?).
Comment: The work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii).
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 16 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Therefore it was, that soon after our blessed Mother, and her companions, came over into America, with the treasures of the everlasting gospel, the spirit of Elijah was sent forth, and begun, in a remarkable manner, to prepare the way of the Lord. . . .
". . . Many received the gift of visions and prophecies, by which they saw and testified that the day of full redemption was at hand.
". . . others, filled with unspeakable joy, were carried out in visions and revelations of the glory of the latter day-of the coming of Christ-the setting up of his kingdom, and the nature of his government . . .
"And is was found, beyond all doubt or contradiction, to every candid inquirer after truth, that God had verily raised himself up witnesses, and endowed them with all those gifts of the Holy Ghost that were given to the apostles and primitive church . . .
"Many who believed from the heart, and were obedient to the light and revelation of God, made known unto them through the witnesses, received the gifts of the Holy Ghost; such as tongues, and revelation, and visions, and prophesies, and many extraordinary gifts of healing." (496-99)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Enoch; prophets; seeing God; Old Testament as context for doctrine
Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green (David Darrow and John Meacham are listed with Youngs at the end of the preface as authors of the preface?)
Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: [pamphlet] A Concise Statement of the Principles of the Only True Church According to the Gospel of the Present Appearance of Christ

Place of Publication: Bennington, Vermont
Publisher: Haswell and Russell
Date of Publication: 1790

Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808(?).

Comment: The work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response to perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii).

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman            Date: 17 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "And when it is said, that Enoch, Noah and others, walked with God; it means nothing more, than their walking in obedience to the commands of God given them in their day.

"Thus, Noah walked with God in his generation, in building an ark, &c.-Abram, in leaving his father's house-Moses, in bringing up the children of Israel out of Egypt.-David was a man after God's own heart, to fulfill all his will; but all his will to David, was not all his will to another; David was a man of blood, therefore Solomon was chosen to build the temple.-Jehu was anointed to cut off the house of Ahab-and Cyrus was the Lord's anointed to subdue the nations. But not one of them walked with God under the cross of Christ; nor were they anointed with power to save them from their sins." (72)

"Such then, as hath been stated, was the real situation of all mankind, from Adam to Moses, and from Moses to Christ. Not all of them at all times alike, in name or appearance, nor equally corrupt in practice. But all of them, patriarchs and families, kings and prophets, priests and people, from Adam to Christ, were destitute of the real internal power of salvation from all sin. It is testified by the law and the prophets, and confirmed by the most undeniable facts." (87)
Whittaker's brief letter instructs its recipient(s) to accept a celibate life, and provides a doctrinal justification for doing so.

Comment: Green was a major Shaker theologian/historian, though he is under-acknowledged in the scholarly work on Shakers. Though this work is an important one, it never approached Youngs' work (Testimony, cited above) or that of Dunlavy (Manifesto, 1818) in its influence. The biographical accounts of early Shaker leaders relies heavily on the work of Rufus Bishop, Testimonies of the Life, Character . . . of Mother Ann Lee, 1816. Information on gathering, consecration, and common property goes on from this excerpt to page 77.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman  Date: 16 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "As the manner of God's work, both in the natural and spiritual creation, has always been progressive, increasing from one degree of order to another until it arrives to perfection; so the order which has been established in the church of Christ on earth, was necessarily progressive, being effected by the progressive operations of his Divine Spirit in the hearts of the faithful. While the believers, as a people, remained in their respective natural families; scattered about in different places, possessing respectively the temporal interest inherited by natural heirship, or acquired by their own labors in their respective callings, there could not be much order among them, excepting the common order of nature. But all who had honestly confessed and forsaken their sins, and faithfully continued to take up their crosses, according to the manifestation of the gift of God which they had received, who had paid all their just debts, and freed themselves from all outward embarrassments, and by their faithfulness and obedience, had gained a sufficient degree of mortification to the fallen nature of the flesh, were thereby prepared for a further increase of gospel order. To gain this increase, it was necessary that they should be brought into a nearer connection together, and thereby be enabled to serve God in a more united capacity, as members of the body of Christ in a church relation.

"To constitute a true church of Christ, there must necessarily be a union of faith, of motives and of interest, in all the members who compose it. There must be 'one body and one bread:' and nothing short of this union in all things, both spiritual and temporal, can constitute a true church, which is the body of Christ. And wherever that united body exists, it will bring into operation every individual talent for the general good of the whole body. And herein is the prayer of Jesus answered; 'That they might be one, 'even as we are one.' In this united capacity, the strength of the whole body becomes the strength of each member; and being united in the one Spirit of Christ, they have a greater privilege to serve God than they possibly could have in a separate capacity, and are better able to be mutual helps to each other; and they also find a greater degree of protection from the snares of a selfish and worldly nature." (51)

Length of Relevant Material: 15 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

_______________________________________________________

Topics: gathering; corruption of the churches; apostasy
Author: Stephen J. Stein
Title of Book: "A Candid Statement of Our Principles': Early Shaker Theology in the West"
Title of Article: "A Candid Statement of Our Principles': Early Shaker Theology in the West"
Title of Periodical: Proceedings of the American Philosophical Society
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
Publisher: American Philosophical Society
Date of Publication: 1989
Library Location: BYU Lee Library, Q11 .P52
Nature of Source: Stein provides a brief introduction to Shakerism and context for the document, followed by a transcription of the manuscript "Candid Statement of Our Principles." The article appears in volume 133 of the journal listed above, no. 4 (December 1989).
Comment: Stephen Stein, Professor of Religious Studies at Indiana University, is a noted scholar of American Shakerism. His Shaker Experience in America (New Haven, 1992) is the best recent history of the sect. This article is quite significant in that it presents the full text of the "Candid Statement of Our Principles," published for the first time. This early attempt to articulate Shaker theology departed from a decades-old practice of refusing to publish anything approaching a creedal statement. The only earlier published doctrinal work of the Shakers is Joseph Meacham's Concise Statement of the Principles of the Only True Church (Bennington, VT: 1790). The authors of this Shaker document borrowed heavily from Meacham's work. Stein was the first scholar (according to his article) to discuss this document and its importance in understanding the theological development of Shakerism.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman       Date: 28 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Divisions, contentions, &c. among denominations are evidence that they have not the holy Ghost, or abiding comfortable-These divisions began in the days of the Apostles, & were marks of their falling away which yn began.
"But the Apostles never Apologized for any of those things, or attempted to make them consistant with the Ch of xt. as denominations do-they testified that it was Antitxt who was then beginning to work to prepare his kingdom.-So that when professors of xt.y who are divided into different sects & parties, fighting one against another, appeal to those things on that day as an example-they prove that they are the descendants of Antixt.-but not of xt., for xt. is not divided. . . .
"The separation between the tares & the wheat will take place-by the gathering together unto xt. of all those who are willing to forsake their sins of all denominations." (516-17)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: 28 June 1999

Topics: gathering; covenant; common property in the New Testament
Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green (David Darrow and John Meacham are listed with Youngs at the end of the preface as authors of the preface?)

Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing: Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Albany, New York
Publisher: E. and E. Hosford
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127
Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808(?).
Comment: The work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii).
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 16 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "... a work of preparation continued, among the believers, under the ministry of Elder James Whittaker, and others, for about three years longer, by which they were prepared to come together, as a joint body, in gospel order. . ." The authors follow this introduction with scriptural explanations of gathering; the first being the image of the kingdom as a net separating the righteous and the wicked, the second being the Church as a body, being born (or gathered) after it is formed and prepared. "By this the Church is jointly and invisibly begotten and conceived, and visibly brought forth, one body, perfect in its order, and in all its corresponding parts, as the offspring of God, coming forth from the invisible order of heaven-rooted, settled, and grounded in the divine nature-sound and unshaken in her faith-pure and examplary in her morals-unpolluted and unstained by the flesh-and separated and unspotted from the world and from all sin. . .
"Hence the work of regeneration and salvation, respects souls in a united capacity; for no individual can be regenerated nor saved in any other capacity than in a Church-relation, any more than a hand or foot can be born separate or distinct from the human body, and united to some other body after it is separately born."
After believers were sufficiently freed from the world, the authors relate, they were prepared to "come forth in an outwardly visible order."
"Accordingly, about the ninth month, September, in the year 1787, the Believers began to gather together with one consent; first at New-Lebanon, and shortly after in other places, for the purpose of supporting one joint union and interest in all things, spiritual and temporal, for the mutual benefit and comfort of each other, and for other pious and charitable uses, according to the light of God they had received, and their understanding of a Church in the true order of the gospel. . .." (499-502)
* * * *
"The present gospel order of the Church was established in the year 1792, although the gathering and preparatory work began some years sooner. Most of the members of the Church and New-Lebanon, were gathered in the year 1788. At which time they entered verbally into Covenant with each other, to stand as one joint community in Church relation." Some time after the verbal covenant was made, the group committed it to writing, which the authors include in its entirety, along with slight changes made to it in a subsequent revision.
"All the Believers, who came together in the full order and covenant of a Church relation, possessed all things jointly; neither said any of them that ought of the things which he possessed was his own; but every thing was possessed in a perfect law of justice and equity, by all the members." (505-509)

Length of Relevant Material: 14 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: gathering; descent of authority; apostles; bishop; keys; visions, dreams, revelations
Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.
Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts
Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.
Date of Publication: 1816
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921
Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.
Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. These excerpts are taken from Chapter 24, entitled "Prophecies, Visions, and Revelations," in which the editors relate prominent teachings and experiences of Ann Lee and her close associates in the Shaker leadership.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 22 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "At Watervliet, after Mother's return from her journey to the eastward, she was one day in great tribulation, and weeping, with fervent cries to God, in consideration of the scattered state of the Believers; 'But (said she) the time will come when the Church will be gathered into order; but not till after my decease' She also said, 'After my departure, there will come grievous wolves, who will destroy many of the flock.'
"At Watervliet, in the former part of the year 1781, Elder James took Amos Rathbun by the hand, and prophesied, saying, 'In eleven years the Church will be established in her order.' This prophecy has been exactly fulfilled. for in the year 1792, the Church was established in the present order and spirit of government. . . . (218)

"At Ashfield, Mother being under sufferings, said, 'It will not be my lot, nor the lot of any that came with me from England, to gather and build up the Church; but it will be the lot of Joseph Meacham, and others, to gather the Church.' She also testified saying, 'It will not be my nation, nor any of those that came with me, from England, that will lead this people; but the lead will be given to Joseph Meacham.'

"Again, at Ashfield, Mother said, 'Joseph Meacham is my first born son in America. He will gather the Church into order; but I shall not live to see it.'

"Mother testified to Father Joseph, saying, 'When order comes to be established, it will then be seen and known who are true believers.'

"One day, at Watervliet, not long before her decease, Mother took Joseph Meacham by the hand, and walking the floor, said, 'I see the glories of God, in visions and revelations of things to come. Joseph is my first Bishop; he will have the keys of the Kingdom; he is my Apostle in the Ministry, my first Bishop; what he does, I do. I see the glories of God shine in his face! Joseph, my son Joseph! I feel my time short-I speak that you may understand.' (219-20) testimony in writing" (xiii). Shakers had resisted writing doctrinal or historical works until this time (with the exception of Meacham, Concise Statement . . . , 1790). This work ushered in a period of formalization of Shaker theology. This work was somewhat controversial. Shakers were located in two general regions, with centers in New York and Ohio-Kentucky. Youngs was part of the western group. The general leadership in New York assigned Green, part of the eastern group, to bring Youngs' work into conformity with their views on contested issues. It may be instructive to compare the two editions—the first edition is in the Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #16776.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 13 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The True Character of the Church of Christ.

"The Church of Christ is composed of such as are called and chosen of God out of the spirit and practice of the world. And in obedience to that call, they are separated from all the rest of mankind, and united in one body, constituted a holy and peculiar people, actuated by one holy spirit, and are devoted to the cause of truth and virtue.

"The Church of Christ is called the kingdom of heaven, because it is under the government of heaven, and is a state, habitation, or society, necessary to prepare mankind for the happiness of heaven itself; and such is that line of order and disposition of things in the spiritual world, extending from the source of true happiness, to this world, that no soul can enter heaven, but through that kingdom, or Church of Christ.

"Hence the Church is called the light of the world, inasmuch as the men of the world cannot receive no true saving light, but in and through the Church. It is also the salt of the earth, as none upon earth can be saved but by the Church: It is therefore plainly, the saviour of the body.

"The Church is properly the house or habitation of God on earth, which signifies that God is not to be found any where else on earth.* As it is written: Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the children of Israel forever.-Great is the mystery of godliness: God manifested in the flesh.

"The essential properties of the Church of Christ are Unity and Purity. The Church is one in faith and practice; one in doctrine, discipline, and government; and one in the mutual and equal enjoyment of all things both spiritual and temporal. And where this oneness doth not exist, there is neither fruit nor evidence of the true Church of Christ; for Christ is not, nor can he be divided." (429-30)

Length of Relevant Material: 6 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Place of Publication: Poland Spring, Maine
Publisher: United Society
Date of Publication: 1970
Library Location: Not at BYU
Nature of Source: Calvin Green, a prominent Shaker historian/theologian of the early nineteenth century, compiled this account. The title page lists 1827, yet the manuscript is dated 1859. It remained in manuscript form until 1970 when it was edited and introduced by Theodore Johnson, the general editor of the Shaker Quarterly. The entire account stretches over numbers 1-3 of volume 10, and is found on pages 20-32, 51-68, 92-102.
Comment: Joseph Meacham is a prominent figure in early American Shakerism. He was the first American convert of Ann Lee, the sect's charismatic early leader. After Lee's death, her close English associate, James Whittaker, took over leadership of the group. He was followed by Meacham. Meacham is credited with publishing the sects first theological tract, and was instrumental in "gathering" the Shakers into communities across New England and New York. Green compiled this account during a period of intense historical and theological development in Shakerism. Sources are sparse for the period of the early Shaker leaders, so much of what we know is based on later work like this. It may be that these later sources tell us more about the state of Shakerism in the 1820s than they do about the 1790s, the decade of Meacham's leadership.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 29 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "... Elder Joseph received the immediate revelation of God to gather the Church into gospel Order. He saw by Divine revelation that the time was fully come for the Church of Christ's Second appearing to be gathered in the order of his everlasting kingdom for the foundation of the second gospel temple to be laid. He also saw by the same revelation, the complete order of the Church of Christ, & received a divine commission to go forth & lay the foundation & to complete it in his day as far as he was able. His revelation was communicated to Believers; & all who were prepared, & could do it voluntarily, settled their affairs & disposed of their property as fast as was necessary & they were able, & began to gather first at New Lebanon; December 1787.
"Here began the gathering of the Church in gospel order; & the work & true order of the everlasting kingdom of Christ began to be made manifest; 'of the increase of which, to order & establish it, there shall be no end.' Henceforth Elder Joseph was called Father...

"... And here is the true means, & the true power & source by which the Church was begun, built & supported to this day, and by which it always must be enlarged & supported; for the true Church can never stand without the revelation of God, to lead, govern & protect. And this revelation must be received by faith in the hearts of souls, which causes them to dedicate themselves & all that they have, freewill offerings to God to build up & support the kingdom of Christ. This testimony Father Joseph received by revelation, and it was uniformerly his testimony." (29-30)
...
"At the gathering of the Church, the first thing found necessary for a permanent establishment in temporal things was to erect suitable buildings to accomodate the members. This was progressively effected by the zeal of all concerned, through the most extraordinary exertions, & many privations. The year in which the Church began to gather, there had been an extraordinary drought which cut the crops of grain very short.
And as the people were mostly poor, this greatly increased the difficulty of so many people gathering together, and also supporting workmen who were gathered from all parts. But the prospects of seeing the foundation of Zion, & the second temple laid, was so cheering to them, that nothing could damp their ardour or mitigate their zeal." (32)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: gathering; temple;

Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green

Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Albany, New York

Publisher: E. and E. Hosford

Date of Publication: 1810

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127

Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808. Youngs wrote the first edition, and Calvin Green worked to revise and expand the second edition.

Comment: This work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response to perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii). Shakers had resisted writing doctrinal or historical works until this time (with the exception of Meacham, Concise Statement . . . , 1790). This work ushered in a period of formalization of Shaker theology. This work was somewhat controversial. Shakers were located in two general regions, with centers in New York and Ohio-Kentucky. Youngs was part of the western group. The general leadership in New York assigned Green, part of the eastern group, to bring Youngs' work into conformity with their views on contested issues. It may be instructive to compare the two editions—the first edition is in the Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #16776.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 14 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The Church of the latter day was represented by the prophets, under the similitude of a kingdom, a city, particularly Jerusalem, Mount-Zion, the temple, and such like objects of visible glory; and the gathering and uniting of God's people into Church-order, is compared to the gathering of the Israelites, from the countries in which they were dispersed, and establishing them in the possession of their own land. . . ." (518)
"All these and such like promises, are expressly to the Church and people of God, in this latter day. If true believers are called A City, it is because they are joined and compacted together, by the spirit of union and order: if they are called Jerusalem, it is because the name is expressive of peace: if they are called Mount-Zion, which signifies high and clean, it is because they are raised above the low and base corruptions of human nature; and if they are called Trees of Righteousness, it is because they are fruitful in every good work. . . ." (523)

"And as the true and faithful are gathered unto Christ, in the covenant of righteousness and peace, by the testimony of unchangeable truth, which was designated by the voice of the arch-angel and the last trump of God; so, during the voice of this trumpet, and the gathering of the saints, the devil and satan is bound, that he cannot deceive the nations with any established system of false religion, as he has done under the reign of Antichrist. He can furnish nothing to imitate the truth, as a pretended revelation from God, sufficient to influence the nations, or unite them to one common head.

"But when the year of the redeemed is finished, and the elect, or those who believe and obey the truth, are gathered of all nations; then shall the wicked also be gathered, according to those figures and prophesies which respect their final doom: this however, is not the work of the present day." (527)

Length of Relevant Material: 6 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
intense historical and theological development in Shakerism. Sources are sparse for the period of the early Shaker leaders, so much of what we know is based on later work like this. It may be that these later sources tell us more about the state of Shakerism in the 1820s than they do about the 1790s, the decade of Meacham's leadership.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 29 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Mother Ann frequently prophesied of the gathering the Church in Gospel Order; but that it would not be her lot, nor that of any who came from England to gather the Church, but it would be the lot of Joseph Meacham. Elder Joseph had been a Believer a short time only, before he saw by revelation that he should be called yet to lead the people . . . (27)

". . . God gave an evident sign that he had raised up & annointed Elder Joseph to . . . lead and protect his people; for at the funeral though Elder Calvin Harlow, and Elder David Meacham who were thought by many co-equal with him, were present, & spoke in a great gift in testimony of the gospel, yet the anointing was evidently most manifest in Elder Joseph; for feeling the great opposition of the world, he was filled with the holy spirit, and shook greatly by the mighty power of God; and he declared that his testimony was the gospel of Christ that it was the work of God, and would stand, that i could not be overthrown by the wicked-that God would protect his people, and there would be a great increase. . . .

". . . [the Believers] clearly saw that the anointing of the Lord was upon him, for the lead of his people, & came forward & acknowledged him as their Elder, and that he was chosen of God as the first in the lead, & that they could not keep the way of God without him; and this was now seen & felt by the spontaneous union of Believers." (28-29)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: hell; basis of authority; atonement

Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.

Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts

Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921

Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences.

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The excerpt that follows is a portion of Ann Lee's telling of her initial call to the ministry, as related by the editors. Ann Lee's influence was based largely on charismatic leadership rather than a systematized body of theological thought. Her teachings and experiences remained integral to Shakerism after her death in part due to a rich oral tradition; this source is important partly because it represents an attempt to compile her teachings, revelations, and life's experiences.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman, Date: 21 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "I was, sometimes, under such sufferings and tribulation, that I could not rest in my bed anights; but had to get up and walk the floor. I feared to go to sleep, lest I should wake up and find myself in hell. When I felt my eyes closing with sleep, I used to pull them open with my fingers, and say within myself, I had better open my eyes here, than open them in hell.

"I labored to feel a sense of the sufferings and torments of hell, that I might keep my soul continually awake to God. I often figured to my mind the excessive and intolerable heat of a furnace, or hot oven, and thought within myself, that if I could not bear the heat of these, how could I bear the torments of hell."

"I felt such a sense of my sins, that I was willing to confess them before the whole world. I confessed my sins to my Elders, one by one, and repented of them in the same manner. When my Elders reproved me, I felt determined not to be reproved twice for one thing, but to labor to overcome the evil for myself.

"I had not been in the Church more than six months, before it was make known to me, by the revelation of God, that he would support me, through all my trials, and establish me an Elder in the Church. The man to whom I was married, was very kind, according to nature; He would have been willing to pass through a flaming fire for my sake, if I would but live in the flesh with him, which I refused to do." (44-45)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: hell; spirit world

Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.

Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses

Title of Article:
This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The various chapters in the second part of the book related reminiscences of those that knew Ann Lee. Lee was illiterate and left no writings, so these reminiscences are the core source of information of what she may have taught. Teachings of her close associates in the Shaker leadership, Elders William Lee and James Whittaker, are also included.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 23 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): [quoting Ann Lee] "'If you commit sin with beasts, you souls will be transformed into the shape of beasts in hell. I now see some in hell, whose souls are in the shape of dogs, horses and swine. They appear in the shape of such beasts as they committed sin with; and this is laid upon them as a punishment of that sin.'

"'Men and women, in this world, can please themselves, by gratifying their lusts; and if they do not overcome their passions by the gospel, they carry them into the world of spirits with them. Death does not destroy these passions, nor make them less powerful; but souls in hell feel their lustful passions rise a thousand fold stronger than in this world; and yet they can find no way to gratify them. Therefore, their lust is their torment; and it torments them in proportion to its rage.'

"'And more than this, thy have to feel the wrath of God against that filthy nature; and this is still a greater torment to them, than the torment of their lusts. The more people give way to the gratification of their lusts, in this world, the stronger their passions will grow, and the more their lusts will rise in hell; and their torments and plagues will rise in proportion; they will be bound and tortured in the same parts where they have taken their carnal pleasure.'

"I now see, in open vision, souls in hell, under torment for their sins, committed through lust, enough to take away your natural lives, if you could see them as I can. They are bound in the prisons of hell, and their torment appears like melted lead, poured through them in the same parts where they have taken their carnal pleasure.' (303-04)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages
Topics: judgment; spirit world; hell
Author: Valentine W. Rathbun
Title of Book: Some Brief Hints of a Religious Scheme, Taught a propagated by a Number of Europeans, living in a Place called Nisqueunia, in the State of New-York.
Title of Article:
Title of Publication:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1783
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Evans collection, #18145
Nature of Source: This 36 page pamphlet is an early attempt by a Shaker dissident to expose his former sect. It is valuable because of its early date, written seven years before the Shakers themselves gave any printed description of their theology.
Comment: Rathbun describes the communities of the Shakers, their doctrine, and errors. Also included is a "scriptural" refutation of Shaker beliefs, a personal testimonial of the author's experience with the sect, and a warning against coming under their influence.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 17 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "They proceed and say, the judgment is set, the books are opened, and the dead are now rising, and coming to judgment, and they are set to judge the world; Quoting I Cor. vi. chap. 2. verse. They tell the person, that the great tribunal is that church, and that the dead are coming before them every day, to be judged. They go on to say, all that have died in an imperfect state, have gone to hell, or to a prison state; and there to pay the debt to divine justice, by suffering; and that there are degrees of punishment, which they are to pass through; great sins, a great degree of hell; small sins, a small hell: And after passing through the several degrees of punishment, and paying the whole debt, out they come, and stand before us (say they) and are acquitted, and go home to heaven [scripture citations given].
"They comment on those texts thus: Did Christ go to hell? Yes. When? Why when he was crucified. What did he go there for? Why to preach to the spirits in prison. What did he preach to them? Why the gospel. Why did he preach the gospel to the old world, or to the dead? Why that they might be judged as unconverted sinners, but finally live, according to God, in the spirit, after they have paid the debt in suffering." (8-9)
Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.

Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, New York
Publisher: E. and E. Hosford
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127

Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808. Youngs wrote the first edition, and Calvin Green worked to revise and expand the second edition.

Comment: This work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response to perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii). Shakers had resisted writing doctrinal or historical works until this time (with the exception of Meacham, Concise Statement . . . , 1790). This work ushered in a period of formalization of Shaker theology. This work was somewhat controversial. Shakers were located in two general regions, with centers in New York and Ohio-Kentucky. Youngs was part of the western group. The general leadership in New York assigned Green, part of the eastern group, to bring Youngs' work into conformity with their views on contested issues. It may be instructive to compare the two editions-the first edition is in the Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #16776.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman     Date: 13 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The man Christ Jesus, through the medium of a woman, took upon him, not the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham, the nature of human depravity, with which he entered the world, and in all things was made like unto his brethren; yet he was, in every sense, taken out of, separated from, and placed above every correspondent attachment to all that was carnal in woman, which came by the fall.
"And by the energy of that eternal Word, which he received from his Father, he overcame the spirit and power of human depravity, and was sanctified and set apart in the work of redemption, as the first born in the new creation. And by that Word which liveth and abideth forever, he was constituted the second Adam, an high priest forever over the household of God, after the order of Melchisedec, without beginning of days, or end of life." (443)

Length of Relevant Material: 6 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: men become gods; resurrection

Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green
Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, New York
Publisher: E. and E. Hosford
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127
Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808. Youngs wrote the first edition, and Calvin Green worked to revise and expand the second edition.
Comment: This work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response to perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii). Shakers had resisted writing doctrinal or historical works until this time (with the exception of Meacham, Concise Statement . . . , 1790). This work ushered in a period of formalization of Shaker theology. This work was somewhat controversial. Shakers were located in two general regions, with centers in New York and Ohio-Kentucky. Youngs was part of the western group. The general leadership in New York assigned Green, part of the eastern group, to bring Youngs' work into conformity with their views on contested issues. It may be instructive to compare the two editions-the first edition is in the Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #16776.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 14 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "In direct opposition to the doctrine of Christ, it has been, and is yet maintained, that it is not the soul of man, but the natural body, which is the subject of the Resurrection:-That, 'the souls of believers are, at their deaths, made perfect in holiness, and do immediately pass into glory, and their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in their graves till the Resurrection.'
"The inventors of this groundless doctrine, ought to have known that the souls of true believers never do die; and therefore, their being made perfect in holiness, and passing into glory, is not to be dated at their death, nor is it at any time, immediately, but through the medium of the gospel, (by which they grow up, in all things, into Christ) that they are make perfect in holiness."
"Nor is it a dead corpse that is united to Christ, or to God, For God is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Besides, many of the dead bodies of believers were not suffered to be put into graves; and if they had been, the grave could never preserve a dead corpse from dissolving, and blending together with the common elements of the globe, being, in this respect, nothing superior to the bodies of other animals." (592)
Length of Relevant Material: 9 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: millennial conditions; only true church; dispensations; primitive church; apostasy; angels; tongues, healings
Author: Valentine W. Rathbun
Title of Book: Some Brief Hints of a Religious Scheme, Taught a propagated by a Number of Europeans, living in a Place called Nisqueunia, in the State of New-York.

Title of Article:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1783
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Evans collection, #18145
Nature of Source: This 36 page pamphlet is an early attempt by a Shaker dissident to expose his former sect. It is valuable because of its early date, written seven years before the Shakers themselves gave any printed description of their theology.
Comment: Rathbun describes the communities of the Shakers, their doctrine, and errors. Also included is a "scriptural" refutation of Shaker beliefs, a personal testimonial of the author's experience with the sect, and a warning against coming under their influence.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman    Date: 17 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "They introduce their doctrine with a multitude of good words; saying, we must hate sin, love God, take up our cross, &c. Then proceed to say in the first place, that there is a new dispensation taking place, in which the saints shall reign a thousand years with Christ, and that in that state the saints shall be perfect, and that they have entered into it, and that they are the only church in the world; telling the person or hearer, that they have all the apostolic gifts that were ever given . . . all the churches now in the world are antichrist, and false churches . . . and that there has not one gone to heaven for these twelve hundred years, no, not since the apostolic age.
"They tell [the potential convert] that they see angels, and converse with them, and hear them sing, and sing with them; and the spirits of just men made perfect, they also freely converse with. . . . Then tell him, they have got a mother . . . that when she speaks in unknown tongues, the living people cannot understand her; yet the dead understand her, for she talks to them.(6-8)
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: miracles to confirm revelation; tongues, healings; basis of authority
Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.
Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses
Title of Article:
This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The various chapters in the second part of the book related reminiscences of those that knew Ann Lee. Lee was illiterate and left no writings, so these reminiscences are the core source of information of what she may have taught and done. Teachings of her close associates in the Shaker leadership, Elders William Lee and James Whittaker, are also included.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 23 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Divine miracles have generally attended the ushering in of new and extraordinary dispensations of God to a dark and benighted world; because they carry to the minds of the lost children of men, the strongest evidence of the sacred messenger's divine authority. But when that divine authority is once established in the hearts of honest believers, a continuance of outward miracles, for that purpose, is no longer necessary."

"Many miraculous gifts, of various kinds, attended Mother's ministry; some of which have already been published in The Testimony of Christ's second appearing, and therefore need not be repeated here. . . ."

The editors then relate various healings, miracles, and other divine manifestations not previously published, for the "benefit of young Believers." (254-55)

Length of Relevant Material: 8 pages

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Mother in heaven; God
Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green
"It hath been observed, that the universal law of nature, established in the first creation of man, has established the order and relation for the increase of his posterity after the flesh, by a mutual correspondence between the two; in which it invariably descends from generation to generation, proceeding from the first Father and Mother, the joint parentage of all the human race. . . .

"The Father is first in the order of the new creation, and the Mother is the second, the glory, wisdom and perfection of the Father. And in and by the Son and Daughter, or Christ in his first and second appearing, the Father and Mother are both revealed and made known, through the mutual influence of the eternal Word proceeding from both; who are one in essence, nature and union, but two in their office and manner of operation." (541-42; see also 552-53)
I. THERE is but one person in the Godhead. The word Christ does not mean any divine person; nor any thing but the attributes of wisdom and power. And the word Jesus does not signify any thing human. He was a man, indeed, when he suffered, but not since.

II. The word Holy Ghost signifies no divine person; but only a power or influence on the ears of men, which makes them believers; and that comes only from the word of the mother.

III. The mother is the spouse spoken of in the canticles—the elect lady in St. John's epistle—and the woman clothed with the sun in the 11th of revelations.

"She is holy—omniscent—and every where present, as God himself is; and as much to be revered, believed, and obeyed, as he. She is the lamb's wife, and the mother of the church. No blessing ever came down from heaven—nor shall any man ever ascend to that blessed state and world—but through her. Hence,

IV. None ever went to heaven before the year of our Lord 1776. That year was the fulness of time, mentioned in the scripture: for then the old, literal dispensation of the gospel under Jesus, ceased, to make room for the new spiritual dispensation under the mother:-just as that of Moses withdrew when Jesus appeared.

V. The scriptures are true, and were given by divine inspiration; but they are all fulfilled already, except what is now completing in the Shakers.

VI. These are the only true church—these are the 144000 on Mount Zion with the lamb: in them Christ is come to the last judgment of the quick and the dead.
"VII. For carrying on this great work, God was pleased to transfer his power and all his gifts to the mother: and for the same purpose, she has commissioned seven fathers, who are perfect and holy as herself. By her concurrence with their labours, the number of the disciples already amounts to 14000: and this number will soon be enlarged so as to destroy all that will not receive their gospel, and then fill all the world.

"VIII. By this body, that gospel is to be preached to all the living and to all the dead; and whoever, of either class, believes, confesses, and forsakes all sin, shall certainly be saved- but all others eternally damned.

"IX. The gifts of tongues-of miracles-and of discerning of spirits, are now imparted, thro' the mother, to this church:-and the dead are daily coming before them to receive their final doom from their mouths.

"X. In order to salvation, it is necessary to confess all our sins to the mother, or her elders- utterly to renounce marriage and all use of it-and never commit any sin for the future; but yield up ourselves, and all that we have, to the disposal of the church, and be, in all things, obedient to its directions.

"XI. Upon this confession, these leaders take all the sins of the proselyte on themselves-and set the new convert free; and from that time, he has no need to pay any regard to sabbath, to baptism, to the supper, or to any external ordinance-all these being already fulfilled for him. It is, however, incumbent on him to labour himself up to the perfection of God." (149-50)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: one true church; women's role; basis of authority; Adam; Eve; dispensations; Second coming

Author: Benjamin West

Title of Book: Scriptural Cautions Against Embracing a Religious Scheme, Taught by a number of Europeans, who came from England to America, in the Year 1776, and stile themselves the CHURCH, &c. &c.

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Hartford, Connecticut

Publisher: Bavil Webster

Date of Publication: 1783

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Evans collection, #18310

Nature of Source: This early Shaker apostate tract is similar to ones written by Valentine Rathbun (An Account of . . . a New and Strange Religion, 1781) and Amos Taylor (Narrative of the . . . People Known by the Name of Shakers, 1782). These tracts are valuable due to the dearth of Shaker sources for the period. The early Shakers fiercely resisted publishing historical or doctrinal works of any kind until 1790, and the next followed in 1808. Though these apostates are not sympathetic to their former sect, their writings are the primary source information for the sect during the 1780s.
Comment: West undertakes to expose the errors of his former sect using scriptural proof texts to refute Shaker doctrines and practices.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 7 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "[the Shakers teach] therefore there is no way to escape hell, but to lay open all the secret sins of his past life to them for they say God cannot be found any where else but in that body they belong to . . ." (4)

"And Paul being inspired by the same spirit, faith, let the women learn in silence with all submission; but suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence, for Adam was first formed, then Eve. I. Tim. ii. 11, 12, 13. But in this new religion, the men hold themselves in intire subjection to the woman, and she has the rule over the men to that degree, that it appears to be the common opinion of her adherents and their foremost leaders, the oldest of which stands in more awe and fear of her than children do of their parents." (7)

"Furthermore, They urge that a new dispensation has taken place, and that Christ has come the second time, which they pretend to prove by counting the mistical numbers specified in the prophecies of Daniel, as well as by their sings and wonders." (8)

Length of Relevant Material: 15 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: only true church; second coming
Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.
Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts
Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.
Date of Publication: 1816
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921
Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.
Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The following is a rendering of Elder James Whittaker's pronouncement that Christ had come to the Believers, which he gave in a meeting some thirty years before the publication of the book. Whittaker would assume leadership of the sect after Ann Lee's death in the mid-1780s.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman           Date: 22 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The time is fully come, . . . according to ancient prophecy, for Christ to make his second appearance, for the redemption of lost man. This is the second appearance of Christ, and we are God's true witnesses, through whom Christ has manifested himself, in this day of his second appearing; and the only means of salvation that will ever be offered to a lost world is, to confess and forsake their sins, take up their cross and follow Christ in the regeneration.'

"He also spoke of the necessity of souls' believing in these messengers whom God had sent; and declared that the only way that they could find the will of God was, to find it in those messengers whom he had sent; that this was the way, according to the scriptures, that God manifested himself to the ancients, and that it was as much so now, as in ancient days." (174)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: order; bishops; one true church; primitive church; Old Testament as context for doctrine

Author: Calvin Green (Theodore E. Johnson, ed.)

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Biographical Account of the Life, Character, & Ministry of Father Joseph Meacham, the Primary Leader in Establishing the United Order of the Millennial Church"

Title of Periodical: The Shaker Quarterly

Place of Publication: Poland Spring, Maine

Publisher: United Society

Date of Publication: 1970

Library Location: Not at BYU

Nature of Source: Calvin Green, a prominent Shaker historian/theologian of the early nineteenth century, compiled this account. The title page lists 1827, yet the manuscript is dated 1859. It remained in manuscript form until 1970 when it was edited and introduced by Theodore Johnson, the general editor of the Shaker Quarterly. The entire account stretches over numbers 1-3 of volume 10, and is found on pages 20-32, 51-68, 92-102.

Comment: Joseph Meacham is a prominent figure in early American Shakerism. He was the first American convert of Ann Lee, the sect's charismatic early leader. After Lee's death, her close English associate, James Whittaker, took over leadership of the group. He was followed by Meacham. Meacham is credited with publishing the sect's first theological tract, and was instrumental in "gathering" the Shakers into communities across New England and New York. Green compiled this account during a period of intense historical and theological development in Shakerism. Sources are sparse for the period of the early Shaker leaders, so much of what we know is based on later work like this. It may be that these later sources tell us more about the state of Shakerism in the 1820s than they do about the 1790s, the decade of Meacham's leadership.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 30 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "For some time after the gathering of the church, the direction of all things, both spiritual & temporal, was necessarily vested in Father Joseph & the rest of the Ministry, like as it was in the primitive church; for the members of the church had not yet traveled to see the temporal order in distinction from the spiritual; but as soon as the time had come, & the church was prepared, the order of Deacons was brot forward & established by Father Joseph, to take the charge of the temporal economy of the Church of Christ. But the order of spiritual & temporal things, is like soul & body, and as the soul ought to be in the first lead, & direct the body, so the spiritual must lead and protect the temporal.

"After this was established, different orders and divisions were also established in the Church; the church was divided into first, second & third orders or divisions, prefigured by the first, second & third courts in the Jewish Temple, subdivided into departments & lots for the time being according to the present gift of God. In the first order or division was to be the most spiritual degree, & attend less to temporal care; work more indoors more like the inner courts of the temple.

"The second division was to attend more to outward labors; have the charge of farming &c. The third division was to contain the office for all business of a temporal nature between the church and the world, answerable to the outer court of the temple: of course all buying and selling was to be excluded from the first and second courts. These things were given by revelation of God through Father Joseph, & laid the foundation by the true order of the true Church of Christ, & serve as a pattern for all other buildings in gospel order, although there must & will be a great increase, & many changes for the time being, according to time, place & circumstances.

"The Church at New Lebanon he established as the center of union for all others.

"Thro the ministration of Father Joseph, Bishops were sent fourth & established in different settlements where Believers were. These were appointed as Fathers & Mothers, and the same order, as far as convenient, was established in every society. Thus was the Church established as Mount Zion, & the believers were like the tribes of Israel round about, having received the Law from Zion, & the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Father Joseph having been the first instrument to establish this order, he continued for several years, by a powerful & wise administration, to strengthen & invigorate it, to teach, council and instruct far & near, though his ministration to believers, except at New Lebanon & Watervliet, was chiefly done thro their parents, or respective ministers." (52-53)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Joseph Meacham is a prominent figure in early American Shakerism. He was the first American convert of Ann Lee, the sect's charismatic early leader. After Lee's death, her close English associate, James Whittaker, took over leadership of the group. He was followed by Meacham. Meacham is credited with publishing the sect's first theological tract, and was instrumental in "gathering" the Shakers into communities across New England and New York. Green compiled this account during a period of intense historical and theological development in Shakerism. Sources are sparse for the period of the early Shaker leaders, so much of what we know is based on later work like this. It may be that these later sources tell us more about the state of Shakerism in the 1820s than they do about the 1790s, the decade of Meacham's leadership.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman  Date: 30 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "[Joseph Meacham] also had great sight of the providential work of God in the world; he said that George Washington was as really raised up by the hand of God in the order of providence to establish liberty of conscience, to open the way for the kingdom of Christ to arise as much as he, (Father Joseph) was raised up in the spiritual order to establish the foundation of the church, which was the commencement of the kingdom of the Saints. He said further that those who had a prophetic sight of the work that would be effected in the great day of God so much looked for in the world, greatly erred in setting the time so soon for it to be accomplished, they mistook the beginning for the end when all wars would cease, all tyranny would be overthrown, & mankind enjoy just & equal rights; but that work of which they had an imperfect sight, would not be accomplished for several hundred year." (60)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 page

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Title of Book: "Some account of the tenets and practice of the religious society called Shakers"
Title of Article: "Some account of the tenets and practice of the religious society called Shakers"
Title of Periodical: American Museum, or Repository
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, Pennsylvania
Publisher: Matthew Carey, editor and printer
Date of Publication: February 1787
Library Location: BYU microfilm, American Periodicals Series I (051), reel #4.
Nature of Source: This periodical started in January 1787 and ran through December 1792. Midway through its run, its name was changed to The American Museum, or Universal Magazine. Its first issues featured reprints of Revolutionary pamphlets; later, original fiction and poetry replaced the political tracts, though a range of material was included throughout the period of its publication. It was one of America's first successful magazines.
Comment: This early review of Shaker belief is significant because it points to a formative period of Shaker theology. Shakers had fiercely resisted systematized doctrinal statements prior to this period. Their first such attempt appeared in 1790, so this document is perhaps early evidence of early efforts to work out a more regularized theology. The writer claimed to have witnessed "a conference publicly held" where these principles were agreed upon (149).
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 7 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "XIII. The church is now in the state of the resurrection, and equal to the angels; serving GOD perfectly every moment, and never committing any sin.
"XIV. But, if they should cease to labour, and be seduced by the devil to intermit the dance, they may fall away and die; and, in case they should, they shall never have their bodies raised again: there being no resurrection but that in which they now stand.
"XV. To prevent this fall, they are ever fighting against devils, and expelling them from themselves and others; but all this combat is maintained in a bodily manner, the devils being visible to their bodily eyes; as the good angels also are.
"XVI. They carry on very frequent dialogues with both angels, devils and departed souls-a party of them being employed now in preaching to the Indians and negroes who have died since the beginning of time, in the respective language of those nations; others are engaged in like benevolent employ with the dead of other nations; and among other instances of their success, several divines of eminence, in those days, have lately returned-confessed their sins-received their gospel-joined their head-and entered into their redemption, among whom are the rev. doctors Whitefield and Watts.
"XVII. The devils which will not depart from the possessed, when commanded, (especially in the case of infants), are to be expelled by whipping, or even by biting the unhappy subjects.
"XVIII. All touching, or shaking of hands, between the different sexes, is lustful, and an abomination: but they are allowed to blow the mother's love into each other, by breathing in their faces, which always fills them with transports of joy.
"XIX. It is not lawful to make war in any case." (150)
Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
"The Lord's supper was a sign of that substance which the Apostles received at the day of Pentecost.

"Their using it afterwards was only to shew to others by an outward sign what had been shewed to them before they had receiv'd the thing signified.

"They did not eat the broken bread & drink the wine poured out as a commemoration of the sufferings & dying love of the Savior-for they commemorated every moment by feeling it in their breasts and living in it.-Neither did they do it in commemoration of his body which was broken on ye cross, for that body was never broken, not a bone of it-the church has been under an entire mistake in commemorating the breaking of that body, & the many tears that have been shed about it have been all lost-the body which the Apostles represented by the bread was a body which they themselves composed-many members united to one head & all acting with one design in perfect concert-1 Cor 10. The cup of blessings which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of xt.-the bread which we break is it not the communion of the body of xt., for we being many are one bread, & one body.-The blood is the life & they all pertook of his life, & it was that which constituted them one.
"Their breaking the bread was a figure of the falling away which they saw would take place in which the beast would make war with ye saints overcome them, & scatter the power of the holy people, & devour them and break them in pieces, & stamp the residue with his feet.

"The breaking of bread was no longer a sign when the body of true saints were broken & scattered, so that the ch was no longer composed of such as were truly united to xt. as their head. Then the signification was completely altered & has been altering ever since, just in proportion as people have lost from God & sunk in superstion and error. "All who have used this figure in the reign of Antixt. have mistaken its design, & have not been able to discern the Lords body-& have more or less felt that spirit which broke & destroyd his body."

(519)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 page
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: second coming, women's role; seeing God; basis of authority; prophets
Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.
Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts
Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.
Date of Publication: 1816
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921
Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.
Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The editors here relate Ann Lee's teaching about Christ's appearance, her relationship with Christ, and various other teachings, given in varied settings.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman         Date: 22 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "She spake of the unbelieving of the Jews, in his first appearance. 'Even his own disciples, (added she,) after he arose from the dead, though he had often told them that he should rise the third day, believed not. They would not believe that he had risen, because he appeared first to a woman! So great was their unbelief, that the words of Mary seemed to them like idle tales! His appearing first to a woman, showed that his second appearing would be in a woman!"
"So great was the manifestation of the power of God, in Mother, at that time, that many were unable to abide in her presence. Her words were like flames of fire, and her voice like peals of thunder. Well said the prophet, Who shall abide the day of his coming? For he is like refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap..." (205)
"The first time Rhoda Hammond visited the Church, she had considerable conversation with Mother, in private. Mother informed her of wonderful manifestations of God to her; and said she spoke with God, face to face, as Moses did, and saw the glory of God, and had seen wonderful visions..."
"When Mother was at Benjamin Osborn's, in Mount-Washington, in conversation with Elizabeth Hill, she said, 'I am the first Elder in the Church-I have seen God, and spoke with him, face to face, as we speak one to another.'
"Again, at the same place, Mother was under great sufferings and travail of soul. After which she spoke and said, 'The Lord, who brought me over the great waters, has redeemed my soul. I hear the angels sing!-I see the glory of God, as bright as the sun!-I see multitudes of the dead, that were slain in battle, arise and come into the first resurrection!-I see Christ put crowns on their heads, of bright, glorious, and changeable colours!—I converse with Christ!-I feel him present with me, as sensibly as I feel my hands together!-My soul is married to him!-He is my Husband!-It is not I that speak; it is Christ who dwells in me!'" (206-07)
Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: second coming; apostasy; Millennial conditions; prophets; one true church; dispensations
Author: Calvin Green (Theodore E. Johnson, ed.)
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Biographical Account of the Life, Character, & Ministry of Father Joseph Meacham, the Primary Leader in Establishing the United Order of the Millennial Church"
Title of Periodical: The Shaker Quarterly
Place of Publication: Poland Spring, Maine
Publisher: United Society
Date of Publication: 1970
Library Location: Not at BYU
Nature of Source: Calvin Green, a prominent Shaker historian/theologian of the early nineteenth century, compiled this account. The title page lists 1827, yet the manuscript is dated 1859. It remained in manuscript form until 1970 when it was edited and introduced by Theodore Johnson, the general editor of the Shaker Quarterly. The entire account stretches over numbers 1-3 of volume 10, and is found on pages 20-32, 51-68, 92-102.

Comment: Joseph Meacham is a prominent figure in early American Shakerism. He was the first American convert of Ann Lee, the sect's charismatic early leader. After Lee's death, her close English associate, James Whittaker, took over leadership of the group. He was followed by Meacham. Meacham is credited with publishing the sect's first theological tract, and was instrumental in "gathering" the Shakers into communities across New England and New York. Green compiled this account during a period of intense historical and theological development in Shakerism. Sources are sparse for the period of the early Shaker leaders, so much of what we know is based on later work like this. It may be that these later sources tell us more about the state of Shakerism in the 1820s than they do about the 1790s, the decade of Meacham's leadership. The excerpt that follows is a portion of the 5-page section recorded under the title "FATHER'S WORD RESPECTING THE MILLENNIUM OR WORK OF CHRIST'S SECOND APPEARING" (96-101).

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman

Date: 1 July 1999

Excerpt (pages):

"Many in this day are looking for the commencement of the Millennium or latter day of glory, when the kingdom of Christ will be set up & established on earth; both in things spiritual & temporal: and all antichristian establishments in religious matters, & oppressive governments in things temporal or civil, will be overthrown, and destroyed, & man shall enjoy just & equal rights, both in religious & civil matter; & that all war will cease, & have an end, & universal peace be enjoyed by the kingdoms or nations of men in this world.

"It is true, according to the scriptures, that the kingdom & the dominion, & the greatness of kingdom under the whole heaven, will be given to the Saints of the Most High, & that all dominions are to serve & obey him in the latter day. But the order & manner of the commencement & establishment of the kingdom of Christ on earth, is not, neither can it be, understood by any, but by the revelation of Christ, either immediate in their own souls, or by those who have it.

"Many may have light, so as to understand nearly the time, according to the scriptures when the kingdom of Christ in the latter day is to begin, but the manner may be as contrary to their ideas or expectations as the manner of Christ's first appearing was to the Jews: and therefore they may be left to oppose that which they have been desiring & looking for.

"It would therefore be wisdom for all who have not received a knowledge of the present work of God in his grace to consider the following matter. 1st That according to the scriptures, the second appearing of Christ, & establishment of his kingdom, & and government on earth, is a new & further dispensation of God to his people. 2nd That every dispensation of the grace of God to his people, was & is revealed to & by one to others. 3rd That, altho it hath pleased God to reveal his purposes relating to his people, to his servants, the prophets, & they have foretold the greatest and principal events & changes of times relating to the church, & to the powers of this world, even from early days to the end, & accomplishment of all things, yet creatures cannot understand the manner of the work of God in his grace, but by receiving it in the day in which it is wrought. Man by the spirit of prophecy may foretell things which he does not understand, neither the matter nor the manner, or he may understand the matter & substance of many things to come, but the real manner of things that are to come, that are greater than they are in themselves, he cannot understand but by faith. Creatures must be in the very work, to understand the true meaning of the work of God in their day, that is, the day in which it is wrought.
"4th It is clear by the scriptures, that the beginning of every dispensation of God to his people, was in, & by a single person; & that others received it in, & by their relation.
Almost every great reformation from apostacy, hath also been wrought in the beginning of it by one person: it is also clear that the second appearing or work of Christ in the latter day, is not to build up any one profession or religious establishment that will be found on earth when he appeareth, or to restore the Church to the order & glory of the first temple or gospel Church; but to a new & further dispensation in things spiritual and temporal, as thereby given & established, which is called the second house or temple, which will exceed the first in glory as it relates to order unity & peace." (96-98)

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: second coming; Godhead; women's role; angels; spirit world; judgment;
gathering
Author: Reuben Rathbone (Rathbun)
Title of Book: Reasons Offered For Leaving the Shakers
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Pittsfield, Massachusetts
Publisher: Chester Smith
Date of Publication: 1800
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Evans collection, #38359
Nature of Source: Rathbone's expose follows others Shaker apostate narratives, beginning with his own father's, Valentine Rathbun, written in 1781. These "outsider" sources are valuable in that the Shakers themselves did not attempt to publish their own theology until 1808 (though a brief early tract appeared in 1790), nor their own history until 1816. Rathbone's account is autobiographical in tone.
Comment: Other apostate sources in this genre are Valentine's, An Account . . . of a New and Strange Religion (1781); Amos Brown, Narrative of the . . . People Known by the Name of Shakers (1782); and Benjamin West, Scriptural Cautions Against Embracing a Religious Scheme (1783). Later exposes utilized Rathbone's account. See Thomas Brown, An Account of the People Called Shakers, 1812; Mary Dyer, A Portraiture of Shakerism, 1822.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 7 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): ". . . I went with a number of others to see them, at Niskauna, to hear and see for myself, and having an opportunity then, and from time to time ; after I received the following principles of faith: viz. But first, I desire to be understood, what I am going to relate as the principles of my faith, is not what I suggested in myself, but what I really heard preached, either from the first ministers, or from others that were authorized by them to preach: that is, That the great and last day had begun—that the Lord Jesus Christ had made his second appearance in that person which was called the mother—[t]hat she was redeemed from all sin, and stood without fault before the throne of God—that the fulness of the Godhead dwelt in her bodily, as really as it did in the Lord Jesus Christ in his first appearance, and as much greater as his second appearance was to be greater than the first. . . .

". . . I believed that the mother with some others which were with her, stood completely in the resurrection, and were equal unto the angels, and were conversant and familiar with invisible beings in a spiritual world, and that they were not subject to any natural disorders or infirmities which were incident to the rest of mankind—I believed that God had given them the spirit and power of judgment, to judge the world both quick and dead, and that their power and testimony would increase till it should gather all Nations . . . (2-3)

"It was signified that the believers as a body were all in fleshly relation, and that the time had come for a number to be gathered out of that relation into church relation, to be purged and purified from the flesh, and be prepared to minister the gospel to others. (7)

Length of Relevant Material: 26 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: second coming; Jesus Christ;
Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.
Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing; Collected From Living Witnesses
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts
Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.
Date of Publication: 1816
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921
Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.
This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The passages below illustrate some of the ambiguities in the Shaker conceptualization of Christ's coming, whether he came in the form of Lee, that his spirit returned-manifested in Lee, or that his spirit returned-manifested in Lee and the Believers generally.

Excerpt (pages): "... he ascended to his Father, that they way might be prepared for his second coming, in the female part of his manhood, for the travel of souls in the regeneration. And when the time was fully come, according to the appointment of God, Christ was again revealed, not in Judea, to the Jews, nor in the person of a male; but in England, to a gentile nation, and in the person of a female" (1-2). Pages 21-22 relate Lee's justification of her authority in light of Paul's injunction that women refrain from speaking in the church. She bases her authority on Christ's absence from the earth, implying a separation of some kind between her and him. The following is typical of language in other Shaker documents. Describing the conversion of one of Lee's followers, the editors related that he "was fully convinced that Christ had made his second appearance in these people" (23).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: spirit, soul, and body; devil; angels; spirit world

Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.

Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses

Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts

Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921

Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp.

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The various chapters in the second part of the book related reminiscences of those that knew Ann Lee. Lee was illiterate and left no writings, so these reminiscences are the core source of information of what she may have taught. Teachings of her close associates in the Shaker leadership, Elders William Lee and James Whittaker, are also included.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 23 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Sometime in November 1783, Jabez and Phebe Spencer, their daughter Mary, and a number of others were on a visit at Watervliet; and just before they came away, they went into Mother's room, to take their leave of her. She sat up in her bed, under great sufferings, and addressed them as follows:

'Be faithful to keep the way of God; if you do, you will be guarded by good angels, as really as the wicked are by evil spirits. Every soul is accompanied by good or evil spirits; and the good or evil spirits, gather mostly, to that part of the body which contains the most sensations and faculties. The head is the ruling and governing part of the whole body; therefore it will contain the most good or evil of any part of the body; and as the whole body is governed thereby; so the good or evil spirits gather there, and rule the whole body.'

'The head of a wicked man will suck in evil spirits until it is full of them, like a spunge filled with water; so likewise the faithful, who are laboring to resist every evil temptation, and crying to God for protection, will be filled with good spirits, and will be guarded by the angels of God, who will protect them, day by day.'

"After Mother had ended her discourse, Phebe went to her bed-side, and expressed her thankfulness for the privilege that she and her family had had with her. Mother made no immediate reply; but soon after spoke and said, 'When you was speaking, I saw two souls standing by you, one at your right hand, and the other at your left. The one that stood at your right hand, was a bright, active, glorious soul; but the one on your left was a black, dark, dismal soul; and he laid his head on your left shoulder.'" (300-01)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: spirit, soul and body; Adam; Eve; spirit child of God;
Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green (David Darrow and John Meacham are listed with Youngs at the end of the preface as authors of the preface?)

Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, New York
Publisher: E. and E. Hosford
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127
Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808(?).
Comment: The work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response to perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii).
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 16 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "And although man was formed of the ground, yet, as he was made the most noble part of the creation, distinct from his living soul, he could not be deficient of such animal sensations as pertained to any of the inferior part of the creation. . . .
"Again, the living soul of man, being superior to his animal body, could not therefore be deficient in any one part or sensation which pertained to the body; consequently, in the union of soul and body, every part or sensation of the body must be occupied by a corresponding part, or sensation, of the soul."
"And hence, there was also a spiritual hearing, seeing, feeling, and so on, which being superior to all those natural sensations, were capable of dictating and ordering every faculty and sensation of his natural body aright. . . .
". . . And because God breathed into him the breath of life, and man became a living soul; therefore his living soul was the immediate offspring of Him who is eternal, and was created for eternity."
"And out of man, the Lord God made him an helper, who was called woman, because she was taken out of man. Thus man was formed of two parts, male and female. The two, as to their local situation were different; but in point of nature and union, they were one, and formed but the one entire man, complete in his manhood." (6-7)
Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: spirit of Christ, light of Christ; church discipline; atonement; endless punishment; second coming; spirit world; only true church
Author: Amos Taylor
Title of Book: A Narrative of the Strange Principles, Conduct and Character Of the People known by the Name of Shakers: Whose Errors have spread in several Parts of North-America, but are beginning to diminish, and ought to be guarded against.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
The excerpt that follows is a portion of the list of the major doctrines of Shakerism, according to Taylor.

Excerpt (pages): "The doctrines which are more clearly come to light since the first rise of their religion, are as follows, viz."

"First. That God, through Jesus Christ in the Church, is reconciled with man.
"Second. That sins confessed to God's witnesses are forgiven in the Church as soon as forsaken.
"Third. That Christ is come a light into human nature, to enlighten every man that cometh into the world without distinction.
"Fourth. That no man is born of God until by faith he is assimilated into the character of Jesus Christ in his Church.
"Fifth. That in obedience to that Church a man's faith will increase until he comes to be one with Christ in the millenium Church state.
"Sixth. That every man is a free agent to walk in the true light, and so to choose or reject the truth of God within him. . . .
"Eleventh. They hold that the word everlasting when applied to the punishment of the wicked, refers only to a limited space of time, excepting in the case of those who fall from their Church. . . .
"Fourteenth. They believe Christ will never make any publick appearance as a single person, but only in his saints: That the judgment day is now begun in that Church.
"Fifteenth. They believe no salvation out of obedience to the sovereignty of their dominion: That all sin which is committed against God, is done against them, and must be pardoned for Christ's sake through them, for which confession must be made to them. . . .
"Seventeenth. They hold to a travel and labour for the redemption of departed spirits."

(7-9)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Topics: spirit of Christ, light of Christ; church discipline; atonement; endless punishment; second coming; spirit world; only true church; baptism for the dead
Author: Amos Taylor
Title of Book: A Narrative of the Strange Principles, Conduct and Character Of the People known by the Name of Shakers: Whose Errors have spread in several Parts of North-America, but are beginning to diminish, and ought to be guarded against.

Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Worcester, Massachusetts
Publisher: Isaiah Thomas
Date of Publication: 1782
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Evans collection, #17735
Nature of Source: This 23 page pamphlet is an early attempt by a Shaker dissident to expose his former sect. It is valuable because of its early date, written eight years before the Shakers themselves gave any printed description of their theology.

Comment: Taylor's expose' is in the same vein as Valentine Rathbun's, written of the Shakers at the same period (Some Brief Hints of a Religious Scheme, Hartford, Conn.: 1783). He provides a vivid description of the beliefs and practices of the Shakers, though not then sympathetic to their movement.

The excerpt that follows is a portion of the list of the major doctrines of Shakerism, according to Taylor.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 17 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The doctrines which are more clearly come to light since the first rise of their religion, are as follows, viz.
"First. That God, through Jesus Christ in the Church, is reconciled with man.
"Second. That sins confessed to God's witnesses are forgiven in the Church as soon as forsaken.
"Third. That Christ is come a light into human nature, to enlighten every man that cometh into the world without distinction.
"Fourth. That no man is born of God until by faith he is assimilated into the character of Jesus Christ in his Church.
"Fifth. That in obedience to that Church a man's faith will increase until he comes to be one with Christ in the millenium Church state.
"Sixth. That every man is a free agent to walk in the true light, and so to choose or reject the truth of God within him. . .
"Eleventh. They hold that the word everlasting when applied to the punishment of the wicked, refers only to a limited space of time, excepting in the case of those who fall from their Church. . .
"Fourteenth. They believe Christ will never make any publick appearance as a single person, but only in his saints: That the judgment day is now begun in that Church.
"Fifteenth. They believe no salvation out of obedience to the sovereignty of their dominion: That all sin which is committed against God, is done against them, and must be pardoned for Christ's sake through them, for which confession must be made to them. . .

"Seventeenth. They hold to a travel and labour for the redemption of departed spirits."

(7-9)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: spirit world
Author: Calvin Green (Theodore E. Johnson, ed.)
Title of Book: "Biographical Account of the Life, Character, & Ministry of Father Joseph Meacham, the Primary Leader in Establishing the United Order of the Millennial Church"
Title of Periodical: The Shaker Quarterly
Place of Publication: Poland Spring, Maine
Publisher: United Society
Date of Publication: 1970
Library Location: Not at BYU
Nature of Source: Calvin Green, a prominent Shaker historian/theologian of the early nineteenth century, compiled this account. The title page lists 1827, yet the manuscript is dated 1859. It remained in manuscript form until 1970 when it was edited and introduced by Theodore Johnson, the general editor of the Shaker Quarterly. The entire account stretches over numbers 1-3 of volume 10, and is found on pages 20-32, 51-68, 92-102.
Comment: Joseph Meacham is a prominent figure in early American Shakerism. He was the first American convert of Ann Lee, the sect's charismatic early leader. After Lee's death, her close English associate, James Whittaker, took over leadership of the group. He was followed by Meacham. Meacham is credited with publishing the sect's first theological tract, and was instrumental in "gathering" the Shakers into communities across New England and New York. Green compiled this account during a period of intense historical and theological development in Shakerism. Sources are sparse for the period of the early Shaker leaders, so much of what we know is based on later work like this. It may be that these later sources tell us more about the state of Shakerism in the 1820s than they do about the 1790s, the decade of Meacham's leadership.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman Date: 30 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "There are at present many & various ideas, concerning the reality, substance & appearance of the spirit world, but the following are Father Joseph's views on the subject. "The natural or visible world, in all its elements, is a resemblance of the spiritual world, tho all there is spiritual substance, yet, to spirits, they have real & substantial earth & water, & air, trees of the field, & grass of the meadows, & flowers of the garden, & fruits of the orchard, that they planted & sowed & reap'd & lived upon the fruits of their labors as really as we do on earth, that their food was as real & substantial to them as our food is to us." (66)
Length of Relevant Material: 1 page
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
The law and government which Christ established in his first appearing did not so immediately and extensively respect this present world, as it did the world of spirits. Yet, before he could extend his power and authority to the spiritual world, it was necessary that he should first pass through the present, and experience a feeling of all the trials that ever had been experienced by those over whom he was appointed ruler: hence he said to his disciples, I go to prepare a place for you: which implied that his law, and the order of his government, were not yet established in the world of spirits . . .

"During the time of this preparatory work of Christ, in establishing his law and order in the spiritual world, this earth was a seat of the most perfect confusion, injustice, deception and cruelty; which was properly the period of Antichrist's reign and dominion. Hence that corrupt hierarchy, called the Church, which pretended to have the power of salvation, and assumed all the authority of Christ on earth, was, in reality, the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird . . .

"And as Christ did actually go to prepare a place, and to receive a kingdom, and promised to return, and establish his law of righteousness and order on this earth; so his promise is actually fulfilled; and the most striking evidence in this latter day, that he has gained the kingdom, and begun to set it up on earth, is the manifest change in civil government, and that spirit of toleration and liberty in matters of religion, which began to take place, about the close of the seventeenth century" (xxii-xxiii)
Topics: spirit world; baptism for the dead; plural worlds
Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green
Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, New York
Publisher: E. and E. Hosford
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127
Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808. Youngs wrote the first edition, and Calvin Green worked to revise and expand the second edition.
Comment: This work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response to perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii). Shakers had resisted writing doctrinal or historical works until this time (with the exception of Meacham, Concise Statement . . ., 1790). This work ushered in a period of formalization of Shaker theology. This work was somewhat controversial. Shakers were located in two general regions, with centers in New York and Ohio-Kentucky. Youngs was part of the western group. The general leadership in New York assigned Green, part of the eastern group, to bring Youngs' work into conformity with their views on contested issues. It may be instructive to compare the two editions—the first edition is in the Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #16776.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman        Date: 16 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Nor was the voice of the Son of God confined to the saints alone, whether in this world, or in a world of Spirits, but was impartially extended to all; and not overlooking those who through disobedience had forfeited the blessings of former dispensations, he went and preached to the Spirits in prison, which were disobedient in the days of Noah, while the ark was preparing.
"It is inconsistent with a God of infinite justice and goodness, that his work should be confined to the contracted limits of this inferior globe, while worlds of worlds lie naked and open to his view; or that the millions who have departed into a world of spirits, without the knowledge of his will, should be bound in chains of eternal darkness, without ever hearing the gospel, in which only is true happiness and eternal life. For this cause was the gospel preached also to them that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, but live according to God in the Spirit." (611)
Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages
Topics: sprit world; baptism for the dead; fate of those without gospel
Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.
Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The various chapters in the second part of the book related reminiscences of those that knew Ann Lee. Lee was illiterate and left no writings, so these reminiscences are the core source of information of what she may have taught and done. Teachings of her close associates in the Shaker leadership, Elders William Lee and James Whittaker, are also included.

Excerpt (pages): "Mother and the Elders uniformly taught the doctrine of a free offer of the gospel to all souls, whether in this world or in the world of spirits: That none could be deprived of the offer of salvation because they had unfortunately left the world before Christ made his appearance; or because they had lived in some remote part of the earth where the sound of the gospel had never reached their ears. Their labors in the work of regeneration were not confined to this world; but extended to the world of spirits; and their travail and sufferings, for the salvation of departed souls, were often distressing beyond description. . . .

"Mother spoke, oftentimes, when under great sufferings, of seeing the spirits in prison; and often spoke to them. Sometimes she used to speak to them in a very powerful manner, and sharply reprove them, and bid them shake off their bands. At other times, she would tell of seeing unbodied souls, laboring for the power of God, and say that such were in a travel-Then she would smile, and speak to them; but often spoke in an unknown tongue." [the remainder of the chapter relates experiences where Lee described departed souls to Believers] (236-37)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: the poor; gathering; city of Zion

Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.

Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts

Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921

Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The various chapters in the second part of the book related reminiscences of those that knew Ann Lee. Lee was illiterate and left no writings, so these reminiscences are the core source of information of what she may have taught and done. Teachings of her close associates in the Shaker leadership, Elders William Lee and James Whittaker, are also included.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 23 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Addressing Phebe and a number of others, Mother said, 'You must remember the poor and needy, the widow and the fatherless; and deal out your bread to the hungry and your clothes to the naked. Your natures will say, They may work, and get these things for themselves. But Christ said, Give to him that asketh. If I had but two mouthfuls of bread, I would give to him that needed; and if I had but two coats, I would impart to him that had none. You must put away your covetousness, your lust, and your filth, and be prepared for the increase of the gospel: for the time will come when this gospel will be preached to all nations, and many will flock to Zion to hear the word of the Lord." (265-66)

Topics: the poor; order

Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green (David Darrow and John Meacham are listed with Youngs at the end of the preface as authors of the preface?)

Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing: Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Albany, New York

Publisher: E. and E. Hosford

Date of Publication: 1810

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127

Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The fist edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808(?).

Comment: The work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii).

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 17 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The concern and regulation of the temporal matters of the Church, is intrusted to the Deacons, appointed to that office by the joint union of the body. To them, their assigns and successors in the gospel, appointed to the like office, is intrusted the whole of the joint interest of the Church, to support and maintain the same in behalf of the Church, and their heirs in the gospel forever.

"And their office and care it is, to have the principal concern in dealing with those who are without; and to provide all things necessary for the comfortable support of the Church, jointly and equally, according to the number and need of each family in the Church.

"Besides the first order of Deacons, there are also Deacons in each family, whose care is to see that every member in the family, from the eldest to the youngest, enjoy their just and equal rights, according to their several needs. Of all temporal things possessed in the family." (512)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 page

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: tree of life

Author: Benjamin Seth Youngs and Calvin Green (David Darrow and John Meacham are listed with Youngs at the end of the preface as authors of the preface?)

Title of Book: The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing; Containing a General Statement of All Things Pertaining to the Faith and Practice of the Church of God in This Latter-Day, 2nd ed.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Albany, New York

Publisher: E. and E. Hosford

Date of Publication: 1810

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #22127

Nature of Source: This prodigious Shaker treatise was "published by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It comprises over 600 pages and is divided into 8 parts, each part having several chapters. The first edition of the work was printed at Lebanon, Ohio, in 1808(?).

Comment: The work is an excellent source for principles and practices of the Shakers. Written in response perceived misrepresentations, the book was intended to provide an exhaustive source of "true information" about the sect. Indeed, the authors are careful to note that the text is not meant as a creed or institutional handbook, but as "the first public testimony in writing" (xiii).

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman

Date: 16 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Thus man by his disobedience, was wholly excluded and shut out from the way of the tree of life, and ingrafted into an evil tree; and all the fruit it could produce must be like itself, the fruits of a fleshly, earthly, sensual, cruel and corrupt nature . . .

"But if the tree of life, and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, here spoken of, are to be understood in a literal sense, as natural trees, then where are those trees at this time?

"It is evident from the scriptures of truth, that the tree of life was not destroyed, but still remains. As it is written, Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life. The tree of life is the way of life." (15, 46-47)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topcis: visions, dreams, revelations; angels; tongues, healings

Author: Rufus Bishop and Seth Y. Wells, editors.

Title of Book: Testimonies of the Life, Character, Revelations and Doctrines of our Ever Blessed Mother Ann Lee, and the Elders with Her; Through Whom the Word of Eternal Life was Opened in This Day of Christ's Second Appearing: Collected From Living Witnesses

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Hancock, Massachusetts

Publisher: J. Tallcott and J. Deming, Jr.

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: BYU microfiche, Shaw and Shoemaker collection, #38921

Nature of Source: This rather large work, 405 pages, is an official publication of the Shakers, done "by order of the ministry, in union with the church" (title page). It was compiled from "living witnesses" and edited by members of the sect. It is divided into two general parts: the first half of the book recapitulates the history of Ann Lee and her followers in England, their travel and settlement in American, and their experiences during their first 40-or-so years as a religious sect in New England, New York, and the Western Reserve; the second part is dedicated to doctrine, prophesies, and revelations given by Ann Lee and other prominent Shakers. A bibliographic source notes that this book is sometimes called The secret book of the elders, see E. Richard McKinstry, comp., The Edward Deming Andrews Memorial Shaker Collection (New York: Garland, 1987), 12.

Comment: This book differs from another large Shaker work, Youngs and Green, The Testimony of Christ's Second Appearing (Albany, 1810), in that it is meant for "internal" instruction rather than "external" persuasion. The following is a portion of Ann Lee's telling of her early spiritual ministry and her travel from England to America.

Researcher: Spencer Fluhman

Date: 22 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "... we left our native land, by the special gift of God, and came to America, to bring the gospel. But while I was in England, I knew, by the revelation of God, that God had a chosen people in America; and I saw some of them in vision, while I was in England; and when I saw them in America, I knew them. "But no one came with me into this land, except such as felt a special gift in their own souls; for they were greatly wrought upon, by the power of God, and spake with new tongues, and prophesied. Some could not speak in their own tongue for a number of days; but when they spoke they spoke in unknown tongues. . . . "... I see the heavenly hosts, I hear the angels sing, and converse with them daily." (64-65)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pages

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: woman's role; basis of authority; order
Author: Calvin Green (Theodore E. Johnson, ed.)
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Biographical Account of the Life, Character, & Ministry of Father Joseph Meacham, the Primary Leader in Establishing the United Order of the Millennial Church"
Title of Periodical: The Shaker Quarterly
Place of Publication: Poland Spring, Maine
Publisher: United Society
Date of Publication: 1970
Library Location: Not at BYU
Nature of Source: Calvin Green, a prominent Shaker historian/theologian of the early nineteenth century, compiled this account. The title page lists 1827, yet the manuscript is dated 1859. It remained in manuscript form until 1970 when it was edited and introduced by Theodore Johnson, the general editor of the Shaker Quarterly. The entire account stretches over numbers 1-3 of volume 10, and is found on pages 20-32, 51-68, 92-102.
Comment: Joseph Meacham is a prominent figure in early American Shakerism. He was the first American convert of Ann Lee, the sect's charismatic early leader. After Lee's death, her close English associate, James Whittaker, took over leadership of the group. He was followed by Meacham. Meacham is credited with publishing the sects first theological tract, and was instrumental in "gathering" the Shakers into communities across New England and New York. Green compiled this account during a period of intense historical and theological development in Shakerism. Sources are sparse for the period of the early Shaker leaders, so much of what we know is based on later work like this. It may be that these later sources tell us more about the state of Shakerism in the 1820s than they do about the 1790s, the decade of Meacham's leadership.
Researcher: Spencer Fluhman
Date: 30 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Soon after the Church began to be gathered, Father Joseph saw that a spiritual union must be gained between male & female before gospel order could be established in the Church; that the man was not without the woman, nor the woman without the man in the Lord,'-that without this spiritual union in virgin purity being gained in a joint body, which is directly contrary to the union & works of the flesh, a real travel out of the fallen nature of the flesh could not be experienced, nor the spiritual order of Christ's kingdom be made manifest-that this spiritual order must first be made manifest in the visible parentage of the Church, before it could be gained in the body. He saw that Lucy Wright was the person whom God had chosen to stand first among the females. She had been recommended by Mother Ann before her decease, as the one most proper for the sisters to pattern after & take example by.
"Father Joseph having received this gift, & seeing that the time was fully come for the joint parentage of the Church to be visibly established, put numbers of the people to labor for a gift to know who their visible Mother was in the spiritual order of the Church. And soon manifestly, by the moving of the spirit they spontaneously felt & declared that it was Lucy Wright. She was accordingly appointed to stand first among the sisters; & to stand in a spiritual correspondence with Father Joseph, in the first joint parentage in the spiritual order of the Church of Christ in the visible order of the kingdom established on earth. Thus the true foundation was laid in the Church, for all souls to receive the life of the joint spiritual parentage, to be gotten & brot forth into the true order and spiritual union of the gospel.
"This spiritual union and life is like a consuming fire to all the union and life of the flesh; & hereby souls may travel out of the fallen nature, & find full redemption; & thus rise into the verry nature and life of Christ; & it is as much impossible for souls to be born out of a fallen nature of the flesh, into the life of the everlasting kingdom of Christ, & become partakers of its order and glory without spiritual parents, as it is for anyone to be born into the natural world without natural parents. This was uniformly the testimony of Father Joseph & Mother Lucy.
"The joint parentage of the Church was evidently shown by the revelation of God in many figures in ancient days: but the most striking figure may be found in the Prophet Zephaniah, Chap 4 representing the two Olive Trees. The two Olive Trees represented the Two Annointed Ones; that is Christ manifested in Male & Female. From these the oil of light & life flows to the Church. But the golden oil was emptied into the golden bowl thro the two branches.
"The golden bowl represented the Church of Christ, builded & completed in gospel order. And as it could not receive the pure oil, only thro the two branches, so it is evident that the two branches represented the joint parentage of the Church; that is the revelation & gifts of God in the line of both male & female, which first begun in Jesus Christ & Mother Ann, & is continued thro the two golden pipes: 'The spirit and life of Christ proceeding from the two annointed ones' for the building, support & strength of the Church, And therefore, without this joint parentage, the Church could never be established in spiritual relation; nor could the order of the New Creation in Christ be made manifest." (30-32)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pages
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: agency
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Salvation by Faith"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 19)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 13, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: The author begins by asserting that if all people would read the Bible without bias, there would be no differences between the sects. The author then argues that faith is not bestowed on particular persons by God, but that God enables every person to choose belief or unbelief. This author's opinion is refuted by "An old Methodist" on p. 85 of Vol. 1, No. 22 (Feb. 3, 1827). The old Methodist contests that every sinner does have good in him, and that this good comes through the grace of God, "which is imparted to him without any necessary volition on his part." This is that "initial grace" or "general influence," "the true light which enlighteneth every man that cometh into the world." Thus, for the old Methodist, faith is both the gift of God and the act of man. In Vol. 1, Nos. 27 and 29 (Mar. 10 and 24, 1827) the Christian Advocate itself addresses the dispute, basically endorsing the old Methodist's remarks with quotations from Wesley, Fletcher, Clarke, Benson, and Martindale. These passages contain definitions of faith and belief. Clarke states that God gives man the grace or the power to believe, but that the "act of faith is man's own" (113).

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "To say faith is a divine principle wrought in the soul by the spirit of God, and that none can believe with a saving faith, until God operates upon them, to produce that faith; would be as inconsistent as to say, men are as inactive as machines, and God chooses to work on some, to enable them to believe and be saved, while he sees fit to leave others to themselves, and they will necessarily reject all the offers of his saving grace, by their own voluntary unbelief, to their own destruction. . . . The fact is this, offers of free grace and full salvation are made to every rational soul; and those who reject, might have accepted, and those who accept, might have rejected those offers; for the same free offer, gives equal power to accept or reject the thing thus offered. The impartial and free offer of Christ and his salvation, in the gospel, not only gives the power to accept by faith, but also to reject, by unbelief; for it is as impossible to reject, as to accept, what is not offered, therefore must not unbelief be the gift of God, in the same way as faith?

"Those who have it in their power to reject the council of God, by unbelief, have it as much in their power to accept that council, by faith. God therefore imposes no teaching, or council, much less any influence of his spirit, upon any rational soul, by violence, or in any degree irresistible; but from first to last, all his enlightening and quickening influence, is with the free concurrence of the rational mind" (73).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages): 73

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

______________________________________________________________________________

Topics: church discipline
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 1)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 1830
Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This article is dedicated to refuting the claims and arguments made by Rev. Asa Shinn and other "reformers." The author discusses issues of church government and church disciplining of those who criticize the church polity and government. In advocating Episcopalianism rather than congregationalism the author addresses the differences between civil and religious government and the necessary division of church and state.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "Again, the Report says. . . .
Our ministers and members, of every class, are entitled to the full liberty of speech and of the press, equally with any other citizens of the United States,—subject solely to the restrictions and responsibilities imposed by the laws of the land, by the obligations of Christianity, and by the existing regulations under which we are voluntarily associated, as Methodists, and as Methodist ministers. . . . The design of the rule was to guard the peace and union of the church, against any mischievous false brethren who might be disposed to avail themselves of their place in the bosom of the church, to endeavor to sow dissensions by inveighing against our doctrines or discipline, in the sense of unchristian railing and violence” (51-52).
"The General Conference never has sanctioned, and has given the most solemn pledge that it will not sanction, the expulsion of any individual from the church, for the mere holding or expressing of any opinion in relation to its government, or polity" (63).
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pars.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: corruption of biblical text; New Scripture; sectarian strife
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Study of the Bible"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 14)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Dec. 9, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: The author admonishes all Christians to study the Bible, "the standard of all religious truth." He claims that serious study of the Bible by all who profess to follow its teachings would end sectarian strife. The author sees the Bible as all-sufficient and unambiguous, an opinion which strongly contrasts the Mormon view.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "It is a matter of no small importance, then, for all, who possess the oracles of God, to ascertain well the doctrines they teach, and the duties they enjoin. We are not at liberty to receive any thing and every thing as religious truth, which the ingenuity of man may devise, or which may be congenial to the corrupt inclination of our hearts; we have a more sure word of prophecy, to which we shall do well to take heed, as to the oracles of the living God. The Bible is the standard of all religious truth. From this we should draw our own opinions, to this we should refer the opinions and views of others.

"Would men lay aside their preconceived opinions and their prejudices, and examine the word of God with sincerity and candour--with a teachable and prayerful spirit, and a firm resolution to admit whatever is plainly taught, whether it approve or condemn them; we are bold to say, that there would be much less variance than at present, upon the great doctrines of the gospel, and that multitudes, who now reject the light of revelation, would be led to embrace those truths which are indispensable to their eternal salvation. The reason, why so many, under the meridian light of the Sun of Righteousness, embrace false doctrine, and 'damnable heresy,' is, not that the Bible teaches one man truth and another error; but that multitudes, with the Bible in their hands, neglect to make it their study, or study it, only to darken its counsels and pervert its truths. They first determine what they will, and what they will not believe; and then, if Scripture coincides with their views, it is received; if not, it is rejected. . . .Will not that God, who commissioned his prophets and apostles, to write with the pen of inspiration, the volume of his will, frown in indignation upon us if we yield ourselves to the guidance of human intellect, while we neglect to search the Scriptures, with a meek and docile spirit, and to draw from them, our every rule of faith and practice?" (53).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: divine mission of the United States
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Greeks in Want of Food"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 16)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Dec. 23, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: America and Christianity are very much bound together in this periodical. America is a Christian nation, and the cause of liberty seems to be as much a source of religious passion as the cause of the gospel. The plight of the Greeks, at war with the barbaric Turks, receives constant attention in the Foreign Intelligence section of the periodical.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "The people of America, a people of Christians, a people devoted to liberty, of whose friendship and sympathy for Greece we have already received ample proof, are, to our great misfortune, the farthest removed from us. But remote as they are, sir, the friends of freedom and the friends of humanity may yet contribute to the relief of our country" (63).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: divine mission of the United States; race
Author: Rev. Nathan Bangs, D. D.
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "'Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God.' Psalm lxviii, 31."
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 46)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jul. 20, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: In his sermon, given on the 4th of July to the American Colonization Society, Rev. Bangs begins by praising the principles of America (patriotic passages are typical in this newspaper). He then addresses the future of Africa and promotes the civilization and Christianization of Africa through missionary work and colonization. Within the sermon, Rev. Bangs states that blacks are descendants of Ham and that blacks knew and preached the gospel in the days of the primitive church. He also notes the present-day missionary work of black ministers.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "This is a proud day for America;--and although the hands which signed that noble instrument fifty-one years ago, declaring our independence, are now, with the exception of one, palsied in death, yet their work remains to speak their praise. . . . This may perhaps be said to be a proud day for the world: for there are few nations but have felt the effect of the principles of our American revolution; and tyrants, to this day, tremble on their thrones, lest these principles shall prostrate them. And I may here remark, that these principles have taken a wider range;--they extend to the church of the living God;--the tree of righteousness and the tree of liberty were here planted together;--they have both taken deep root, they have abundantly flourished, and their fruit affords consolation to thousands of our race. . . . "The text predicts the future prosperity of the African race:--Ethiopia is in that quarter of the world, being a part of Africa. Ethiopia, the land of Cush, signifying black, dry, hot, thereby conveying an idea not only of the colour of the inhabitants, but also of the soil and climate of the country. Cush was the eldest son of Ham, father to Nimrod. Egypt was settled by descendants of Ham, Haborch, one of the names of Abyssinia, or Ethiopia, signifies to mix, commingle, or if you please, to consolidate. Suppose people to come together, of different origin, differing in their manners and prejudices, and when thus mingled, a name is given them expressive of their mixed character. "Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God."

"It is supposed by some that this prediction was fulfilled in the days of Solomon, when the queen of Sheba came from the south to see the wisdom of Solomon, she belonging to Ethiopia. It is however more probable that the prophecy respects the blessings of Christianity which should be sought and found by its inhabitants. It was, indeed, introduced into that country at an early period. There were some Ethiopians at Jerusalem at the day of Pentecost; then the truth enlightened their understandings, and according to the testimony of one of the early fathers of the church, these returned to their native land, with the glad sound of the gospel. The eunuch converted by the instrumentality of Philip was an Ethiopian, and he no doubt proclaimed the same gospel to his own countrymen. "I shall not, however, confine myself to Ethiopia, but consider the text as applicable to the whole of Africa. . . .From the commencement of our labours as Methodists, the poor Africans have shared in those labours. Ever since the year 1768 there has been a special effort made by us to raise and exalt this oppressed people to the rank of Christians. . . . We could point you to ministers in other churches, who were converted among us as Methodists, and we could now point you to able ministers going forth among their own colour proclaiming the everlasting gospel with success. . . . They [the colonists] have ordinances of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the ministers of his sanctuary, and many of them of their own people.--In the last conversation I had with Bishop McKendree, he informed me that he had ordained a coloured man, expressly for Liberia, and the last annual report of the society speaks in terms of commendation of the Methodists and of their influence in the reformation of the colonists" (181).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: _______________________________

Topics: dreams; afterlife
Author: Rev. R. Bowden
Title of Book:
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 19)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 13, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This article, printed in the Ministers' Dept., is an extract from the Imperial Magazine. A preface explains the editor's (perhaps the Methodist) attitude toward dreams. As in other dreams related in the Christian Advocate, the dream related here involves a person recently deceased.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "[By inserting it, says the Christian Watchman, we do not mean to be considered as attaching any special importance to dreams, or as feeling any obligation to be governed in our conduct by them, any farther than as our sleeping thoughts may direct us to God, and the truths of his word. In meditating on the visions of the head upon the bed, we have often thought of that reproof of inspiration to they lying prophets, who were often saying 'We have dreamed.' God says, 'He that hath a dream, let him tell a dream;' i.e. let him tell it as such: 'But he that hath my work, let him speak my word faithful. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord.']

"A gospel minister, of evangelical principles, whose name, from the circumstances that occurred, it will be necessary to conceal, being much fatigued at the conclusion of the afternoon service, retired to his apartment in order to take a little rest. He had not long reclined upon his couch before he fell asleep and began to dream. He dreamed that upon walking into his garden, he entered a bower, that had been erected in it, where he sat down to read and meditate. While thus employed he thought he heard some person enter the garden; and leaving his bower he immediately hastened to the spot from which the sound seemed to come, in order to discover who it was that entered. He had not proceeded far before he discovered a particular friend of his, a gospel minister of considerable talents, who had rendered himself very popular by his zealous and unwearied exertions in the cause of Christ. On approaching this friend, he was surprised to find his countenance was covered with a gloom which it had not been accustomed to wear, and that strongly indicated a violent agitation of mind, apparently arising from conscious remorse. After the usual salutations had passed, his friend asked the relator the time of day? To which he replied 'twenty-five minutes after four.' On hearing this, the stranger said, 'It is only one hour since I died, and now I am damned!'-- 'Damned for what?' inquired the sleeping minister. 'It is not,' said he, 'because I have not preached the gospel, neither is it because I have not been rendered useful, for I have now many seals to my ministry, that can bear testimony to the truth as it is in Jesus, which they have received from my lips; but it is because I have been accumulating to myself the applause of men, more than the honour that cometh from above; and verily I have my reward.

"Having uttered these expressions, he hastily disappeared and was seen no more. The minister awaked shortly afterwards, with the vision deeply engraved upon his memory, and proceeded, overwhelmed with serious reflections, towards the chapel, to conduct the evening service. On his way thither, he was asked by a friend whether he had learned the severe loss the church had sustained in the death of that able minister . He replied 'no;' but being much affected at this singular intelligence, he inquired of him the day, and time of day when his departure took place. To this his friend replied, 'this afternoon, at twenty-five minutes after three o'clock'" (76).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pars.

Hard Copy (pages):
"The same night that he died, I dreamed I saw him, and that I was appointed by Divine Providence to attend him through the valley of the shadow of death. . . . At length, after many turnings and windings, we came to our journey's end, and saw heaven as represented in the Revelation, four square, with several gates. When a good way off we heard the songs of the redeemed, which made us quicken our pace. We approached one side of the New Jerusalem, and ascended some steps, but found no admittance; yet nothing discouraged, we proceeded to another side, where we found an open door, at which my companion entered, and I saw him no more. I was allowed only to glance my eye into the blessed abodes, where I saw a vast concourse of people, on seats rising in regular order above each other: the whole blessed company had their eyes fixed on some object in the midst of the celestial Temple, but which I could not behold; and all were singing in rapturous strains of joy, with a mixture of veneration and astonishment on their countenances . . . . On awaking, I was not a little surprized at my dream, and early in the morning told a friend all the circumstances; about two hours after we were informed that the young man had died that night" (1).
"He then observes, that there are three kinds of election mentioned in Scripture: First, That of individuals to perform some special work or service, as of Cyrus to rebuild the temple, Paul to be the Apostle of the Gentiles, &c. Secondly, that of nations, or bodies of men, to eminent religious privileges; and, in order to accomplish, by their superiorillumination, the merciful purposes of God, in benefiting other nations or bodies of people; as the Jews, for instance. Lastly, that of individuals to eternal life. . . . "It is clearly proved . . . that the proceedings of God towards the Jews shut out all reply and debate with God. There was no injustice in his casting off from being any longer his peculiar people those who refused submission to the Redeemer, and set up their own erroneous and absurd notions in opposition to the wisdom and will of God. Yet he even endured with much long-suffering these 'vessels of wrath fitted to destruction,' and gave them repeated opportunities of coming into the Christian church, and of enjoying all her privileges, in common with the believing Gentiles. We give the following as a small specimen of the author's manner and views in this part of his argument:--""We come, finally, to the case of the rejected Jews, in the very age of the Apostles. The purpose of God, as we have seen, was to abolish the former ground, on which his visible church had for so many ages been built, that of natural descent from Abraham by Isaac..." and Jacob; but this was so far from shutting out the Jews from spiritual blessings, that though, as Jews, they were now denied to be God's church, yet they were all invited to come in with the Gentiles, or rather to lead the way into the new church, established on the new principle of faith in Jesus, as the Christ. . . . The blinded themselves by their prejudices and worldliness and spiritual pride, and were, at length, judicially given up to blindness. But then might they not all have had a share in this new election into this new church of God? Truly, every one of them; for thus the Apostle argues, Rom. Ix, 30, 32:
'What shall we say then? That the Gentiles which followed not after righteousness, hath not attained to the law of righteousness. Wherefore? BECAUSE THEY SOUGHT IT NOT BY FAITH; but, as it were, by the works of the law.' And thus we have it plainly declared, that they were excluded from the new spiritual church of God, not by any act of sovereignty, not by any decree of reprobation, but by an act of their own: they rejected the doctrine and way of faith; they attained not unto righteousness, because they sought it not by faith.

"The collective election and rejection taught in this chapter, is not then unconditional, in the sense of the Calvinists; and neither the salvation of the people elected, nor the condemnation of the people rejected, flows as necessary consequents from these acts of the Divine sovereignty. They are, indeed, mysterious procedures; for doubtless it must be allowed that they place some portions of men in circumstances more favoured than others; but, even in such cases, God has shut out the charge of 'unrighteousness,' by requiring from men according 'to what they have, and not according to what they have not'" (376-378).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: endless punishment
Author:
Title of Book: "For the Christian Advocate"
Title of Article: "For the Christian Advocate"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 18)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 6, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J.
Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: In this article the Universalist view about limited suffering in hell for sinners is heartily refuted. The article contests arguments from a particular (unnamed) Universalist book. The main "queries" in this article are as follows: if the punishment is not infinite, why an infinite atonement? How can the will of God be the cause of wickedness if God is perfectly good? Will suffering change the disposition of the wicked? Why the atonement if men can be purified by suffering in hell? If God does not want us to suffer eternally, why does he allow temporary suffering? If there is limited suffering for the wicked, then will the righteous enjoy only limited happiness?

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "A gentleman of good morals . . . had been led astray by the notion of Universalism, or that men, although they might go to hell for a time, will finally be purified by fire and suffering, come out again, and be received into eternal glory. . . . "If sin has not in it an infinite demerit, why did God require an infinite atonement, like that made by the Son of God, to put it away? . . . . Is suffering like to reform and convert damned spirits? Have the devils become any better by suffering 'under chains of darkness for six thousand years'? . . . And if these have been made no better by going to hell and suffering so many ages, is it any way likely that suffering any given time, however long, will effect a reformation and conversion in any man? Does not suffering sometimes harden men's hearts? And if it does not change their disposition and moral character, can they expect, by this means, to arrive at a state of perfect happiness? But if they could be purified and made holy by the fire of hell, would not this do away the necessity of the atonement? Would not the sufferings which such endure be considered as their savior? . . . Is not temporary suffering, on this plan, as inconsistent with the divine goodness, as eternal suffering? . . . If the divine Goodness is under absolute necessity to make all men finally happy, is it not under the same necessity of making all men happy at all times and in all places? . . . examine Matt. xxv, 46. Now the very same word is used in the original to point out the duration of the punishment of the wicked, that is used to point out the duration of the life of the righteous; every letter in the Greek is the same. Have we not, therefore as much liberty to, and is there not as much propriety, in limiting the happiness of the righteous as in limiting the punishment of the wicked, if the one ends, must not the other? Yea, might we not as well limit the existence of Almighty God, as the punishment of the wicked? for the very same word is used to express both"

(69).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages): 69

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: fate of those without gospel; missionary work; dispensations

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 4)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Oct. 1830
Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This review (serialized in the July and October issues) praises the book's author and summarizes its arguments. This apologetic theological work is probably by a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in England. The first two paragraphs of my excerpt are excerpts from Watson's book quoted within the review. In this passage, Watson argues that it is possible for the heathen to be saved, but concedes that they are in a less favorable or disadvantaged state. He distinguishes this principle of inequality from Calvin's, emphasizing that where little is given, little is expected. The last paragraph of my excerpt is the comment of the reviewer following the excerpt from Watson's work in which the reviewer explains the correct motives for missionary work.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "The actual state of pagan nations is affecting bad; but nothing can be deduced, from what they are in fact, against their salvability; for, although, there is no ground to hope for the salvation of great numbers of them, actual salvation is one thing, and possible salvation is another. Nor does it affect this question, if we see not how Heathens may be saved; that is, by what means repentance, and faith, and righteousness should be in any such degree wrought in them, as that they shall become acceptable to God. The dispensation of religion under which all those nations are to whom the Gospel has never been sent, continues to be the patriarchal dispensation. That men were saved under that in former times we know, and at what point, if any, a religion becomes so far corrupted, and truth so far extinct, as to leave no means of salvation to men, nothing to call forth a true faith in principle, and obedience to what remains known or knowable of the original law, no one has the right to determine, unless he can adduce some authority from Scripture. That authority is certainly not available to the conclusion, that, in point of fact, the means of salvation are utterly withdrawn from Heathens. We may say that a murderous, adulterous, and idolatrous Heathen will be shut out from the kingdom of heaven; we must say this, on the express exclusion of all such characters from future blessedness by the word of God; but it would be little to the purpose to say, that, as far as we know they may, but we do not know the whole case; and were these charges universally true, yet the question is not what the Heathen are, but what they have the means of becoming. We indeed know that all are not equally vicious, nay, that some virtuous Heathens have been found in all ages; and some earnest and anxious inquirers after truth, dissatisfied with the notions prevalent in their own countries respectively; and what these few were, the rest might have been likewise. But, if we know no such instances of superior virtue and eager desire of religious information among them, the true question, "What degree of truth is, after all, attainable by them?" would still remain a question which must be determined not so much by our knowledge of facts which may be very obscure, but such principles and general declarations as we find applicable to the case in the word of God.
"If all knowledge of right and wrong, and all gracious influence of the Holy Spirit, and all objects of faith, have passed away from the Heathen, through the fault of their ancestors "not liking to retain God in their knowledge," and without the present race having been parties to this wilful abandonment of truth, then they would appear no longer to be accountable creatures, being neither under the law nor under grace; but as we find it a doctrine of Scripture, that all men are responsible to God, and that the "whole world" will be judged at the last day, we are bound to admit the accountability of all, and with that, the remains of law and the existence of a merciful government towards the Heathen on the part of God. With this the doctrine of St. Paul accords. No one can take stronger views of the actual danger and the corrupt state of the Gentiles than he; yet he affirms that the Divine law had not perished wholly from among them: that though they had received no revealed law, yet they had a law "written on their hearts;" meaning, no doubt, the traditionary law, the equity of which their consciences attested; and, further, that though they had not the written law, yet, that "by nature," that is, "without outward rule, though this, also, strictly speaking, is by preventing grace," they were capable of doing all the things contained in the law. He affirms, too, that all such Gentiles as were thus obedient, should be "justified, in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to his Gospel." The possible obedience and the possible
"justification" of Heathens who have no written revelation, are points, therefore, distinctly affirmed by the apostle in his discourse, in the second chapter of the Epistle to the Romans; and the whole matter of God's sovereignty, as to the Heathen, is reduced, not to the leaving of any portion of our race without means of salvation, and then punishing them for sins which they have no means of avoiding; but to the fact of his having given superior advantages to us, and inferior ones only to them; a proceeding which we see exemplified in the most enlightened of Christian nations every day, for neither every part of the same nation is equally favoured with the means of grace, nor are all the families living in the same town and neighbourhood equally circumstanced as to means of religious influence and improvement. The principle of this inequality is, however, far different from that on which Calvinistic reprobation is sustained; since it involves no inevitable exclusion of any individual from the kingdom of God, and because the general principle of God's administration, in such cases, is elsewhere laid down to be, the requiring of much where much is given, and the requiring of little where little is given:--a principle of the strictest equity.'--(pp. 177-9). . . .
"There is nothing in the tenet of absolute reprobation more revolting, than the opinion of the unavoidable damnation of the Heathen; and surely such a position is not necessary to stimulate to missionary exertions. The express command of Jesus Christ, that the Gospel should be preached to every creature; and the affecting fact, that the great mass of the Heathen pass through life into the eternal world destitute of that holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord; are sufficient motives to the most strenuous efforts to evangelize all nations, without having recourse to a principle which leads to the conclusion, that either a large proportion of mankind are not in a state of probation, or that the Judge of all the earth is unmerciful and unjust" (380-382).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: happiness as God's purpose for man
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Holiness of heart"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No.19)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 13, 1827

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This discussion of happiness does not state that God's purpose for man is happiness, but seems to imply that happiness is the end of man's existence.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "I have ever considered Christianity as a glorious provision for the happiness of man, originating in unspeakable Love, devised by unerring Wisdom, and executed by Almighty power, and this accords with the views of that holy man, who defined true religion, as 'happiness in God.' This accords with the well known saying of Richard Baxter, 'Holiness is happiness; and to talk of being happy without it is as palpable nonsense as to talk of being well without health, or of being saved without salvation.' In truth, our passage through this life is preparing us for perfect happiness, in the progressive attainment of that holiness which constitutes the very atmosphere of heaven" (73).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: heaven, glory; tree of life
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Meditations on Heaven"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 6)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Oct. 14, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: This article from the Children's Department contrasts earth and heaven.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "There is a land where the roses are without thorns, where the flowers are not mixed with the brambles. In that land there is eternal spring, and light without a cloud. The tree of life standeth in the midst thereof; rivers of pleasure are there, and flowers that never fade. Thousands of happy spirits are there, and surround the throne of God with a perpetual hymn. The angels with their golden harps sing praises continually; and the cherubim fly on wings of fire.  "There we shall see Jesus, who is gone before us into that happy place; and there we shall behold the glory of the High God" (24).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Jehovah
Author: B. F. L.
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Reasons why we should not go to plays, balls, and parties of carnal pleasure."
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 9)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Nov. 4, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: Jehovah cited as author of scriptures of the Old and New Testaments. In this highly didactic article the author probably refers to God as Jehovah in order to emphasize the wrath and unyielding justice of the God of the Old Testament.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "The commands and cautions of the Bible are so numerous on this subject, that it is difficult to make an appropriate selection. 'If sinners entice thee to sin, consent not.'--'Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men.'--'Be not among wine bibbers, among riotous eaters of flesh.'--'Abstain from all appearances of evil.'--'Evil communications corrupt good manners.'--'Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded.'--'Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth; neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting.'--'For every idle word that men speak, they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment.' In view of these solemn prohibitions of Jehovah, who can consume his time and money at plays and parties of carnal merriment?" (36).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Jews, restoration of Israel to their lands; religion and civilization, divine mission of the United States

Author: Theophilus

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Indian Government"

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 33)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Apr. 21, 1827

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This discusses the similar pathetic plights of the Indian and the Jew. The author portrays the Indian as a noble savage in need of civilization. The author advocates both Indian government and the restoration of Jews to their ancestral lands Excerpt (pages): "And we humbly trust, that the benefits resulting from this contemplated territorial system will not stop here; but ultimately that these high and lofty minded sons of the forest, after becoming civilized, will be incorporated into the Great Republic, and received as the sons of freedom! Without this stimulant it must be a vain attempt to civilize human beings. But when taught to feel, and to experience his own relation to society, then, and not till then, need we expect to find the Indian willing to enter upon the habits, and assume the manners of civilized life: all this is within the control of our government.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

"But the descendant of Abraham will have unquestionably a wider scope for the operation of his mind—kings shall become nursing fathers and queens nursing mothers, and the Christian nations of the earth shall open his way to the land of promise.' If, therefore, the son of the forest lost his home to give us a land of liberty, the former has lost him home and all his national privileges to open unto us a gospel dispensation. Then if the case of the native American awakens the sympathetic feelings of a whole nation, well may that of the sons of Abraham interest the Christian world. When struggling Greece shall have obtained the victory over her oppressors, and shall have taken her stand among the nations of the earth; then may we look out for the time when the 'natural' (if I may call them so) descendants of Abraham shall give place to their legitimate brethren, and the assembled Jews shall enter into, and take possession of their 'ancient inheritance.' For the accomplishment of this grand event all devout Christians have and still continue to pray.

"Turning then, from the scattered sons of the patriarch, leaving them in the hands of God and of the Christian world, we now present our subject--(An Indian Government)--that becomes daily of national importance; on this point rests the eye of the nations of the earth, to behold the full result of our newly tried system of representative government. To take man in a state of nature and teach him how to govern himself" (129).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: justification; redemption; atonement
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 4)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Oct. 1830
Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This review (serialized in the July and October issues) praises the book's author and summarizes its arguments. This apologetic theological work is probably by a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in England. This excerpt lists the benefits of the atonement, defines justification, and argues for the concept of justification through faith and works united.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Having established the doctrine of atonement for sin, by the death of Christ, Mr. Watson proceeds next to consider the benefits which are derived to man from that gracious procedure. Among these are specified, justification, and its concomitants, regeneration, adoption, and the witness of the Spirit. . . . Justification is shown to consist in the forgiveness of sins. . . . Mr. Watson has also furnished a most satisfactory confutation of Bishop Bull's theory, contained in his Latin treatise, entitled Harmonia Apostolica: and adopted by a large body of the national clergy. That eminent scholar contends, that sinners are justified before God by faith and works united. To establish this position, he explains St. Paul's doctrine of justification by that of St. James; without adverting to the very obvious circumstance, which at once shows the absurdity of his reasoning, that St. James only introduces the subject of justification incidentally, while St. Paul discourses upon it at large, and of set purpose. The faith by which sinners are justified is shown to have special reference to the sacrifice of Christ, and to be a principle of trust or confidence" (367)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics:  Law of Consecration; religion and civilization

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:  The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 2)

Place of Publication:  New York, NY

Publisher:  Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication:  Sep. 16, 1826

Nature of Source:  This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment:  This article is extracted from Southey's Life of Wesley. Wesley asks if revival of true religion can continue long, since religion produces frugality and industry, which create riches, which increase pride and the love of the world. He answers that to avoid this decay of pure religion, people must hoard nothing, and give all they can. Author of biography demonstrates that Wesley practiced his own advice.

Researcher:  Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages):  "I fear, says Mr. Wesley, wherever riches have increased, the essence of religion has decreased in the same proportion. Therefore I do not see how it is possible, in the nature of things, for any revival of true religion to continue long. For religion must necessarily produce both industry and frugality, and these cannot but produce riches. But as riches increase so will pride, anger, and the love of the world in all its branches . . . . Is there no way to prevent this—this continual decay of pure religion? . . . If those who gain all they can, and save all they can, will likewise give all they can, then the more they gain the more they will grow in grace and the more treasure they will lay up in heaven . . . "Hoard nothing. Lay up no treasure on earth; give all you can, that is, all you have . . . I am pained for you that are rich in this world. You who receive five hundred pounds a year, and spend only two hundred, do you give three hundred back to God? If not, you certainly rob God of that three hundred. You who receive two hundred and spend but one, do you give God the other hundred? If not, you rob him of just so much . . . It is not your own. It cannot be unless you are lord of heaven and earth" (5).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date when photocopying was completed:

Topics: lay priesthood, paid clergy
Author: H. B. Kelsey
Title of Book: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 47)
Title of Article: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 47)
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 47)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jul. 27, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This letter to the editor by a steward of a circuit argues that it is the congregation's duty, and not an act of charity, to provide for its ministers. He uses many scriptures to support his claim. He argues that Wesley and his "coadjutors" gave their labours without any compensation for the accomplishment of a religious revolution, and that it is wrong to demand the same extraordinary sacrifices of preachers now. Evidently, many Methodists did not feel that it was their duty to financially support their clergy, and the plight of underpaid or retired ministers is often addressed in this periodical.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "There is an error of principle, too generally prevalent, in the Methodist Episcopal Church, which is a fruitful source of the difficulties of the stewardship, and the embarrassments of our financial concerts. The error of which we complain is this: The support of the ministry is considered as a deed of charity, which the membership are under no definite or particular obligations to perform—a sentiment as unscriptural as it is unreasonable and unjust. . . . Hath not the same Lord, who ordained that the ministry should supply our spiritual wants, ordained also, that the membership should supply their temporal wants? . . . "The error under consideration, seems to have originated, in part, in a false conclusion, drawn from the praiseworthy conduct of the venerable Wesley and his coadjutors. These holy veterans of the cross, with a zeal worthy of all imitation, gave their time, their labours, and their property, to the cause of God without any reserve. Strange as it may appear, the sacrifice which they thus voluntarily made, for the good of the church, came, at length, to be looked upon, by many, as a duty which the ministry owed to them. Hence, the hackneyed interrogative, that is so often thrown out, when we appeal to the liberality of our people: 'Why cannot our preachers do as formerly, when they were satisfied with little, and scarcely ever touched the subject of money?' It seems to be overlooked, that in the accomplishment of extraordinary revolutions, either in a civil or a religious point of view, extraordinary men and measures are necessary. It would be just as unreasonable, to demand the services of our civil and military officers gratis now, because certain of their patriotic predecessors rendered theirs in this way, during our revolutionary struggle, as to demand of our preachers the same extraordinary sacrifices now, (when there is no longer a necessity for them,) that their giant-like forefathers made, to bring about one of the most powerful revivals of religion, that the church has witnessed since the days of the apostles" (185).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching
Author: Dr. Baldwin
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Acquirements necessary for a preacher"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 37)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: May 19, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: I have included in the excerpt a sentence or two for each of Dr. Baldwin's "acquirements" which are either necessary or unnecessary but desirable for a preacher.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "He that teaches the knowledge of God to mankind, can never have too much information himself. Yet some particular acquirements are more especially necessary.--As, first, a thorough knowledge of the system of revealed truth. The inspired Scriptures are profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works. . . . Next to the knowledge of the truth, which we preach, we may suppose it necessary to have a good understanding of the language which we make use of in our administrations. . . . The knowledge of the dead languages, though highly desirable, is not thought absolutely necessary. . . . Also, a good knowledge of ecclesiastical history, is to be considered as a necessary and interesting acquirement. . . . It will be granted that there are many other useful acquirements, though not so absolutely necessary to qualify a person to preach the gospel. Such as general knowledge of the arts and sciences, and of human nature. These are to be considered as useful appendages, rather than constituent parts.
But although a man were possessed of all the accomplishments described, yet 'How should he preach except he be sent?'' (148).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pars.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching

Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Augusta Herald"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 14)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Dec. 9, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J.
Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: This endorsement for Methodist colleges and universities describes the appropriate background of a minister.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "If we look back to the origin of Methodism, we shall find that its founders were men of sound erudition, as well as of deep and ardent piety;--and although they approved of the labours of laymen in the church, yet they manifested a strong desire that their minds should be well cultivated, and their knowledge of the holy Scriptures thorough and extensive. The same spirit still exists in our church; and by what method can we better provide for its extension, than by founding colleges and academies, under our own immediate superintendence and inspection? . . . By these means the rising generation will be prepared for future usefulness; and young men, who are called to the work of the ministry, will have an opportunity to store their minds with literary and theological knowledge. They will be better prepared to disseminate and defend the doctrines of our holy religion; better prepared to win souls to Christ, to build up the saints, and honour their God" (55).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: lay priesthood and preaching
Author:
Title of Book: "Memoir of the Late Rev. Bishop George"
Title of Article: "Memoir of the Late Rev. Bishop George"
Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 3)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jul. 1830
Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This excerpt, from the bracketed introduction (not written by the author of the memoir) of the article, discusses the attributes of "an able and useful minister."

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "A combination of rare and peculiar qualifications is undoubtedly necessary to constitute an able and useful minister of the gospel. This subject has been less calmly and judiciously considered than the intelligence and liberality of the age would entitle us to expect. Though we my possibly differ in this matter from some others, we place first in the scale of importance, for practical efficiency and permanent usefulness in the work of the ministry, those qualifications which distinguish the individual who possesses them as a man and a Christian. His soul must be deeply imbued with the spirit of the gospel which he preaches to others. He must have an abiding sense of his call from God to the work, and feel that the duties it involves are superior to all considerations of personal ease, accommodation, or worldly interest, such as commonly influence men of other professions and pursuits. Besides an aptness to teach, and a good understanding of men and things, so as to be able to accommodate himself to all cases and conditions he may meet, in a way best calculated to render his labours acceptable, he needs a more than ordinary share of firmness of mind, and magnanimity of soul, to carry him steadily through. Without these he never can succeed. The constant sacrifices he will have to make, together with the persecutions he will be called to suffer from the world, and in some instances, the ingratitude and unkindness of professed friends, to which he will always be liable, and which would effectually prostrate and overcome feelings less fortified and holy: all these sufficiently indicate how great a share of Christian meekness and forbearance, combined with zeal and devotion, is necessary to sustain a minister of the gospel in his work" (248-249).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):
"A Concise Account of My Life and Experience, Designed for my children and friends, who may wish to know something of my enjoyments, labours, and sufferings, when I am seen and heard no more." I have excerpted the paragraph in which the Reverend discusses the beginning of his ministry.

Excerpt (pages): "About this time some of my friends were impressed with the belief of my call to more active and general duty in the vineyard of the Lord. They spoke to me about exhorting; but so weighed down was I with the load, that I considered it intolerable. They urged the will of God,--the call of the church, and my duty. I 'asked counsel of the Lord,' for I desired to do his will in all things. 'O Lord my God, I am but a little child: I know not how to go out, or come in. And thy servant is in the midst of thy people, which thou hast chosen. Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart.' 'O my Lord, send I pray thee by the hand of whom thou wilt send.' It was a cross to unite in social prayer with my friends and neighbours, and must I stand in the great congregation? My friends were not satisfied, and put it to the test of experiment. The circuit preacher having appointed a watch night, they induced him to call on me for a 'word of exhortation.' Of this I was aware before the meeting began, and by going late, and hiding myself, I supposed to escape. In this fancied concealment I sat and listened to an insipid sermon, which was no sooner concluded than the preacher called for me by name. This so affrighted me that I sat down upon the floor; but he continued calling, until an acquaintance answered that I was there, and a friend led me to the table, where, with trembling and weeping, I exhorted. This was the beginning of my ministry" (13).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "A Reply To Mr. Alexander M'Caine: By the Author of 'The Defence of our Fathers.'

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 1)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Jan. 1830

Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This very extensive article defends the Methodist Church against the criticism of Mr. M'Caine as set forth in the pamphlet "History and Mystery." The article principally consists of discussion about church government. This excerpt states that the office, not the Holy Ghost, is conveyed by the imposition of hands.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Equally misplaced is Mr. M'Caine's critique on our form of ordination. He says it affirms, 'that the Holy Ghost is conveyed by the imposition of hands.'--But it affirms no such thing.--Agreeably to his own quotation, the plain meaning is,--not 'the Holy Ghost--now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands;'--but--'the office and work,'-- 'now committed unto thee,' &c." (89).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: missionary work, lay priesthood and preaching
Author: Rev. Robert Seney
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Speech"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 12)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Nov. 25, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: In his speech Rev. Seney encourages all members of the Bible society to participate in the distribution of the Bible and in the explanation of salvation through scripture to sinners.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "You might give notice from every pulpit, you might publish in every paper; you might tell in every house, there is a treasury of Bibles, its doors are open for gratuitous distribution; and there are hundreds who would never advance one step towards it; and why? They know not the worth of the Bible. What then must be done? Let this Society deal them out gratuitously; let messengers be sent to every house; let them put the Bible in every hand. But let them not stop here--let them see that this Bible is read; let them put the question, 'understandest thou what thou readest?' And let them be capable of explaining at least those parts which are essential to the salvation of sinners. . . . I trust, this society would think itself amply repaid, were it to go from door to door, and supply every individual in this city, if, after all its pains, but one in ten thousand, but one within the whole compass of its range, should find his way to heaven; and should not even one profit from its labour, it could lay down its head, with all the composure of the man who is confident he has discharged his duty" (45-46).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

_______________________________________________________

Topics: missionary work, preaching gospel to all the world
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Auxiliary Missionary Societies"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 10)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Nov. 11, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: Although the Methodists did not expect everyone to participate in proselyting, they hoped that everyone would financially contribute to the missionary work. Articles which discuss missionary work, especially those which request missionary volunteers or financial assistance, often refer to the responsibility to preach the gospel to all the world. This article includes the form of a constitution for auxiliary or branch missionary societies.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Is there a good Methodist on this continent, one who loves our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, that will refuse to enrol [sic] his name and give his mite, to send the gospel into all the world, that it may be preached to every creature: We will not believe it. Let them come forward, then, and be known 'by their fruits.' . . . 'the annual subscription should be made low, in order that all may have it in their power to be engaged in the good work, while the rich are encouraged of their abundance to cast much into the treasury of the Lord.' . . .

"ART. 2 The object of this society is, to assist the several annual conferences more effectually to extend their missionary labours throughout the United States, and elsewhere" (38).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pars.

Hard Copy (pages)

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: missionary work; dreams; temple

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Origin of Camp-meetings"

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 10)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Nov. 11, 1826

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This article, reprinted from the Religious Messenger, is quoted below in its entirety.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "A Presbyterian clergyman in North Carolina, about the year 1800, became convinced that he ought to abandon certain doctrines, and preach free grace, a general atonement, and the offer of a full and free salvation through faith in Jesus. For this he was persecuted so much, that his people actually, to get clear of him, set fire to his house of worship, and burnt him out. He left them and proceeded to Kentucky, discouraged and dejected.--When about making up his resolves to abandon the ministry, a friend with whom he conferred, opposed it, and, to encourage him, related a dream which he had, of a singular kind, which he thought would be followed by something of an extraordinary kind, and in favour of religion. A public meeting was soon to take place. After this meeting the minister had intended to abandon the church. The state of morals was very low, and this worthy man thought that to continue his labours would be in vain. At the meeting, however, of which he designed to relinquish his pastoral duties, the work of God broke out in a wonderful manner. The conversions were numerous, and the outpourings of the Divine Spirit extraordinary. The houses could not hold the people--they took to the groves, where the work became so extensive that they continued on the place from day to day, sending for their provisions and necessaries. The idea of tents naturally suggested itself to them. Camp-meetings were thus formed, not by design, but by necessity. Man had no part in this--and if ever any place was consecrated by God for the purpose of carrying on his work (under the gospel dispensation) it was his own temple--the temple of nature, whose convenient and elastic sides will always accommodate just as many as please to congregate for worship in one place" (38).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: missionary work; Native Americans as Israel; great and abominable church

Author: Richard Watson and Jabez Bunting on behalf of the British Conference

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Letter: the Answer of the British Conference to the Preceding Letter"

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 9)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Nov. 4, 1826

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This letter is in reply to a letter from the (American) Rev. Bishops George and Hedding to the British Conference in which the Americans describe their missionary efforts among the "Aborigines of our country." The use of harvest imagery (John 4:35) is typical for discussions about missionary work in The Christian Advocate. Note also the special mention of South America and the delegation of missionary work in South America to the Americans.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "We are deeply sensible of the importance and necessity of your Missionary operations among the aboriginal tribes of your forests. An extensive field lies before you, 'white already to harvest;' and to us, as well as to yourselves, it is highly gratifying that you are successfully 'reaping' its produce, and 'gathering fruit unto life eternal'. . . .

"To the circumstances of that very extensive and interesting country, South America, our thoughts have often been directed; and in the order of Divine Providence, it appears to rest with you, dear Brethren, to supply, in a great measure, that country with Methodist Missionary labour. We doubt not that you will thankfully avail yourselves of every facility to promote the interests of the Protestant religion among a people so long under the influence of Papal superstition" (33).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: missionary work; Native Americans as Israel; great and abominable church
Author:
Title of Book: "South America"
Title of Article: "South America"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 8)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Oct. 28, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J.
Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This article is reprinted from the Vermont Chronicle. Methodists seem to pay special attention to the need for missionary work in South America. They are particularly concerned with the fact that the Christianity of South Americans is Catholic, and therefore impure. American Methodists seem to feel special responsibility for missionary work in the United States among the Native Americans ("aborigines" or "Indians") and in South America. There is no reference to the lineage of these peoples, and the concern for these particular groups seems to be a result of proximity and disgust for both paganism and Catholic superstition.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "As the situation of the South American States is extremely interesting in every point of view, we do not think any apology necessary for the space allotted in our own columns to their concerns. Just emancipated from a most oppressive political tyranny, they are daily becoming more free and independent in their opinions and feelings respecting their ecclesiastical affairs. They are awakening to industry and enterprise--intellect and moral feeling are excited--schools are beginning to improve--and the population is making rapid advances.

"But what makes their situation one of more intense interest to the Christian philanthropist is the fact, that the name of our holy religion is there associated with superstitions and abominations calculated to drive a people whose eyes are opening to the light, into absolute infidelity. Infidelity has always been prevalent among the enlightened classes in Roman Catholic countries. They do not become acquainted with pure Christianity but with a most disgusting counterfeit which they do right to reject. . .

"It is of the very first importance therefore that efforts should be made to exhibit to that whole immense and rapidly increasing population, the religion of the Bible in all its purity and loveliness. Let it be seen by thinking men there, that Christianity is something else than words and forms, and is utterly opposed, as light is to darkness, to all that is so fast driving them in disgust to pronounce the whole a fable" (30).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: missionary work; religion and civilization

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 16)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Dec. 23, 1826

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This article, reprinted from the Christian Watchman, identifies Christianity as the path to civilization.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "O ye orators and philosophers, who make the civilization of the species your dream! look to Christian missionaries if you want to see the men who realize it. You may derk the theme with the praises of your unsubstantial eloquence: but these are the men who are to accomplish the business! They are now risking every earthly comfort of existence n the cause: while you sit in silken security, and pour upon their holy undertaking the cruelty of your scorn" (61).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: missionary work; proselyting

Author: S. Davies, V. D. M.

Title of Book:
Title of Article: "A Sermon preached before the Reverend Presbytery of New-Castle, October 11, 1752. By S. Davies, V. D. M. in Hanover, Virginia"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 24)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Feb. 17, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: The author suggests that ministers are accountable for the souls of their congregations, and that if they are lost, the minister also is lost. This idea is related to the Mormon doctrine of proselyting as salvific. In the Mormon Church, however, every male is a preacher of the gospel, and accountable to God for others' souls.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "Can we behold the impending ruin of thousands, and not exert ourselves to avert it? They are related to us by the most endearing ties, and we are under the strongest obligations to promote their salvation. They share in the same common humanity with us, and are all made of one blood, and the offspring of one common father. They are our general charge as we are ministers of the catholic church; or our particular charge as we are pastors of particular congregations; and we are accountable for their souls; and if, while we are busy here and there, they are gone, and lost, our life shall go for theirs. Or some of them may be united to our hearts by the additional and more tender ties of friendship or relation. And shall they perish, while we carelessly look on?" (96).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages): 1
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: 1

Topics: money digging, working with the rod
Author:
Title of Book: "Money Diggers"
Title of Article: "Money Diggers"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 46)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jul. 20, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: I have excerpted this article, reprinted from the Montpelier, (Vt.) Watchman in its entirety. This article, which seems sarcastic in its tone (since Methodists champion industry and frugality and denounce lotteries and gaming, it seems incredible that they should support money digging) states that money digging has been practiced since the days of Adam, and that it is done now, by even respectable men, with great success. The article offers several money digging tips.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Every country has its money diggers, who are full in belief that vast treasures lay concealed in the earth. So far from being a new project, it dates its origin with the first man who ever wielded a spade. 'Tis as old as Adam. Even in these latter days, we find men so much in love with the 'root of all evil,' and so firm in the belief that it may be dug up, that they may traverse hill and dale, climb the loftiest mountain, and even work their way into the bowels of the earth in search of it. Indeed digging for money hid in the earth, is a very common thing; and in this State it is even considered an honourable and profitable employment. We could name if we pleased, at least five-hundred respectable men, who do, in the simplicity and sincerity of their hearts, verily believe that immense treasures lay concealed upon our Green Mountains, many of whom have been industriously and perseveringly engaged in digging it up. Some of them have succeeded even beyond their expectations. One gentleman in Parkerstown, on the summit of the mountain, after digging with unyielding confidence and unabated diligence, for ten or twelve years, found a sufficient quantity of money to build him a commodious house for his own convenience, and to fill it with comforts for the weary traveller. On stopping lately to refresh, we were delighted by the view of an anchor on the sign, emblematical of his hope of success, while we left him industriously digging for more. Another gentleman on Lake Champlain, we were credibly informed, has actually dug up the enormous sum of fifty thousand dollars!!! The incredulous and unbelieving may stare at this assertion, but it is nevertheless true; and we do not hesitate to declare our belief that digging for money is the most certain way of obtaining it.--Much, however, depends on the skilful [sic] use of the genuine mineral rod. Don't dig too deep, is an appropriate maxim with all those who are versed in the art. Wood's Iron Plough, skilfully guided, is sure to break the enchantment, and turn up the glittering dust in every furrow. Countless treasures yet remain in the earth. Speed the plough--play the hoe--'twill all come to light.

P. S. The best time for digging money, is early in the morning, while the dew is on"

(180).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pars.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 13, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: This observation, made in a letter from the superintendent of an Indian Mission in Upper Canada, seems to be offered in passing as an item of general interest, not as a discovery of great religious significance.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "I cannot forbear saying that brother Ryerson, at the River Credit, is making progress in the knowledge of the Chippewa. He has advanced far enough to ascertain that the structure of the language bears a resemblance to the Hebrew" (73).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 sen.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: New Scripture, corruption of biblical text; Primitive Church
Author: Dr. Adam Clarke
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Dr. Adam Clarke"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 10)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Nov. 11, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: In this article Dr. Clarke summarizes his work The Commentary on all the Holy Scriptures and explains the reasons why its publication has taken so long. I include this excerpt because it is a rare discussion (in this periodical) of the purity of the Bible.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "My education and habits from early youth led me to read and study the Bible, not as a text-book to confirm the articles of a preconceived creed, but as a revelation from God to man, (of his will and purposes, in reference to the origin and designation of his human offspring,) which it was the duty and interest of all the inhabitants of the earth, deeply to study, and earnestly to endeavour to understand; as it concerned their peace and happiness, and the perfection of their being in reference to both worlds."
Conscious that translators in general must have had a particular creed, in reference to which they would naturally consider every text; and this reference, however honestly intended, might lead them to glosses not always fairly deducible from the original words, I sat down with a heart as free from bias and sectarian feeling as possible, and carefully read over, cautiously weighed, and literally translated, every word, Hebrew and Chaldee, in the Old Testament" (38).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pars.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: New Scripture; revelation; sectarian strife; one true church; last days, preparation of the earth and preceding events

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 4)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Oct. 1830

Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This review (serialized in the July and October issues) praises the book's author and summarizes its arguments. This apologetic theological work is probably by a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in England. In this excerpt, the author asserts that the Bible is all-sufficient, and that every person should interpret it for himself, but that the Holy Spirit is necessary if all are to interpret it truthfully and with unity. By using the phrase "new creation," the author seems to suggest that the circulation of the Scriptures, along with the effusion of the Holy Spirit, would make this world into a paradise, would perhaps even bring the millennium. The decline of theological wars is given as evidence that there is a "more general effusion of the Holy Ghost upon the faithful."

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Temperate and candid discussion, in which our object is to ascertain the real meaning of the word of God, cannot fail to elicit truth, and, ultimately, to secure unity of sentiment. That word was certainly not thrown into our world as an apple of discord, but graciously given to us as a bond of union. Sound Protestants neither can wish it out of the way, for the sake of peace; nor do they sigh for any infallible interpreter to fix its meaning for them. As it is manifestly the will of God, so it is no doubt best, that every man should exercise his own mind and judgment in the examination of its contents. . . . We have no fears as to the result of a universal circulation of the Scriptures without note or comment, and of the most free discussions of their contents by men of all ranks and characters. For although individuals may pervert them, and infidels may contradict and blaspheme their doctrines; when once the Holy Spirit of truth and love shall cause the plastic energy of that great instrument of the world's renovation fully to act on the whole mass of human intellect and moral agency, light shall arise out of darkness, order shall spring from the confusion, and all the beauty of holiness shall beam forth from every part of the new creation" (373).

"Independent of the direct operation of those noble and truly catholic institutions, whose object is to give the pure word of God to all men in the languages intelligible to them respectively, they have done much, indirectly, to impress upon the minds of all, who have in any way engaged to carry their plans into effect, a deep and operative conviction of the sufficiency of the Scriptures to make men wise to salvation, if they will read them with proper attention. This, we are persuaded, has been one very principal cause of the peace and harmony which at present increasingly prevail among us. Hence our every day theology has assumed a character, both as to sentiments and language, much more free from party distinctions than that of former times.----This is a pleasing proof of a more general effusion of the Holy Ghost upon the faithful; and an earnest of that most desirable state of the church, when all her children shall be so fully 'taught of the Lord,' as to be led to speak the same thing; and when there shall be no more divisions among them, but all shall be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment.

At a time when nearly all our theological wars have died away, and the activities of Christian benevolence will scarcely allow us time to reflect on our remaining differences of opinion, we feel reluctant to do any thing that would revive th recollection of the tumults formerly excited by the bitter disputes which were maintained, and to so little purpose, on 'the five points" (374).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pars.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: one true church

Author: President Dwight

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Believers one in Christ"
"All real Christians belong to Christ, and were chosen in him before the foundation of the world, that they should be holy, and without blame before him in love. . . . In this world they are often hidden from each other; are separated by different names, forms of worship and modes of discipline: and unhappily are in many instances, and in greater or less degrees, alienated from each other by unworthy and disgraceful contentions. . . . 'Behold,' saith the Lord God, 'I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people; and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and shall carry thy daughters upon their shoulders. And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and queens thy nursing mothers.' All these, strangers as they are to Zion, are still her children: and, however separated by distance, concealed by mutual ignorance, or arrayed against each other by unkind, uncharitable thoughts, are really, and will ultimately appear to be, possessed of one character. They will also constitute one visible church; having one Lord, one faith, and one baptism. Th system of truth revealed in the gospel, is one: the church formed by it, is one; and the scheme of worship, enjoined in it, is the same. He, whose eye seeth not as man seeth, discerns this now, with absolute certainty; and distinguishes every one of his children with an intuition, which cannot err, amid all the varieties of name and character, which they assume, and the biasses [sic], errors, and oppositions, by which they are often concealed from each other. -- The time will come, when among all, who have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him, who created him, there will be neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, barbarian nor Scythian, bond nor free: but Christ will be all and in all" (81).
“The work of a bishop requires his undivided attention. Speculating and worldly ministers are a reproach to the Christian name. Hence the apostle, after having exhorted Timothy to the observance of certain duties, observes, 'Meditate on these things; give thyself wholly to them, that they profiting may appear unto all.' It is impossible for a minister to be of the same service to the church whose attention is divided between the church and the world; and it is believed that if churches studied their own souls' good, and the good of the cause generally, they would to the utmost of their ability disengage their ministers from the cares and perplexities of the world. Churches should do all they can for the support of the minister, and the minister should study economy, and put them to no unnecessary and unreasonable expense; and if any professing to be called of God to preach the gospel, will not give themselves wholly and exclusively to the work of a bishop, when the church will enable them to do so but will still give themselves in part to the world, they should be dismissed as no longer worthy to have the oversight of the flock of God. What! shall a man who professes to watch for the souls as one that must give account, enter into the grovelling speculations of this fading world?—Never, never" (208).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Author: Peter Collins
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: After two people celebrate their favorite ministers (the first person's speech is the main content of the excerpt), which tries the patience of the author of the article, an old member of the Methodist Episcopal Church expresses the qualities of a truly good minister (the two ministers described at the beginning of the article possess those attributes which contrast with those outlined by the old member). Thus, the minister who proposed inhabitants on other worlds is an object of scorn.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "But to me it appears very possible for men to dream when they are broad awake. This I am sure has happened to me more than once. The following is an imperfect dream of this nature.

"'Well, well,' said one of the motley group, 'you are at liberty to hear what ministers you please, and to call them the best of preachers; but give me Dominie . He is my darling. Oh, if you had but heard him last Sunday upon the solar system, you would have been delighted. He said the sun was a huge globe of fire 957,942 miles diameter, and about a million times larger than our earth; with a great deal more upon that subject which my memory has not retained. One or two observations I cannot forget. He said the moon and planets, he had no doubt, were fellow worlds with ours, and that they were inhabited. This immediately gave me light into one of the mysteries of the New Testament; and I am now sure that our Saviour alluded to them when he said,-- 'In my Father's house are many mansions,' John xiv, 2.

"This ludicrous comment excited such a peal of laughter, that he sat down quite confounded" (164).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: preparation of the earth and preceding events, Second Coming; missionary work; Ten Tribes, Native Americans as Israel; religion and civilization

Author: Dr. John W. Monett

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Address"

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 21)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Jan. 27, 1827

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This address, delivered before the annual meeting of the Mississippi Conference Missionary Society, is well worth reading in its entirety. It provides a well-developed narrative on world events in the context of missionary work. For the author, missionary work is an essential part of true Christianity, and the conversion and civilization of the world are inextricable. In his report of the missions among the Jews, in Africa, in the South Seas, among the Indians, in "our own settlements" in New Orleans and Pensacola, except for the Jews and Americans, the unconverted are described in the most racist way, with constant reference to their barbarity and lack of civilization. At the end of the address, when the author envisions the future conversion of the entire world, the Indians seem to be identified as the lost ten tribes, and there is a slight sense of gathering.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "As my worthy friend, who has just preceded me, has remarked, the design of missions and of missionary societies is the conversion of heathen and idolatrous tribes of the human family, to the knowledge and practice of the doctrines of the Christian religion: a design in itself at once benevolent and grand. A work which the divine author of our religion not only sanctions and commands, but which he declares must take place before the end of the world.

"As an example for us, Christ was himself the first missionary of his own gospel; and after him the apostles, in the strictest sense, were missionaries to all the nations of the earth then known. . . .

"After the first ages of Christianity, its doctrines, in the church of Rome, became corrupt and perverted; and the labours of missionaries were few; unless we admit those under papal authority; which was maintained by the terror of the inquisition. But when, in the beginning of the sixteenth century, the reformation began to spread throughout Europe, papal errors were exposed, and Christianity set forth in its proper character. Then it was, that the labours of Protestant missions commenced, and were extended to various parts of the world. But it was reserved to later years for the more extensive diffusion of the Christian religion.

"Within a few years missions and missionary societies have multiplied astonishingly, both in Europe and America, among the followers of each reformer, without distinction. . . . Sir, I deem this a happy era; when the increase of human knowledge has enabled us, not only to found a government, where we can each enjoy, without molestation, the benefits of Christianity at home; but likewise to traverse the boundless seas, explore the most distant corners of the globe, and extend 'the knowledge of God to the very ends of the earth.'

"The deplorable condition of the greatest portion of the heathen is sufficient to excite the feelings of every enlightened being: enveloped in ignorance, superstition, idolatry, they neither enjoy the benefits of this life, nor the hope of that to come. . . . To evangelize the world by missionary labours, may seem to some a work beyond the compass of human power:--without divine aid, it certainly would be. But with the assistance of God, it may be done; it will be done. . . . Even the degraded Hottentot is becoming humanized, civilized, and Christianized under this sacred influence. . . .
"And if not we ourselves, our children may see the time when Christianity shall prevail, 'and cover the earth, as the waters cover the great deep':--. . .and when the ten long lost tribes of Israel, who for ages have been roving through the immense forests of America, persecuted and hunted for their blood, shall return home, and be united with their brethren in one faith and one hope. . . .These are some of the results to be expected from missionary labours in those distant barbarous climes" (81).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages): 81

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: principles of church government

Author:

Title of Book: "The Christian Spectator"

Title of Article: The Christian Spectator

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 1)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Jan. 1830

Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This article defends the Methodist Church against accusations made in the Christian Spectator in its "offensive article" entitled "Review on the Economy of Methodism." The author questions the motives for and the foundations of the Christian Spectator's representations of the Methodist Church as a dangerous cheat. For the author, the ideas that the bishops control temporal affairs and that the people have no voice in the church government are scandalizing and must be refuted.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "They assert that 'the bishops and preachers have nearly if not quite the entire control, not only of the spiritual, but also of the temporal concerns of the church.' Mr. Barber, if not his warranters, ought surely to have know that this is untrue. The representation in the same paragraph also, that 'whoever the bishop sends, [the people] must receive, however much they dislike him, or however incompetent he may be to perform the duties of his office,' in connexion with the preceding assertion, is artfully pected to make an unjust impression. . . . The preachers also have no choice of stations. And as the people know that the various places cannot always have such as they might think the best preachers, so the preachers know that they cannot always go to such as they might think the best appointments. In a word, there is no bargaining for 'calls;'-- nor any buying or selling out. Both the preachers and the people agree, that a third party-
-the bishops,--(who have, as they mutually believe, the good of all in view,) shall make the appointments. And although, in the abstract theory, and by mutual accord, the preachers go where they are sent, and the people receive those sent to them, yet, in the practical operation, it is perfectly well know that they are at full liberty to make their representations in regard to the appointments; and that these representations are always respectfully considered, and if practicable attended to, so far as they can be harmonized with each other, and with the general interest" (109).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pars.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: principles of church government
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Review. Theological Institutes: or a View of the Evidences, Doctrines, Morals, and Institutions of Christianity. By Richard Watson. First American, from the second London edition. Three volumes octavo, pp. 1480. New-York, Published by J.
Emory & B. Waugh, (late N. Bangs & J. Emory,) for the Methodist Episcopal Church, at the Conference Office, 14 Crosby-street."
Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 4)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Oct. 1830
Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.
Comment: This review (serialized in the July and October issues) praises the book's author and summarizes its arguments. This apologetic theological work is probably by a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in England. This passage argues that the principles of church government should be based upon the New Testament. Watson states several of these specific principles based upon New Testament scriptures.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "No precise system of ecclesiastical government, he contends, is laid down in the New Testament, as binding upon Christians; but certain offices are there specified which ought ever to be maintained; and principles relative to the discipline of the church are laid down, which it is left to the wisdom and piety of Christians to apply, and practically exemplify, under all providential circumstances, till the end of time. The following admirable paragraph concludes the chapter on this subject; the whole of which is entitled to more than ordinary attention:--

"However difficult it may be, in some cases, to adjust modes of church government, so that, in the view of all, the principles of the New Testament may be fully recognised, and the end for which churches are collected may be effectually accomplished, this labour will always be greatly smoothed by a steady regard, on each side, to duties, as well as to rights. These are equally imperative upon ministers, upon subordinate officers, and upon the private members of every church. Charity, candour, humility, public spirit, zeal, a forgiving spirit, and the desire, the strong desire, of unity and harmony, ought to pervade all; as well as a constant remembrance of that great and solemn truth, that Christ is the Judge, as well as the Saviour, of his churches. Whilst the people are docile, obedient to the word of exhortation; willing to submit, "in the Lord," to those who "preside over them," and are charged to exercise Christ's discipline; and whilst ministers are "gentle among them," after the example of St. Paul; a gentleness, however, which, in his case, winked at no evil, and kept back no truth, and compromised no principle, and spared no obstinate and incurable offender; whilst they feed the flock of Christ with sound doctrine, and are intent upon their edification, watching over them "as they that must give account," and study, live, and labour for no other ends, than to present that part of the church committed to their care, "perfect in Christ Jesus;" every church will fall, as ti were, naturally, and without effort, into its proper "order." Pure and undefiled religion in churches, like the first poetry, creates those subordinate rules by which it is afterwards guarded and governed; and the best canons of both are those which are dictated by the fresh and primitive effusions of their own inspiration.'--(p. 354)" (391).

Length of Relevant Material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: principles of church government; lay priesthood and preaching; one true church

Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "A Review Of the 'Conventional Articles for the Associated Methodist Churches'; agreed upon in a Convention held in the city of Baltimore, November 12, 1828."

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 2)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Apr. 1830
Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assaults, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This article from "The Itinerant, or Wesleyan Methodist Visiter [sic]" is by "an able local minister." In his discussion of the reformers' Conventional articles the author addresses many issues regarding church government: the right to form a sect, the differences between religious and civil governments, authority, church discipline and the areas in which the church should have jurisdiction, the admittance of new members, the selection of class leaders, the appointment of itinerant ministers, plurality of forms of church government, the individual callings of the denominations, the right to preach the gospel, and representation in Conferences. The author takes issue with many particular "defects" of the articles of the new association, and, in the process, reveals fundamental attitudes and assumptions of the Methodist Episcopal Church regarding church government.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "The right of any body of Christians to form a constitution, and establish themselves as a separate and distinct sect, provided they keep within the limits prescribed in the great charter of our Christian privileges contained in the Holy Scriptures, we will not attempt to controvert. And although separation from the fellowship of a church, which we have voluntarily joined, is not a light matter, yet, whenever any number of Christians conscientiously believe that by such a secession they will be able to do more for the glory of God and the salvation of themselves and others, than they can effect by retaining their membership in the church to which they belong, they are bound to secede. In doing this, however, they ought to be careful to give no unnecessary offence to others" (163).

"The General Conference, at its last session, formally and explicitly disavowed any claim of right to legislate for the church, in the proper and strict sense of that term. They avow that the laws for the government of Christians have been made by the great Head of the church himself" (164).

"Before we proceed to a regular review of the articles, we beg leave to introduce one of them, which, as a sweeping provision covering all the rest, we cannot postpone. . . . We allude to the fifteenth article,--which reads in the latest edition as follows:"

"'Nothing contained in these articles shall be so construed as to interfere with the right of property belonging to any member of this association, as recognised by the laws of the state, within the limits of which the member may reside.' . . . Cases innumerable may be supposed by our readers, in which this article would compel the church to sanction fraud and injustice. . . . Again, by this article, a member may hold and possess any species of property, however inconsistent with good morals the participation in such property may be. . . . We are ready to concede that in our efforts to procure the emancipation of slaves, and in enforcing it by church discipline, much circumspection and prudence ought to be used. . . . The seceders from our Church have, by acknowledging a right of property in slaves, and forbidding any interference with such rights, given up the principle upon which any future efforts might be based to do away the evil" (165-167).

"The change proposed by the second article, in the mode of admitting members into the church, we deem inexpedient for several reasons. We have known no society or church, in which all the members were qualified to decide in such matters, in all cases. . . . The reception of the applicant would have to be decided by votes, not weighed, but counted.
. . . In such cases, what strife and contention would be engendered, and what schisms would be created, by the disappointed ambition of rival candidates, when they failed to procure the admission of their friends and supporters. . . .

"Under our regulations, the preacher in charge admits upon trial, and after a probation of six months, if the class leader, whose business it is to make himself acquainted with the moral character and Christian experience of the candidate, be free to recommend him as one who continues to evidence his desire of salvation by an upright life and Christian conversation, he is admitted into full membership. . . . In this process there is no unnecessary exposure of faults or failings, even in reference to those who are not received into the Church. The select body of leaders alone hear the objections, and if any injury is done to the reputation of those who have been refused admission, it is known only to those, whose official standing in the Church is a guarantee for their prudence" (170-172).

"The second article [of the reformers] says, 'Each society or church shall have the sole power to admit serious persons into full membership.' . . . In short, the change is one very well calculated to catch those who are willing enough to acquire the reputation of being Christians, provided it can be had without sacrifices which Christianity requires. . . . But Methodism will cease to be a blessing to the world, whenever the Methodists receive and retain among them those who are too rich, too honorable, or too full of worldly wisdom, to submit to the discipline of the Church. Both our prosperity and usefulness depend upon our steadfastly adhering to our original conditions of membership,— 'a desire to flee from the wrath to come, and to be saved from their sins;' and the giving evidence of their desire of salvation, by an upright walk and a Christian conversation, as is more fully expressed in our general rules" (175).

"The appointment of the class leaders, so necessary to the pastors in fulfilling the duties imposed by their commission to feed the flock of Christ, has been, of course, given to the preachers in charge of circuits and stations, who are chiefly responsible to God for the souls committed to their care. . . . Into these spiritual associations, those soul-cementing little bands, it is proposed by the new system of government to introduce the demon of discord, by an annually contested election for class leaders. Every class is to be converted into an arena for contending partisans, and it requires little sagacity, and less Christian experience, to anticipate the result. . . . it is moreover founded in the absurd supposition, that all who enter our Church, come into it fully prepared to judge of the qualifications necessary to those who are to be charged with their instruction, in all the doctrines and duties of holiness" (181).
"The leading objection which, from the beginning, has been urged against the innovations proposed in our ecclesiastical polity, is, that the changes, if made, would destroy our itinerant system, and eventually produce in its stead a congregational system, or some other plan of government recognising a settled pastoral ministry. . . . Our travelling preachers submit to the appointment of the bishops, . . . to those who, having participated and continuing to participate with them in their labours and privations, have entitled themselves to their confidence; and who, partaking of the common suffering, and devoted to the common cause, have no local interests to subserve, and no private ends to gratify. . . . But under the new system, the local preachers and laity, who make up a very large majority of the annual conferences, are to make preachers' appointments, either in the collective body, or in such other way as they may direct; and in whatever way this may be done, the travelling preachers, constituting a feeble minority in the conference, can make no resistance to the absolute domination of the laity and local preachers. . . . in short [the itinerant preachers] will be reduced to the simple condition of domestic missionaries,--doing whatever duty their task masters may assign them, and that too without any stipulated compensation" (181-182).
"We entertain no hostility to congregational church government, nor to any other system of ecclesiastical polity, which provides for and supports a settled ministry for those who choose it. . . . Perhaps the great Head of the Church has permitted us thus to differ in things indifferent, for the purpose of multiplying effort, and varying the means of spreading the gospel. . . . The circumstances of our origin, and our whole history, clearly point to an itinerant system of ministration as our particular calling. This appears to be the portion of labour which has been assigned by the Lord of the vineyard to us as a people. . . . Our whole system is essentially a missionary one, proposing to furnish an evangelical ministry,--not only to those who desire it, but to those who are too ignorant to know the value of the privilege, and therefore cannot be expected to ask for such services" (185-186).
"It was not indeed expected that the new system would recognise in the people, that is in the membership, a common right to preach the gospel, because the framers of it had all along admitted that this right could only be conferred by divine authority" (187).
"We know that the General Conference have anxiously desired to improve that part of our discipline which relates to the trial of offending members, and have had under their consideration at different times a variety of propositions to this effect" (194).

Length of Relevant Material: 36 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): (162-197)?
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.' 2. 'Remarks on a Report of the late General Conference, in reply to Petitions and Memorials. By Asa Shinn.'

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 1)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Jan. 1830

Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This article is dedicated to refuting the claims and arguments made by Rev. Asa Shinn and other "reformers." The author discusses issues of church government and church disciplining of those who criticize the church polity and government. In advocating Episcopalianism rather than congregationalism the author addresses the differences between civil and religious government and the necessary division of church and state.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "But we do maintain that there are clear and important points of difference between civil and religious communities. In the latter, to which alone our remarks refer, the charter of our rights, which is also the rule of our duties, is already fixed, by one only supreme and common power; and neither the ministry nor the laity, nor both combined, either have or can have any power to alter it. The admission of a contrary principle would be one of the most dangerous to liberty that could well be devised. By denying that there is any 'legislative' power, properly, in the Christian church, the Report disposes at once of all the abstract theories on which so much declamatory sophistry has been founded, respecting a right to representation in the 'law making' department. If such a one existed, in which the right to lay taxes, and to compel obedience, would necessarily be implied, the Report admits, unequivocally, that the right of direct representation in it would indisputably follow. But such a one neither exists, nor, on our part, is claimed; and consequently, on this ground at least, from any analogy to the principles of civil legislation, the right cannot follow. And we propose to our opponents, who urge this matter with so much vehemence, the task of showing an instance in the primitive church, of any such thing as either a delegation of church power, or of any assembly or convention of representatives or delegates, for the establishment of 'constitutions,' and the enacting of 'laws'" (41).

"Those who wish to enlist the corrupt passions of fallen nature against the ministry, may make a jest of 'divinely instituted,' and 'divinely authorized;' but we did not expect Mr.
Shinn to descend to so 'low' a 'stratagem.' . . . And if those who style themselves 'reformers,' mean to deny any divine call of the Christian ministry to the discharge of the peculiar functions of their office, let them speak out and say so, and let the people understand it. This will draw between us at once a fairer line of distinction than has ever yet been drawn.

"It has been boldly propagated, indeed, that we deny that the people have any rights; and that we assert a divine right to govern them without control. It would have been a shorter course, and more effectual to render us odious, if believed, to allege at once that we deny that the people have any souls . . . . Those who are influenced by an unbiased love of truth cannot fail to notice, that the Report, on the question of 'right,' confines itself to the right of the claimants to demand a place in the General Conference" (42).

"That the Methodist ministry will always be found desirous to gratify every reasonable wish of the members, when satisfactorily expressed, we think there can be as little doubt; for their true interests, as we shall presently show, are in fact identical" (43).

"That the General Conference has 'no strictly legislative powers,'-- that it has no authority to enact any 'laws to affect either life or limb, to touch the persons, or to tax the property, of our members;'-- and that if it either exercised, or claimed to exercise, any such authority, 'our members ought, unquestionable, to be directly represented" (46).

"If the ministry indeed possessed, and could maintain, the civil and military powers of the state, there would be just ground of alarm. But, were they even desirous of such power, who is to give it to them, if the people do not? And is there any danger that the people will do it? The continual harping on this topic, in this age, and in this country, is really too ridiculous for serious notice" (61).

"Whatever danger of a union of church and state may ever exist in this country, we again say, in the language of the Report, the most likely course, in our judgment, for effecting such an amalgamation, would be the conforming the government of the church to that of the state, rather than the course of denying any relationship between them, and maintaining the two jurisdictions on their peculiarly distinctive bases. . . . On a strict examination of the ecclesiastical records of Christendom, we believe it will be found that the union of the laity with the ministry, in ecclesiastical 'legislation,' (with the necessarily resulting powers,) has been the chief cause, wherever it has occurred, of the deterioration of the ministry" (footnote on p. 62).
The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assaults, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This very extensive article (serialized in three issues) defends the Methodist Church against the criticism of Mr. M'Caine as set forth in the pamphlet "History and Mystery." It addresses the topics of Episcopacy, succession, Mr. Wesley's opinion on church and government, ordination, the creation of the American Methodist Church, and the characters, opinions and ordinations of Dr. Coke and Bishop Asbury. The established Methodist Church uses the Primitive Church of the New Testament and Mr. Wesley's opinions as justification for its form of church government, but also feels obligated to contest accusations that it is undemocratic, un-republican, and un-American. Thus, the author emphasizes the people's support of the system and the influence of the people's voice within the system as further validation of the church government; he also asserts that the powers of the church government are limited.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "The only ecclesiastical history on which certain dependence can be placed, is that which is contained in the Holy Scriptures. And there we find no specific form of church polity, either prescribed, or even uniformly acted on. How is it possible, then, that his subject can be one of such vital importance, and of such all absorbing interest, as some of our opponents would have it? For it is on this point alone that they profess to differ from us,--and yet think this difference sufficient to justify the severance of the dearest and most sacred ties!" (69).

"The 'tendency' of 'power,' in itself, is 'to accumulation;' and it ought to be guarded. I have said nothing inconsistent with this in the 'Defence of our Fathers,' or anywhere else. On the contrary, I have specifically shown, under its appropriate head in that work, that the 'Methodist Episcopacy,' properly understood, and as originally constituted, is one of very limited and dependent powers. . . .We should be happy now to learn where, in 'ancient ecclesiastical usage,' in the apostolical age, or near it, he has discovered the pattern of a convention of the clerical and lay delegates of associated churches, annually electing an ecclesiastical 'president,' of a state or province?" (79).

"He had charged us with a high Church Episcopacy. This we disavow. 'Others' have attacked us on the opposite ground, and denied that we have any valid Episcopacy, or valid orders, at all" (80).
"I introduced Mr. Wesley's opinion to show, what it incontestably does show, that he believed 'the Episcopal form of church government to be Scriptural and apostolical;'--that he was, nevertheless, 'decidedly against the high church pretensions.' . . . The Methodist Episcopal Church not only admits, but asserts and maintains, and always has done so, that bishops and presbyters are inherently and essentially the same order. Its Episcopacy was originally and avowedly instituted, and still rests, on this very principle. But we assert, at the same time, that this original equality does not render it unlawful for the body of presbyters, in circumstances which appear to them to render it expedient, to delegate to one of their order, a more extensive exercise of the power of oversight;--or to commit to some, as the organs of the body, a larger executive part of that power, which originally and fundamentally was common to them all. This is Methodist Episcopacy" (81-82).

"As far as human discernment can extend, there is satisfactory reason to believe that the acts of our Fathers, in that day at least, had the triple sanction of the preachers, of the people, and of God. . . . From that day to this the people have continued satisfied. And by refusing to abandon the system, or to ask its abolition, do most substantially and effectively continue to it the seal of their approbation. It is not the people that complain; unless a most minute fraction can be called the people. The people are with us" (88).

"It was the chief cause of the decline of religion among the latter Puritans: their lay elders assumed, after some time, the whole authority. From this proceeded that worldly spirit and political zeal which so greatly dishonored that work in its last days; and which had previously overthrown both church and state. . . . [Mr. Wesley] became, therefore, every day more solicitous to provide for their unity and permanency after his decease, wishing to preserve at the same time the original doctrines and economy of the Methodists. From the beginning he had stood at the head of the connexion, and by the general suffrage had acted as a father in matters relating to the government of the societies. He had often found that all his authority was necessary in order to unanimity, and he wished that authority to be continued' [quoted from Mr. Moore's Life of Wesley]" (208-209).

Length of Relevant Material: 15 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: race; missionary work; redemption; judgment; Second Coming Author: John Harper
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Aborigines of Australia: December 12"
Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 9)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Nov. 4, 1826
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This article, reprinted from the Sydney Gazette, consists of extracts from the letters of John Harper, a young man on a Wesleyan mission to the aboriginal tribes in Australia. Although Harper continually depicts the unconverted blacks as childlike, unsophisticated, depraved, and wretched, he also believes that the blacks have immortal souls and is quick to praise the black converts.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Whenever I look at a black, however deformed his outward tabernacle may be, I feel for the immortal spirit that inhabits it. If without holiness no man shall see the Lord, what becomes of these poor creatures when they are launched into the unfathomable gulf! Certainly to whom little is given, from such little can be required; but if that little is not improved, how awful must it be for them! The promise of God is a rock on which my faith relies. Jesus shall have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. But the work will not allow of any procrastination on our part. May all Christians become co-workers with God in saving souls, and ushering in the Messiah's kingdom, which shall never have an end" (34).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

 researching...

Topics: religion and civilization; women's role

Author: Rev. Jos. Muenscher

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Female Education"

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, Nos. 38 and 39)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: May 26, 1827; Jun. 2, 1827

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This address (printed serially in two issues), delivered at the inauguration of two reverends as instructors in the Female Classical Seminary in Massachusetts, advocates equal education for females, asserting that women have the same intellectual capabilities as men. The author also states that Christianity, in contrast with other religions, has elevated the character and position of women. He suggests that without education a woman cannot be "brought to perfection," or to "the end of her being." He closes his ardent endorsement by citing the important influence women have over society in general (especially men) and over children as mothers and teachers as reasons for female education.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "Among the numerous arguments that have been adduced in proof of the divinity and unrivalled excellence of the Christian religion, there is one which, independent of every other consideration, is sufficient to command for it our love and veneration, and to awaken our gratitude to the Father of mercies for this his unspeakable gift. I refer to the influence it has exerted in purifying and exalting the social, moral, and intellectual character of woman, and in raising her to that elevated rank in society to which the native qualities of her mind and heart pre-eminently entitle her. All other religions have exerted a pernicious influence in degrading the moral character and social relation of the female sex. . . . Where the light of pure Christianity has not shone, where the moral influence of the gospel is not felt, females are regarded as destitute of all capacity for intellectual improvement, and are deprived of the most powerful and indeed the only incentive to moral culture, from the prevalence of the absurd and pernicious opinion, that the God of nature has not blessed them with an immortal mind. They are consequently looked upon as designed merely to be the domestic slaves of man. . . . Christianity, on the contrary, teaches us, that women posses immortal minds which are capable of the highest degree of literary, no less than of moral improvement. It has assigned to them their proper sphere and their appropriate duties in society. It has taught us that woman was created to be the companion, not the slave of man;--that in the most important respects she is his equal, not his inferior. . . . But let her possess a spotless and unsuspected character;--"let the fear of God and the love of Jesus Christ control her domestic virtues; let the humility, patience, faith, hope, charity and resignation of the gospel become interwoven with [sic] her personal accomplishments, and sweeten and govern her conduct, and how lovely is such a woman!"

"God has also endowed woman with intellectual faculties in no degree inferior to those of the other sex. These faculties were not given her to be buried in obscurity, but to be expanded and cultivated, and brought to perfection. She, therefore, who neglects to cultivate the powers of her mind, fails to accomplish, in a very important respect, the end of her being. But this object can be effected only by the diligent prosecution of the same studies which are found necessary to the mental discipline of the other sex. Females are entitled to the same facilities for the acquisition of knowledge, that are so liberally afforded to males; and the strongest incitements should be held out to them to rise higher and higher in the scale of intellectual excellence. . . . Education is the handmaid of religion. . . . While the fingers are instructed to play with skill, and the voice to sing melodiously, and the limbs to move with grace and elegance, let the mind be taught to think and reason accurately, and clearly, and deeply: and let it be liberally furnished with the treasures of wisdom and knowledge" (152).

"The female sex exert a predominating and uncontrollable influence over human society. Although the eloquence of woman is not heard in the pulpit or at the bar, it is heard and felt in the social circle. There her influence is scarce less supreme than in the empire of fashion. It is this influence which affords another consideration in favour of high intellectual attainments in females. Let them possess these, and a corresponding improvement may be expected in the other sex--the conversation in social circles would assume a more rational, instructive, and dignified character--female worth would be more deeply felt and readily acknowledged, and a new and powerful impulse would be given to the human mind in its progress towards perfection."
"But it is to the rising generation we are to look for the full effects which would result from a systematic and extensive course of female education. There is no relation in life more important or more responsible than that of a mother. 'To her is committed the immortal treasure of the infant mind.' . . . The importance of extensive intellectual acquirements in females will further appear, if we look at them in the character and relation of professed teachers of youth. It is well known that most of our primary schools are taught at least part of the year, by females. There is consequently a great demand for competent female instruction. In the school room the influence exerted by females is scarcely less felt than in the domestic circle" (153).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Excerpt (pages): "Instead of being bound, as the writer of them supposes, to exclude all religious considerations in giving his vote upon a subject connected with religion, the representative is undoubtedly bound on that, and on every other occasion, whether of a public or private character, to act under the influence of religious considerations. 'Whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do,' we are directed in Scripture to 'do all to the praise and glory of God.' It is expressly enjoined on rulers in particular, to govern in the fear of the Lord. It is in fact the peculiar virtue of religion, as a motive of action, that it is applicable on every occasion, and to every part of conduct. It is one branch of our religious duty to obey the constitution and laws of the land; and if the constitution prohibit the establishment of a national church, it is the religious duty of a representative, even though he individually prefer an establishment, to vote against any project of the kind, until the prohibition in the constitution be repealed; but even in voting against an establishment, he is or ought to be as much influenced by religious considerations, as if he voted in favor of it. It is impossible, in short, to conceive a case, either in public or private life, in which it is not the duty of every member of the community to act under the influence of religious motives; and in proportion as an individual is more completely influenced by such motives to the exclusion of any others, which have their origin in mere expediency, so much the more probable is it that he will avoid error, and render himself acceptable to the Great Judge, to whom he is ultimately to give an account of the deeds done in the body.

"The assertion, that the union of church and state consists in being influenced in the exercise of temporal power by religious belief, seems to argue a great looseness of ideas upon the whole subject. The being influenced in the exercise of temporal power by religious belief is a particular state of mind, or, if habitual, a particular trait of character in individuals;--the union of church and state is a form of political institutions. . . . If the remark alluded to be merely--as is probable enough--an incorrect mode of expressing the idea that a disposition in individuals to act from religious motives has a tendency to bring about a union of church and state, the objection is rather more intelligible, though not much better founded than on the other construction. Religious motives are, as we have shown, the best under which we can possible act, and tend of course to produce the best possible results. If one of these results be the union of church and state, it could only be because this union is the best of all possible modes of regulating the relations between religious and government. . . . If a union of church and state be, as is generally supposed, and as the committee appear to think, a dangerous institution, it is certain that the surest way of steering clear of it, is for the public agents to act in all cases to the best of their ability on the best and purest motives, which are, undoubtedly, the fear of God and the honest intention to do his will. The moment you allow any weight to considerations of mere expediency in opposition to these, you open a door to corruptions of every kind, which are the more likely to gain admittance in proportion as the names they bear are more respectable and plausible. . . . The only sure way of rising above the influence of improper motives, whether absolutely vicious, or only narrow, is to give no weight to any considerations but those of duty, or in other words, religious principle. The individual, whether in public or private life, who pursues this course, is sure of doing right as far as he knows what right is; and we are all but too well aware, that our practical errors are much less frequently the result of not knowing what is right than of a disinclination to do it" (398-400).
Comment: This passage argues that while monarchy generally leads to wickedness, we need not have qualms about having Christ as our king because Christ is divine and perfect. According to the author, even a man in a "glorified state" could not righteously rule because he would have to rely on information from others. I find it interesting that the Methodists never consider anything akin to the prophet-rulers of the Old Testament (e.g., Moses, David) for their earthly political rulers, even though they believe in the possibility of the perfection of man on earth. In Methodist thought, even a perfect man cannot rule a great dominion.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "When we look over the pages of history, we find that kings who ought to have watched over their people with kind solicitude, have often been the cruel oppressors of the defenceless. This has sometimes been caused by their own malicious dispositions, and at other times it may be traced to the advice of wicked counsellors. There seems to be a kind of necessity for the trust that sovereigns repose in their advisers. So various are the concerns of a kingdom that it is impossible for one man to superintend them all in person. Hence he is obliged to rely upon information and advice for the direction of his conduct. Were we disposed to admit the Socinian idea concerning our King, the Lord Jesus Christ, we might fear that he would deal unjustly with us. For if he was nought but a mere man, though in a glorified state, yet he might be incapable of regulating every part of his government for want of knowledge. Limited wisdom would produce necessary dependance; and a sovereign, dependant on his subjects fori information, would be very liable to be misled into acts of cruelty and oppression. But the Bible presents a very different picture. It teaches us to look up to our Jesus as an omniscient and omnipresent God, who searcheth the hearts and trieth the reins of the children of men. No designing minister, no corrupt favorite, is permitted to guide the measures of our beloved King. He sees the situation of every one of his subjects, and knows every circumstance connected with their affairs. Hence the most perfect justice reigns in all the regulations and administration of our glorious Prince" (157).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: revelations; miracles to confirm revelation; magic; corruption of biblical text; religion and civilization; evil spirits

Author:

Title of Periodical: The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review (Vol. 1, No. 3)

Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jul. 1830
Nature of Source: In 1830 The Methodist Magazine (monthly) became The Methodist Magazine and Quarterly Review. The magazine was modeled after the Arminian Magazine of the English Methodists, and published extracts from that magazine and others. Because of the many specific Methodist publications, the format changed in 1830 in order to omit topics of ordinary occurrence and address subjects of a wide and permanent interest at greater length. Theology was to figure prominently, but the magazine continued to include articles of general interest about humanity, morality, literature, and science. Due to a perceived increase in criticism of the Methodist Episcopal Church around 1830 (in large part from the "reformers" who formed the Associated Methodist Church), the magazine also was to now serve to refute assails, correct misinformation published elsewhere, and to vindicate the Methodist Church with respect to polity, discipline, and doctrine. It was edited by John Emory and Beverly Waugh.

Comment: This review (serialized in the July and October issues) praises the book's author and summarizes its arguments. This apologetic theological work is probably by a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in England. The first two paragraphs of the excerpt are the reviewer's summary of the entire work, which provides a glimpse into the arguments and interests of Methodist theology. A very large section of the July article (and of the book, one may assume) is devoted to the miracles and prophecies of the biblical text which provide "indubitable evidence of Divine inspiration." I have excerpted paragraphs which address issues which I consider pertinent: the necessity of revelation (to bring a people out of darkness, whether they once had the truth or not, since knowledge of the divine, once lost, cannot be recovered by the human intellect); perception of the heathen; the inability of evil spirits to perform miracles; Jesus Christ as Jehovah.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Our author enters upon this work by establishing the moral agency of man; and then proceeds to show that the rule which determines the quality of moral actions must be presumed to be matter of revelation from God. In further support of this principle, he argues from the weakness, corruption, and uncertainty of human reason; and from the want of authority in opinions which are destitute of Divine sanction. To this succeeds an inquiry into the origin of those truths which are found in the writings and religious systems of the heathen. The necessity of a revelation is then clearly shown from the state of religious knowledge and of morals among pagans, both in ancient and in modern times; and from a survey of their different systems of religious. The evidences which are necessary to authenticate a revelation are next discussed. These are divided into three classes, the External, the Internal, and the Collateral; each of which is distinctly explained, and its proper rank assigned in this great argument. After these, we have an excellent chapter on the use and limitation of reason in religion.

"Our author proceeds to establish the antiquity of the Holy Scriptures, and to prove their uncorrupted preservation. The credibility of the testimony of the sacred writers is next examined, and their inspiration proved from the miracles they wrought, and the prophecies they delivered; as well as from the peculiar adaptation of Christianity to the state of men, its original propagation and establishment in the world, and its manifest tendency to promote the happiness both of individuals and of nations. [This part of] the work concludes by an answer to miscellaneous objections; especially those which are deduced from the infant science of geology. . . .

"The facts which he has adduced to show the lamentable ignorance of pagan nations on the subject of religion, and their consequent depravity and wretchedness, are peculiarly impressive, and fully demonstrate the necessity of a revelation from God, to guide the feet of his erring and guilty offspring into the way of truth and holiness. Even those broken fragments of truth which lie scattered in pagan literature, Mr. Watson has clearly shown, were not the original discoveries of the men in whose works they were found, nor are they to be attributed to what is called 'the light of nature;' but were derived from those early revelations which were made by God to his chosen people. No proof whatever exists, that, when the knowledge of God and of the nature and sanctions of true religion had become extinct in any nation, such knowledge was ever recovered by the mere efforts of the human intellect; even when that intellect has been the most gigantic, and in the highest state of scientific cultivation" (275-276).

"'Miracles,' it has been urged, 'are no proof of a divine commission, since they have been wrought by diabolical agency; as in the case of the Magicians of Egypt, with whom Moses had to contend,' &c. This objection Mr. Watson has met with consummate ability, and has fully dissipated this subterfuge of unbelief. He has, we think, satisfactorily shown, that no proof exists in the sacred text, that any miracle whatever was performed by the magicians; that least of all was any miracle wrought to disprove the divine mission of Moses; and that, according to the express declarations of Holy Writ, evil spirits are utterly incapable of showing of performing any real miracle, the production of such effects being the exclusive prerogative of God" (280).

"Mr. Watson goes on to examine the mode of the Divine existence, as revealed in the inspired records; from which it is manifest, that God is essentially and unchangeably One. . . . Our attention is next called to the pre-existence of Christ, and then to the more direct proofs of his Divinity. In support of this momentous thesis, Mr. Watson shows that Jesus Christ is the Jehovah of the Old Testament" (300).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: sectarian strife

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Revival in Richmond, Va."

Title of Periodical: The Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 11)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Nov. 18, 1826

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: It is clear from this periodical that the Methodists consider a conversion to any Protestant denomination a success. Occasionally, however, there is a hint of contention with, for example, the Presbyterians, who might be critical of the Methodists' camp-meetings. This excerpt is the most extensive denouncement of sectarian strife that I have come across.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "The writer makes honourable mention of the hearty co-operation of a Presbyterian clergyman, whose example in this instance forms a pleasing contrast to that of some of his brethren in other places. Were all ministers of the gospel, and others whose stations in society give them a commanding influence over the minds of men, to unite their efforts to make converts to Christ, instead of labouring to make proselytes to parties, we should hear more souls 'inquiring the way to Zion,' and see less of that jarring and contention among brethren, which constitute the ground of reproach too often resorted to by an unbelieving world" (42).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: sectarian strife

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 12)
Among the signs of the times which promise coming good to the church, the harmony prevalent among the different denominations who love our Lord Jesus Christ, is noticeable and delightful. Hitherto the different sects of Christians have eyed each other with something of distrust or jealousy, to use no harsher term. But the strange discovery has been made, and is becoming every day more and more known, that when real Christians of different denominations meet together, and pray together, and act together, they are Christians really. True Christians of every name, and colour, and dialect, and condition, and age, and country, under the whole wide heavens, have like abhorrence of sin, like desires of holiness, pray alike to be conformed to the image of God, that his kingdom may come and his will be done on earth as in heaven. Let all anger, and wrath, and malice, and evil speaking, be for ever put away; and let all Christians of different names unite in the great work of making known Christ and him crucified, as the Saviour of a ruined world. Points of union and co-operation should be sought and multiplied. Union of action will produce unity of feeling. It is in this way that Bible Societies have produced some of their most salutary effects, thus bringing Christians of different names to take hold of each others hands, to look in each others eyes and see the cordial smile of Christian feeling beaming from them. Thus they do indeed see eye to eye and heart beats to heart. Of the Tract Society, 'alike, yet various,' the same may be said. The efforts making at the present day for seamen tend the same way" (46).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This speech was given before the New-York Bible Society. I find the proposal of one general Christian religion noteworthy. Also apparent is the Methodist belief that conversion to any Protestant denomination is acceptable.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Christians of every name, trampling upon every little party interest, (which it is desirable may soon be buried in the general one, and which ought not to be looked at when souls are at stake,) have combined together, and like the disciples of old, have met with one accord in one place; and we trust the Master of assemblies has been with them, while they have been uniting their efforts to extend the circulation of the Scriptures" (45).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

______________________________

Topics: three degrees of glory; proselyting

Author: Dr. Griffin

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Ministers of the gospel at the last day. From Dr. Griffin's Pastoral Sermon."

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 27)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Mar. 10, 1827

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: Dr. Griffin suggests that because of their special calling and responsibilities, and because they "stand so near that holy Lord God," ministers must enjoy a higher glory or suffer a deeper hell: for them there is no "middle destiny."

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "The fate of millions through succeeding generations depends on our faithfulness. Heaven and hell will for ever ring with recited memorials of our ministry. And O our own responsibility. There is for us no middle destiny. Our stake is for a higher throne of glory or for a deeper hell. For to say nothing of the souls committed to our care, our work leads to the altar. Our home is by the side of the Shekinah. We have daily to go where Nadab and Abihu went, and to transact with him who darted his lightning upon them. It is a solemn thing to stand so near that holy Lord God. . . .But what is that I see? A horrid shape more deeply scarred with thunder than the rest, around which a thousand dreadful beings, with furious eyes and threatening gestures, are venturing their raging curses? It is an unfaithful pastor, who went down to hell with most of his congregation; and those around him are the wretched beings whom he decoyed to death" (108).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: tree of life

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The common blessings of Society"

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 16)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Dec. 23, 1826

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: This article emphasizes the power and influence of revelation (i.e., the word of God, or the Bible).

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Once in an age, perhaps a bold blasphemer, like the deistical author of the Age of Reason, is suffered to spread his odious opinions, and to deride even the sacred volume. . . . The pious look on with regret, and mourn in secret places the general defection--But God has provided an antidote against all the poison, more efficacious than the tree of life in the garden of Eden. This sovereign remedy, which has diffused its salutary leaven through the whole mass of community, is his word" (61).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pars.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: women's role

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Female piety"

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate and Journal (Vol. 1, No. 46)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jul. 20, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: This brief article from the Ladies' Department, excerpted here in its entirety, unapologetically demonstrates that women are naturally more pious than men. Although many articles address the weaknesses and flaws of women, others refute the supposed inferiority of women. It is clear, however, that Methodism assigned women to motherhood and the domestic sphere. However, women are often noted and praised for their religious activity in societies, and they certainly participated in the spreading of the gospel. Yet there is no discussion of the exclusion of women from the priesthood.
Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe
Excerpt (pages): "Why is it that woman is more pious in her behaviour and actions than that sex who arrogate to themselves the title of lord and master? Of the fact that she is so, there are ample proofs. In the churches of every city, we can find the greater proportion of the devout worshippers to consist of the female sex. The enterprise of women has erected houses of devotion, when the hands of man was palsied towards the deed. Her persuasive voice and her interesting demeanour have prevailed upon worldly minded husbands to contribute their mite towards the erection of houses consecrated to the purposes of salvation. The truth of it is, that true religion consists more of love and affection than of proud demonstration or haughty argument. The constitution of the female heart is turned towards the gentlest affections; and when the object is presented to her, she principally consults that faithful monitor to good, generous, and pious deeds--a woman's breast" (184).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: women's role
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Extract of a letter dated, Upper Sandusky, Dec. 22"
Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 19)
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church
Date of Publication: Jan. 13, 1827
Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.
Comment: This letter mentions a woman employed at a mission.
There is now employed at the mission, a lady named Keene, from Philadelphia, who came to this place in company with Mrs. Bayard, the widow of the late Hon. James Bayard, who, you will recollect, was one of the commissioners who concluded the treaty of Ghent. Mrs. B. has returned to Philadelphia, but Miss K. proposes to remain with the Wyandots until the next summer. She appears much devoted to the cause in which she is now engaged, and the mission, I understand, will be at no expense on her account. Indeed, she will not even permit her clothes to be washed at the expense of your society, and all such little matters she insists on defraying. (74).

In every prayer meeting give full and free liberty to every Christian present, man or woman, to go to prayer, if they be moved by the Holy Ghost. There are many simple souls deemed ignorant in the eyes of the world, who are able to offer more lively and effectual prayers than the wise and prudent. (145).

This religious newspaper (formerly titled the Christian Advocate) for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

This article is a list of directions for prayer leaders.
Go, my son, said the eastern sage Muza, to young Talmor, go forth to the world; be wise in the pursuit of knowledge--be wise in the accumulation of riches--be wise in the choice of friends; yet little will this avail thee, if thou choosest not wisely the wife of thy bosom. . . .

Neither turn thyself to the proud one who vaunts herself on having scanned the pages of Vedas, and fathomed the mysteries of the holy temple. Woman was not born to wield the scepter, or direct the council; to reveal the mandates of Brama, or expound the sacred verses of Menu. Rather be it hers to support thee in grief and sooth [sic] thee in sickness; to hid thy faults and forgive thy weakness; to rejoice in thy prosperity and cling to thee in adversity. Reflect, then, my son, ere thou choosest, and look to her ways whom thou wouldst make the wife of thy bosom. . . .

A wife! she must be the guardian angel of his footsteps on earth, and guide them to heaven; so firm in virtue, that should he for a moment waver, she can yield him support, and replace him upon its firm foundation; so happy in conscious innocence, that when from the perplexities of the world he returns to his home, he may never find a frown where he sought a smile. Such, my son, thou seekest in a wife; and reflect well ere thou choosest" (44).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: Thayer states that God has chosen women to perform benevolent service.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "From the commencement of the Christian dispensation, females have been chosen by our Lord, in an especial manner, as the instruments of benevolence. In the Divine records, honourable mention is made of women who ministered to the Lord of their substance, and from the days of Joanna the wife of Chuza, until now, much of the success of every benevolent institution has been owing to female exertion" (149).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 par.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: women's role; missionary work

Author: Elias Crawford

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Tract Societies: To the Rev. J. Emory, Corresponding Secretary of the Tract Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church"

Title of Periodical: Christian Advocate (Vol. 1, No. 16)

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: Methodist Episcopal Church

Date of Publication: Dec. 23, 1826

Nature of Source: This religious newspaper for entertainment and instruction was the leading weekly of the many published by the Methodist Episcopal Church. In 1879 its circulation was 70,000. It absorbed Zion's herald (founded 1823) and Religious messenger of the Philadelphia Conference in 1828. It was published by N. Bangs and J. Emory, and edited by B. Badger.

Comment: It seems that the norm for Methodists was to have separate Bible, Tract, or Missionary Societies for females, female societies in which, presumably, women held the leadership positions. This author reports on the formation of societies in his neighborhood which include both men and women (because their numbers are not sufficient for separate male and female societies), and in which both the women and the men hold leadership positions.

Researcher: Elizabeth Goodliffe

Excerpt (pages): "Forming societies in different neighbourhoods, we think preferable to forming one in the quarterly conference for the whole circuit, as it enlists the interest and feelings of more individuals in the work. We have a president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, and twelve managers in each society, to transact its business. We have also found it an excellent plan to enlist our females in this work by appointing some of them managers; for, generally, they have more leisure, interest, and success than men. "As our numbers are not sufficient in one place to form male and female societies separately, we connect both together, by electing our managers from both sexes" (62).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pars.
Topics: Agency; God's purpose in creation; Spirit and matter
Author: Emanuel Swedenborg (ed. Samuel M. Warren)
Title of Book: A Compendium of the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg
Title of Chapter: "Man"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: Swedenborg Foundation Inc.
Date of Publication: 1875
Library Location: BX 8711 .A7 W3 1974
Nature of Source: This is a condensed volume of Emanuel Swedenborg's extensive writings. Since Swedenborg was such a prolific and often obscure writer, the edited collection of his writings, arranged according to topic, makes it easier to understand Swedenborg's basic teachings while preserving them in his own words. Swedenborg was a Swedish visionary who claimed to have received visions and visitations from spiritual messengers, from which he derived his complex theological ideas.
Comment: Swedenborg has been compared to Joseph Smith because of several similarities in their teachings. Like Smith, Swedenborg taught a brand of Divinization, or the belief that a person could achieve godhood. However, Swedenborg's lean more towards the Hermetic/Gnostic tradition than they do to the LDS view, since they believe that man was, in a sense, emanated out of God and that, consequently, achieving godhood was an assimilation into the existing God rather than an equal, separate status with God.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin       Date: July 7, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Man is not life, but a recipient of life from God. It is generally believed that life is in man, and is his own; consequently that he is not merely a recipient of life, but actually is life. This general belief is founded upon the appearance; for man lives--that is, he feels, thinks, speaks, and acts altogether as of himself. . . .But how is it possible, according to any rational conception, for the Infinite to create anything but what is finite? Can a man, therefore, being finite, be reasonably conceived to be anything but a form, which the Infinite may vivify from the life which He possesses in Himself? "Man is an organ of life, and God alone is life. God infuses His life into the organ and all its parts, as the sun infuses its heat into a tree and all its parts. And God grants man a sense that the life in himself is as if it were his own; and is desirous that he should have such a sense of it, to the intent that he may live, as of himself, according to the laws of order--which are as many in number as the precepts of the Word--and may thus dispose himself to receive the love of God" (23).
Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 23-26
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
An important result of the study of astronomy has been to correct and exalt our views of God, and humble our view of ourselves. In all ancient speculation men were accustomed, of course, to take man for the type of the highest beings, and suppose whatever is intelligent and good among God's creatures must resemble human nature. Even God himself, the infant religion of all nations has clothed in human form, and idolatry imputed to him the passions as well as the person of man. Astronomy corrects all these boastful dreams, and demonstrates that whatever beings inhabit Saturn, Jupiter, Herschel, and Mercury, even in this little family of social worlds that journey like us around the sun, they must have an organization wholly different from man" (172-173).
And finally, what is the effect upon the doctrine of the New Testament which these contemplations produce? It is not contradiction but correction. It is not denial but purification. It proves the sublime doctrine of One God, whose offspring we all are and whose care we all are. On the other hand, it throws into the shade all temporary, all indifferent, all local provisions. Here is neither tithe nor priest nor Jerusalem nor Mount Gerizim. Here is no mystic sacrifice, no atoning blood.

"But does it take one charm from the lowly grace of Christ? Does it take away any authority from his lips? It abridges what belongs to persons, to places and to times but it does not touch moral truth. We are assured in any speculation we may indulge concerning the tenants of other regions, in the wide commonwealth of God, that if we could carry the New Testament to the inhabitants of other worlds we might need to leave Jewish Christianity and Roman Christianity, Paul and Apollos and Cephas and Luther, and Socinus, but the moral law, justice and mercy would be at home in every climate and world where life is . . .

"The largest consideration the human mind can give to the subject, makes moral distinctions still more important, and positive distinctions less. It will not teach any expiation by Jesus; it will not teach any mysterious relations to him. It will teach that he only is a mediator, as he brings us truth, and we accept it, and live by it; that he only saves us, by inducing us to save ourselves . . .

"The Scriptures were written by human hands. God intends by giving us access to this original writing of his hand to correct the human errors that have crept into them. Let us yield ourselves with a grateful heart to the instruction that comes from this source and not repine to find that God is a greater, wider and more tender Parent than we were wont to worship" (177-178).
He [Emanuel Swedenborg] denies the doctrine of atonement, or vicarious sacrifice; together with the doctrines of predestination, unconditional election, justification by faith alone, the resurrection of the material body, &c. and, in opposition thereto, that man is possessed of free will in spiritual things; that salvation is not attainable from evils, because they are sins against God, and living a life of charity and faith, according to the commandments; that man, immediately on his decease rises again in a spiritual body, which was enclosed in his spiritual body; and that in this spiritual body he lives as a man to eternity, either in heaven or in hell, according to the quality of his past life" (87).
Nature of Source: The sermons from which the following passage was taken were given by Rev. Griffin, who was a congregationalist minister in Revolution-era New England. He was born on January 6, 1770 in East Hadden, Connecticut, and lived in New Hartford, Newark, Andover, Boston, and Williamstown before his death in Newark on November 8, 1837. Rev. Griffin's memoirs, which precede the collection of sermons, detail a well-established association with the religious events and trends of his day. He had a fairly close association with the Presbyterian church.

Comment: In this passage Griffin teaches that we will have an unimpeded relationship with God, with the barriers of sin and guilt removed. However, he follows up this assertion by saying that Christ will continue to serve as our Mediator with God, with God talking to us primarily through him. He teaches that we will continue to look on him as a kind of advocate with the father, which seems to undercut Griffin's earlier statement about our closeness with God. Apparently, even though the wall of our sins will no longer exist in heaven, there will still be some kind of gap between us and the almighty God.

Excerpt (pages): "[In heaven] Every wall of separation between them and God is taken down, every cloud which hid his face is dispersed, every frown smoothed into smiles.--They are admitted to the perfect vision and fruition of God and the Lamb. They see that God does not upbraid them for the past, that he has not one less tender feeling towards them for all their sins, and that he loves them with an affection infinitely surpassing that of the tenderest earthly parent.--They are conscious of an interchange of thoughts and feelings with him the most affectionate,--of a communion no less real than that which subsists between earthly friends. They possess greatly enlarged vies of his perfection, particularly of his unbounded love, and enjoy him to a degree of which we have here no conception. Their should swell and expand with the mighty blessedness, and rise into raptures of wonder, love, and praise.

"The principal medium though which they see and commune with God is the Mediator. It is from his face that the strongest emanations of Godhead shine. . . . It is through him chiefly that God speaks to the inhabitants of heaven, and through him as the representative of the Father they send up their thanks. They put them into his hands as the Deity expressed, much in the same way as they did in the days of his flesh. . . .And then they take their harps and fill all the arches of heaven with the song, 'Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, to him be glory and dominion forever and ever" (440-442).

Hard Copy (pages): 433-447
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: __________________________

Topics: Creation; God's purpose in creation; Eternity of matter;
Author: Samuel Worcester, D.D.
Title of Book: Sermons on Various Subjects, Practical and Doctrinal
"In the beginning, God created the heavens and the earth. That the whole system of the universe had a beginning is clear, both from the deductions of reason, and the declarations of scripture. The notion of some of the ancient, and of some of the modern philosophers, that the universe existed from eternity, is as chimerical and absurd, as it is repugnant to the oracles of divine truth. When, in the light of history sacred and profane, we look back upon past ages and generations, we cannot but see the most plenary evidence, that this world, with all it contains, the race of mankind, and the various animal tribes, had a beginning; we cannot, indeed, but see evidence, that the beginning of the world could not have been earlier than what, according to the scripture chronology, it is made out to have been, that is, somewhat less than six thousand years ago. Besides, to suppose that this world, and all other worlds, that the race of mankind, and all other races and orders of beings, throughout the universe, have existed from eternity, involves the greatest possible absurdities and contradictions. The world, then, the earth and the heavens, and the whole system of nature, had a beginning. Before creation was begun, Jehovah inhabited eternity, independently and perfectly blessed in the infinite benevolence of his nature, in his unchangeable purposes, and in the contemplation of the wonderful works, which, for the glory of his name, he would, in their due order perform.

"When the period arrived, at which he had determined to give being to a dependent universe, he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast. At his omnifick word, the immense chaotick mass of matter, of which unnumbered worlds were to be made, sprang from nothing into being . . .

"Carry back your contemplations, my brethren, to this scene of wonders. The immensity of space an immeasurable void; not a being, not a thing existing, besides him, who inhabiteth eternity. In a moment, at his word, the immense mass of unformed matter starts into being" (19-20).
"Let us remember that if we ever get to Heaven, this will be our employment to all eternity, to grow wiser and wiser, and better and better, and happier. Say not, think not, you are good and holy enough. The saints in Heaven will not think so. They will know there is room for infinite improvement; and therefore press forward. So do ye always in this world; and God shall finally receive you, where you will be in no danger of falling away; but will be always advancing, and always rejoicing in his goodness" (105, 106).
All this glory and happiness will be eternal. On earth their enjoyment was damped by the thought that it would soon expire. Their dearest friends, their health, their life, were held by a very uncertain tenure. But now they have no fear of change. When they first opened their eyes in that world and found themselves entered on a blessedness which was sure and eternal, with what transport did they contemplate that single fact after all their doubts and fears. The thought that they are forever safe, that no changes can cast them down, has in it weight and sublimity of blessedness which no imagination can conceive. . . .

"They will eternally grow in capacity, knowledge, holiness, and happiness. This seems to be the natural progress of mind until it is checked by bodily decay. But when no such clog hangs upon the spirit, it will hold on its course of advancement without end. As it grew in its faculties from infancy to manhood, so will it expand in the regions of life to eternity: insomuch that the least soul will far outstrip the present dimensions of Gabriel; and holding on its way, will be to what the highest angel now is, as a giant to an infant; and still it has an endless progression before it,--rising higher and higher in intellectual sublimity, and forever approximating towards the infinite dimensions of God."

"Its knowledge too will forever increase. Perpetually pondering on the wonders of God, studying him in his works, drawing lessons from all worlds among which it makes excursions, and diving deeper and deeper into the unfathomable wonders of redemption, it cannot fail to advance in knowledge without end. The time then must come when the least soul in heaven will know more than all the creation of God now do; and still it has just entered the heavenly school. Imagination cannot keep pace with its flight through the sublime heights of intellectual ascension. What amazing views of God and the Lamb, what amazing view of the mysteries of redemption, what amazing view of the wonders of creation, of the purposes to be answered by the sufferings of the damned, of the boundless reach of mercy, of the whole history of God's administration in all worlds: and still to pursue the high and glorious study without end.

"And in proportion to its advance in capacity and knowledge, must be its holiness. The more God is seen the more he will be loved and delighted in.--What new and unspeakable fervors of affection will be enkindled by those accessions of knowledge which will be hourly coming in. What a flame of love and gratitude will be acquired in the eternal progress of capacity and knowledge. The time will come when the least soul in heaven will contain more love and gratitude than the whole consistory of angels now do: and still to advance to higher and still higher fervors without end.

"And in proportion to its advance in capacity, knowledge, and holiness will be its happiness. If to know and love God in one degree makes a heaven, to know and love him in ten degrees will make a tenfold happiness. What unimagined bliss then must the holy soul find in rising up to view and fervors increasing as the ages of eternity go round. The time must come when the feeblest saint in heaven will enjoy more in one hour than all the creations of God have enjoyed to this day; and still he has just begun his eternal progress in blessedness. From those sublime heights of ecstasy he will ascent to heights still more sublime, reaching upwards continually and approximating forever towards the infinite happiness of the Eternal Mind.

"And now behold that creature,--the feeblest that ever entered heaven; behold him at some imagined point in eternity, with all this increase and capacity, knowledge, holiness, and happiness; and how awfully great and glorious does he appear. As much above the heathen gods as a sun exceeds a glowworm. Could that creature appear on earth he would be worshiped by half the nations. He would pour upon their sight a sublimity and glory a million times greater than they ever ascribed to God himself. And still that creature has just begun his eternal progress. What then will he become? The imagination of Gabriel falters and turns back from the amazing pursuit" (442-445).

Length of Relevant Material: 14 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 433-447
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Eternal marriage

Author: Rev. Edward D. Griffin, D.D.

Title of Book: Sermons by the Late Rev. Edward D. Griffin, D.D., Vol. II

Title of Chapter: "Heaven"

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Albany, NY

Publisher: Packard, Van Benthuysen & Co.

Date of Publication: 1838

Library Location: BX 7233 .G75 S4 vol. 2

Nature of Source: The sermons from which the following passage was taken were given by Rev. Griffin, who was a congregationalist minister in Revolution-era New England. He was born on January 6, 1770 in East Hadden, Connecticut, and lived in New Hartford, Newark, Andover, Boston, and Williamstown before his death in Newark on November 8, 1837. Rev. Griffin's memoirs, which precede the collection of sermons, detail a well-established association with the religious events and trends of his day. He had a fairly close association with the Presbyterian church.

Comment: It is interesting to note that in Griffin's view of heaven, not only will spouses be reunited, but siblings as well. He also suggests that we will have a close sociality with all the righteous inhabitants, which makes his view of heaven somewhat anthropocentric (as opposed to a theocentric heaven in which the worship of God marginalizes all other social relationships). However, Griffin still includes a God-centered view of heaven by saying that although we will have social interaction there, the bulk of our conversation will be about God and his works.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: June 24, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The next circumstance to be mention respecting that world [heaven] is, that it contains the most delightful society. The saints are forever delivered from the interruptions of the wicked, from the pollution of their society and the disgusting coarseness of their conversation; and are admitted to the most intimate friendship with the holy angels, and with the patriarchs, prophets, apostles, martyrs, and the whole assembly that have been collecting since the death of Abel, including, in many instances, the most beloved friends they knew on earth. Parents will there meet their children, and husbands their wives, after a long an painful separation. Brothers and sisters will rush into each other's arms and exclaim, 'Have I found you at last? This is far unlike the parting hour when I closed your eyes, and far unlike the solitary evenings in which I have visited your grave and wept over your dust.'--Those blessed spirits will enjoy the most perfect friendship, with every distrust and rival interest banished; each loving the other as his own soul, and not a thought nor a joy but what is common. Their conversation will be high and satisfying, turning on the history of God's love and the wonders of his works; and the expressions of love to each other in their looks, deportment, and words, will be most tender and convincing" (436-437).

Hard Copy (pages): 433-447
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Eternal marriage
Author: Colleen McDannell and Bernhard Lang
Title of Book: Heaven: A History
Title of Chapter: "Love in the Heavenly Realm"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New Haven, Connecticut
Publisher: Yale University Press
Date of Publication: 1988
Library Location: BT 846.2 .M37 1988
Nature of Source: This book discusses the images and conceptualizations that Christians have used to describe Heaven, and how those images and conceptualizations have changed through history. The book draws not only from institutional and societal beliefs, but also from independent thinkers, writers, and artists. This particular chapter discusses the doctrinal changes (particularly regarding the social atmosphere of heaven) that occurred during the 19th century.

Comment: To put Joseph Smith's ideas about heavenly relations, it is worthwhile to note that other churches of his era (or slightly after his death) were also beginning to describe a heaven in which our cherished earthly relationships would be remembered. Joseph's own revelations mesh well with the idea of "heavenly recognition," described below, yet he was even more forthright in his assertion that, through certain ordinances, family relationships would stay intact.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 14, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "If friends met each other in heaven, what about husbands and wives? How did nineteenth-century ministers cope with the New Testament negation of marriage in the afterlife? The arguments employed by the clergy to justify heavenly love and marriage illuminate their ambiguous attitudes toward love, sexuality, and friendship. The clergy tried to walk the thin boundary between acknowledging that marriages survive after death and upholding that 'in the resurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of god in heaven.' (Matt. 22:30; King James Version). In order to do this, they constructed new interpretations for both the scriptural passage and the meaning of marriage.

"During the 1840s, under the direction of John W. Nevin, a shift away from Calvinism occurred in the German Reformed seminary at Mercersburg, Pennsylvania. Departing from the Reformed orthodoxy, Nevin and his associates rejected revivalism, challenged the prevailing views of the Eucharist, and called for a re-evaluation of the meaning of Christian history and community. One of the popularizers of the Mercersburg theology, Henry Harbaugh (1817-67), also wrote extensively on heaven. The Sainted Dead (1848), Heavenly Recognition (1851), and The Heavenly Home (1853) all were attempts to present his view that 'heaven is a place, and not merely a state; it has a locality, and is material.' For Harbaugh, sexual intercourse between husband and wife serves to populate the world. Where death does not exist, there can be no need for intercourse. However, 'this does not, in the least, intimate than the affections begotten, and the friendships formed in this relation, shall not be renewed and continue in the heavenly social life.' Consequently, although marriage 'in its earthly sense, comes to an end in death, the relation in its mystical and spiritual sense continues, and its affections, beautiful and holy on earth, are made perfect and permanent in heaven.' By associating the term 'marriage' with sexual intercourse leading to reproduction, Harbaugh acknowledged the New Testament view while not denying the eternal nature of love" (259-260)

Length of Relevant Material: 8 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 257-264
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Eternal marriage; Afterlife
Author: Colleen McDannell and Bernhard Lang
Title of Book: Heaven: A History
Title of Chapter: "Love in the Heavenly Realm"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New Haven, Connecticut
Publisher: Yale University Press
Date of Publication: 1988
Library Location: BT 846.2 .M37 1988
Nature of Source: This book discusses the images and conceptualizations that Christians have used to describe Heaven, and how those images and conceptualizations have changed through history. The book draws not only from institutional and societal beliefs, but also from independent thinkers, writers, and artists. This particular chapter discusses the doctrinal changes (particularly regarding the social atmosphere of heaven) that occurred during the 19th century.
Comment: To put Joseph Smith's ideas about heavenly relations, it is worthwhile to note that other churches of his era (or slightly after his death) were also beginning to describe a heaven in which our cherished earthly relationships would be remembered. Joseph's own revelations mesh well with the idea of "heavenly recognition," described below, yet he was even more forthright in his assertion that, through certain ordinances, family relationships would stay intact.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 14, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Protestant and Catholic clergy in Europe and America may not have been conversant with the subtleties of Schleiermacher's thought or willing to accept the insights of Romantic literature, but they were aware of the growing regard for love and family life among their parishioners. Nineteenth-century preaching modified the theocentric traditions of Calvinists and Jansenists by emphasizing the positive qualities of human nature, the sacred character of family life, and the importance of Christian community. In countless treatises, writers stressed that in heaven our memories persist and therefore we will recognize our friends and families. The issue of 'heavenly recognition,' no longer relegated to a few brief comments as it had been in most eighteenth-century writings, became a viable topic of theological discourse.
"Prior to the mid-nineteenth century, American ministers schooled in Calvinist theology showed little interest in describing the social relationships in heaven. From their theocentric perspective, a husband 'would be so enraptured with the Lord Jesus that [his wife] might be at his side for ages before he would think of looking at her!' By 1877, the Presbyterian Robert Patterson (1832-1911) easily rejected that opinion and insisted that 'to most Christians . . . such a view is very chilling.' Armed with biblical texts as proof he concluded that 'in heaven reunited friends shall quickly know of the presence of each other, and with joy commune about what God the Lord has done for them.' For Patterson, the dead would recognize each other by 'tone of voice, or a quick lightning up of the face with an old familiar smile'" (258).
Length of Relevant Material: 8 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 257-264
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________
Harold Bloom, one of the more prominent literary critics of the late 20th century, uses this book to apply the ancient Jewish Mysticism, Kabbalah, to a criticism of poetry. To do this, he first devotes a section to explaining the basic structure of Kabbalistic beliefs.

Comment: In this excerpt, Bloom explains the connection between Neoplatonism and the Kabbalah's conception of the creation, which reinterprets the belief that God created the universe _ex nihilo_. Like the Neoplatonists, the Kabbalists view creation as a number of emanations from God. Since there has been much recent work done linking Joseph Smith rejection of creation _ex nihilo_ with Kabbalistic tradition, this passage would be a good comparison. However, unlike the Kabbalah's creation _ex deo_, Joseph Smith's view of creation is very clearly creation _ex materia_ which implies a very different relationship to God and godhood than the one the Kabbalah offers.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin
Date: July 9, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Classical Kabbalah begins with a Neoplatonic vision of God. God is the _Ein-sof_ ('without end'), totally unknowable, and beyond representation, all images of whom are merely hyperboles. As _Ein-sof_ has no attributes, his first manifestation is necessarily as _ayin_ ('nothing'). Genesis had said that God created the world out of nothing. Kabbalah took this over as a literal statement, but interpreted it revisionistically as meaning just the opposite of what it said. God, being 'ayin,' created the world out of 'ayin,' and thus created the world _out of himself_. The distinction between cause and effect was subverted by this initial Kabbalistic formula, and indeed such rhetorical subversion became a distinctive feature of Kabbalah; 'cause' and 'effect' are always reversible, for the Kabbalists regarded them a linguistic fictions, long before Nietzsche did.
"Kabbalah, which thus from the start was revisionary in regard to Genesis (though asserting otherwise), was also revisionary of its pagan source in Neoplatonism. In Plotinus, emanation is a process _out from_ God, but in Kabbalah the process must take place _within_ God Himself" (24-25)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 24-25

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Eternity of Matter

Emanuel Swedenborg (ed. Samuel M. Warren)

Title of Book: _A Compendium of the Theological Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg_
Title of Chapter: "Creation"

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: Swedenborg Foundation Inc.

Date of Publication: 1875

Library Location: BX 8711 .A7 W3 1974

Nature of Source: This is a condensed volume of Emanuel Swedenborg's extensive writings. Since Swedenborg was such a prolific and often obscure writer, the edited collection of his writings, arranged according to topic, makes it easier to understand Swedenborg's basic teachings while preserving them in his own words. Swedenborg was a Swedish visionary who claimed to have received visions and visitations from spiritual messengers, from which he derived his complex theological ideas.

Comment: Swedenborg has been compared to Joseph Smith because of several similarities in their teachings. Like Smith, Swedenborg taught a brand of Divinization, or the belief that a person could achieve godhood. He also disputed the idea of creation "ex nihilo." However, Swedenborg's teachings lean more towards the Hermetic/Gnostic tradition than they do to the LDS view, since they believe that man was, in a sense, emanated out of God and that, consequently, achieving godhood was an assimilation into the existing God rather than an equal, separate status with God.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin       Date: July 7, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Everyone who thinks with clear reason sees that the universe is not created from nothing, because he sees that it is impossible for anything to be made out of nothing. For nothing is nothing, and to make anything out of nothing is contradictory, and what is contradictory is contrary to the light of truth, which is from the Divine wisdom; and whatever is not from the Divine wisdom is not from the Divine omnipotence. Every one who thinks from clear reason sees also that all things were created from substance which is substance in itself; for this is the very Being from which all things that are can exist. And as God alone is substance in itself, and hence the very Being, it is evident that the existence of things is from no other source. Many have seen this, for reason gives to see it, but have not dared to confirm it; fearing that thereby they might come to think that the created universe is God, because it is from God; or that nature exists from itself, and thus that its inmost is what is called God. Hence, although many have seen that the existence of all things is from no other source than from God and from his Being, yet they dared not proceed beyond the first thought on the subject, lest they should entangle their understanding in a Gordian knot, as it is called, from whence they might not afterwards be able to extricate it. The reason why they might not have been able to extricate their understanding is, that they thought of God, and of the creation of the universe by God, from time and space, which are peculiar to nature; and no one can perceive God and the creation of the universe from nature, but every one whose understanding is in any degree of interior light, may perceive nature and its creation from God, because God is not in time and space" (15).

Length of Relevant Material: 8 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 15-22

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
"I have endeavoured at p.279. To explain what was the nature of the reform introduced by Zoroaster: and Beausobre seems to conclude, not without reason, that the difference between Zoroaster and Manes was this. The former referred every thing to God as the first Cause: but the latter considered Matter also to have an independent existence, and to be the origin of evil. Still, however, the Manichæans firmly maintained the unity of God: and though they believed Matter to be coeternal with God, they are no more chargeable with believing in two Gods, than Plato or any of the Greek philosophers, all of whom, as will be shewn hereafter, held the eternity of Matter. One of the leading errors of Manes seems to have been, that he attributed to Matter a self-existing, inherent, moving power: and consequently he did not ascribe the creation of the world to God. But upon this intricate subject I can only refer the reader to the elaborate investigations of Beausobre. . .

"I have endeavoured to shew in this note, which has already grown to too great a length, that the Oriental doctrine of two principles was not the chief source from which Gnosticism was derived, though it may have had some influence upon parts of that heterogeneous system. We ought carefully to distinguish between the different senses, in which the term Principle, [Approximated Greek] Ûñ÷ç, has been used. God is a Principle, as being the beginning or cause of all things. With the Greek philosophers, Matter was also a Principle, as being without beginning" (294-295).
Topics: Eternity of Matter; Creation; Intelligence and intelligences
Author: John Allen
Title of Book: Modern Judaism: Or, A Brief Account of the Opinions, Traditions, Rites, and Ceremonies of the Jews in Modern Times
Title of Chapter: "Chapter V"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: London
Publisher: R.B. Seeley and W. Burnside and sold by L.B. Seeley and Sons
Date of Publication: 1830 (2nd edition [1st edition published in 1816])
Library Location: Inter-Library Loan from the University of Nebraska
Nature of Source: This book, published first in 1816 and again in 1830, has been referred to by D. Michael Quinn, as a book that Joseph Smith might have read. Allen devotes an entire chapter (Chapter V) to a summary of the Cabala and its beliefs, which Quinn says may have served as a source for Joseph Smith's teachings on the creation. Comment: This passage is valuable in proving that alternatives to the ex nihilo model of creation existed in Joseph Smith's lifetime. As Quinn has pointed out, this book was sold not too far from Smith's house, so it is possible that Smith might have read it or become indirectly exposed to its teachings regarding Cabalistic beliefs. Quinn points out that some of Smith's teachings use words similar to the ones found in this passage, so there might be some connection, but there is no clear causality. If the book did serve as a source for Smith, it was most likely only a source of vocabulary, since the Cabalistic view of the creation was much more like the Neoplatonist/Gnostic model of emanation than it was like the LDS model of organization.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 20, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "1. From nothing, nothing can be produced.--This is the foundation or principle point of the whole Cabbalistic philosophy, and of all the emanative system; which therefore pronounces that all things have emanated from the divine essence, deeming it impossible that being can by any means be produced from non-entity, something from nothing.
2. There is no essence or substance, therefore, which has proceeded from nothing, or been created out of nothing.
3. Hence matter cannot have proceeded from nothing, but must have had some other origin.
4. Matter is too mean in its nature to have been self-originated, or self-existent.
5. Hence it follows, that there is no such essence as matter, properly so called, in the universe.
6. The conclusion deducible from these premises is,--that all that exists is spirit.
7. This spirit is uncreated, eternal, intellectual, sentient, possessing inherent life and motive power, filling immensity, and self-existing by necessity of nature.
8. This spirit is the infinite being, or Deity, the cause of all other causes and beings.
9. From this infinite spirit, therefore, all things must emanate and proceed.
10. This being the true spiritual source of all things, all things must necessarily have emanated from it, and therefore must also subsist in it.
11. The universe, therefore, is an immanent offspring of Deity, in which the divine essence has in various degrees unfolded and modified its attributes and properties.
12. The nearer any emanation is to the primordial source, it is so much the more excellent and divine.
13. The further any emanation is removed from this supreme source, its nature is so much the less excellent and divine.
14. The process of emanation is sometimes represented in the following order.--That emanations might issue from the primordial source of infinite light, and modifications of the divine perfections might appear, the deity caused first to emanate from himself a kind of original and principal fountain, or channel, by or through which all other emanations might be produced. This First born of the Infinite has, in his emanations, manifested his divinity in peculiar ways, and has sent forth from himself ten luminous streams, which are called sephiroth. This word is translated, by some authors, numerations and by others, splendours.
15. Before the creation or emanation of the universe, all space was filled with the infinite light. There was no vacuum, or empty space, to admit of any thing being produced. But when the volition for the formation of the universe arose in the divine mind, the supreme light which had been diffused through immensity retired, from a certain point, to an equal distance all around it; thus leaving a vacuum, or empty space, perfectly spherical. In this sphere there still remained some vestiges of the Infinite, which were to be the receptacles of the rays about to be emitted by the supreme light for the formation of future worlds. From a part of the concave, a beam of light was sent forth into the opaque sphere. This stream of light formed a channel, through which streams of light were to flow, for the production of worlds. The light conveyed through this channel proceeded not long in a rectilinear course; but, diverging on each side at ten different points, formed so many subordinate concentric circles of light, separated from each other, and from the supreme light by portions of empty or opaque space, and leaving still an opaque sphere, in the centre.
16. . . .[The ten numerations or splendours] are not like instruments used by an agent, distinct and separate from the hand which employs them, but essential instruments of divine communication, substantially existing in the divine nature, and proceeding from it through the medium of the first offspring of Deity; as rays issuing from the sun are instruments of heat, of the same nature as their source.
17. Through these luminous channels all things have proceeded from the first emanation of Deity;--things celestial and immanent in emanation; spiritual, and produced without pre-existent matter; angelic, and created in substance and subject; and material, which depend on matter for their being, subsistence, powers, and operation.--These constitute four worlds . . .
18. The universe, therefore, is distinct from God, as an effect from its cause; not, however, as a transient, but as an immanent effect: so that the emanation of all things from the Deity shews that the universe is God manifested, or that it is an evolution and expansion of the Deity; who is concealed in his own essence, but in the universe is revealed and visible; and is exhibited in the different worlds, with a splendour successively decreasing, according to their distance from the first cause. The last and remotest production of emanative energy is matter; which is rather a privation of perfection, than a distinct essence; being found where the light, by its distance from the primordial source, is so attenuated, that it exhibits a mere residuum of divine emanation, very little above non-entity" (80-86)

Topics: Eternity of Matter; God's purpose in creation; Spirit and Matter
Author: Rev. Edward Burton, D.D.
Title of Book: An Inquiry Into the Heresies of the Apostolic Age in Eight Sermons
Title of Chapter: "Lecture II"
Title of Article:
Place of Publication: Oxford
Publisher: Samuel Collingwood, Printer to the University
Date of Publication: 1829
Library Location: BT 1319 .B87 1980
Nature of Source: This book is comprised of the written texts for a series of eight lectures that were given by Rev. Burton at Oxford in 1829. Rev. Burton, described on the title page as "Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church," mentions in his first lecture that the object of his texts is to discuss all of the heresies mentioned in the New Testament or otherwise, "which infested the church in the lifetime of the apostles" (3). In his conception, the apostolic age ended with the death of St. John, which he surmises must have been at the start of the second century.
Comment: This passage compares the Cabalistic account of the creation with the Gnostic account. They are both similar in their discussion of emanations, but the Gnostics believed matter to be eternal and acted upon by the Demiurgus (a lesser emanation from God) while the Cabalists disregarded matter altogether, suggesting that what we regard as matter actually came from a lesser spiritual emanation (Sephiroth) out of God.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin
Date: July 16, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Few subjects are more perplexing, than to explain the ten Sephiroth or Emanations, which according to the Cabbala proceeded from the first Cause: and we ought to be very cautious of theorising upon the subject, because the system of the Cabbala approaches so near to that of Spinoza, that the one as well as the other may be open to the charge of atheism. Very strong proof should be brought, before we persuade ourselves, that the Jews admitted a system which led even indirectly to atheism: and the whole perhaps may be solved by that unfortunate desire, which we have already seen to have perplexed the Gnostics, a desire to explain the origin of Matter and of Evil. The Cabbalists seem so far to have forgotten their scriptures, that they adopted the principle which pervaded the whole heathen philosophy, that 'nothing can be produced out of nothing. They did not hold the eternity of Matter with the Greeks; nor with the Persians had the recourse to two opposite Principles: they cut the knot which they could not solve; and they taught, that God being a spirit, who pervaded all space, the universe also was not material, but spiritual, and proceeded by emanation from God. The first Emanation was called in their language the first man, or the first begotten of God; and he was made the medium of producing nine other Emanations or Sephiroth, from which the universe was formed.

"All this is highly mystical; and it is melancholy to see how low the human mind can fall, when it attempts the highest flights. Imperfectly as I have described the system of the Cabbalists, it will be seen that it bears no small resemblance to that of the Gnostics, who interposed several Æons or Emanations between the supreme God and the creation of the world. The names also of some of the Gnostic Æons are evidently taken from the Hebrew. All this has led some persons to imagine, that the Cabbala was the cause of Gnosticism. There undoubtedly was a Cabbala, or secret doctrine, among the Jews, before we hear any thing of the Gnostic philosophy: the latter therefore could not have contributed to produce the former. But still the two systems present considerable differences. The Æons of the Gnostics were not emanations in the same sense with the Sephiroth of the Cabbala. Each pair of Æons engendered another pair, and one of the latest acted upon Matter and created the world. But the Cabbalistic Sephiroth were all Emanations from God, and the world also emanated from them, without the intervention of Matter" (53-55)

Hard Copy (pages): 29-56
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Eternity of Matter; God's purpose in creation; Salvation through knowledge
Author: Rev. Edward Burton, D.D.
Title of Book: An Inquiry Into the Heresies of the Apostolic Age in Eight Sermons
Title of Chapter: "Lecture II"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Oxford
Publisher: Samuel Collingwood, Printer to the University
Date of Publication: 1829
Library Location: BT 1319 .B87 1980
Nature of Source: This book is comprised of the written texts for a series of eight lectures that were given by Rev. Burton at Oxford in 1829. Rev. Burton, described on the title page as "Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church," mentions in his first lecture that the object of his texts is to discuss all of the heresies mentioned in the New Testament or otherwise, "which infested the church in the lifetime of the apostles" (3). In his conception, the apostolic age ended with the death of St. John, which he surmises must have been at the start of the second century.
Comment: This passage presents a 19th Century understanding of the Gnostic creation model, which is something of a creation ex deo except for its belief in matter as independent of God. As the passage relates, the Gnostics used this model to account for the existence of Evil in the world if God was ultimately the source of all creation. Thus, although the idea of creating the world out of co-eternal matter is similar with the LDS doctrine of creation, the Gnostic model differs in its attributing the creation of this world to the emanated, inferior, and possibly rebellious Demiurgus. Still, this passage is valuable in its demonstration that the concept of previously existing matter was taught (albeit negatively) in religious settings circa 1829.

Excerpt (pages): "The supreme God had dwelt from all eternity in a Pleroma of inaccessible Light; and beside the name of the first Father, or first Principle, they called him also Bythus, as if to denote the unfathomable nature of his perfections. This Being, by an operation purely mental, or by acting upon himself, produced two other beings of different sexes, from whom by a series of descents, more or less numerous according to different schemes, several pairs of beings were formed, who were called Æons from the periods of their existence before time was, or the Emanations from the mode of their production. These successive Æons or Emanations appear to have been inferior each to the preceding; and their existence was indispensable to the Gnostic scheme, that they might account for the world without making God the author of evil. These Æons lived through countless ages with their first Father: but the system of emanations seems to have resembled that of concentric circles; and they gradually deteriorated, as they approached nearer and nearer to the extremity of the Pleroma. Beyond this Pleroma was matter, inert and powerless, though coeternal with the supreme God, and like him without beginning. At length one of the Æons passed the limits of the Pleroma, and meeting with Matter created the world after the form and model of an ideal world, which existed in the Pleroma or in the mind of the supreme God. Here it is, that inconsistency is added to absurdity in the Gnostic scheme. For let the intermediate Æons be as many as the wildest imagination could devise, still God was the remote, if not the proximate cause of creation. Added to which, we are to suppose that the Demiurgus formed the world without the knowledge of God, and that having formed it he rebelled against him. Here again we find a strong resemblance to the Oriental doctrine of two Principles, Good and Evil, or Light and Darkness. The two Principles were always at enmity with each other. God must have been conceived to be more powerful than Matter, or an emanation from God could not have shaped and molded it into form: yet God was not able to reduce Matter to its primeval chaos, nor to destroy the evil which the Demiurgus had produced. What God could not prevent, he was always endeavoring to cure: and here it is, that the Gnostics borrowed so largely from the Christian scheme. The names indeed of several of their Æons were evidently taken from terms which they found in the gospel. Thus we meet with Logos, Monogenes, Zoe, Ecclesia, all of them successive emanations from the supreme God, and all dwelling in the Pleroma. At length we meet with Christ and the Holy Ghost, as two of the last Æons which were put forth. Christ was sent into the world to remedy the evil which the creative Æon or Demiurgus had caused. He was to emancipate men from the tyranny of Matter, or of the evil Principle; and by revealing to them the true God, who was hitherto unknown, to fit them by a perfection and sublimity of knowledge to enter the divine Pleroma. To give this knowledge was the end and object of Christ's coming to earth: and hence the inventors and believers of the doctrine assumed to themselves the name of Gnostics" (36-38).
"It is the remark of Bruckner that the first foundation of the Cabbalistic system is this:--Nothing is produced out of nothing, and therefore all things emanated from God. If we bear this in mind, it will furnish a key to the whole philosophy of the Cabala, and it will shew wherein it resembled, and wherein it differed from Platonism and Gnosticism. Plato made matter to be coeternal with God: the Cabbalists considered it to be an emanation from God. They did not however conceive it to flow immediately from the First Cause: but, like Plato, they interposed a spiritual being between God and the material creation. 'Before the creation of the worlds, primeval Light filled all space, so that there existed no void: and when the supreme Being, who existed in this light, resolved to display and shew forth his perfections in the worlds, he retired into himself, and formed round him an empty space, in which he let fall his first emanation, a ray of light, which is the cause, the principle of every thing which exists: which unites at once the power of generation and conception; which is male and female in the sublimest sense; which penetrates every thing, and without which nothing can subsist a single moment.' To this first emanation the Cabbalists gave the name of the first man, or Adam Kadmon: and a strong resemblance may be traced between this first man, and the Ormuzd of the Persians, which was an emanation from Light. It resembled also the intellectual world of Plato, which was only a metaphysical emanation from the Mind or Reason of the Deity; and also the first pair of Æons of the Gnostics, which were in fact only a personification of the Platonic Logos. According to all the three systems, the creation of the world was the work, either of this first emanation, or of other beings, which successively emanated from it: but the Cabbalists, as I have already observed, did not suppose Matter to be coeternal with God. . . . All this seems to connect the Æons of the Gnostics with the Sephiroth of the Cabala. Both of them proceeded by successive processes from God though the notions of the Gnostics were more gross and material than those of the Cabbalists. According to both systems, the later emanations degenerated, and creation was the consequence of this deterioration. I have stated, that ten spiritual Sephiroth emanated from the first man: and of these the seven last became bad, and may be said to resemble the evil Æmons of Plato and of the Scriptures. From the last in the series the material creation was formed: and yet, so obscure and mystical is the Cabalistic philosophy, Matter is in fact excluded from their system, and every thing is resolved into Spirit. This is perhaps the most inconsistent and inexplicable part of the Cabala; and I can only refer the reader to Bruckner, who points out the absurdity of it, without pretending to explain it. The difficulty is in fact inseparable from a system of emanations. In some way or other, spirit must be supposed to become matter: and if instead of ten Sephiroth we imagine ten thousand, the transition from spiritual to material will be equally unintelligible. The Platonists did not encounter this difficulty, for they supposed matter to be coeternal with God: and it is this which leads me not to look upon the Cabala as the original cause of Gnosticism. The Gnostics agreed with the Platonists in believing matter to be eternal: and though the Æon, which acted upon matter and created the world, might be said in one sense to have emanated from God, yet it was not an emanation in the Cabalistic sense: and so far were the Cabalists from supposing any of their emanations to have acted upon matter, that they believed all substances to be spiritual, and themselves to have emanated from God. For the same reason we cannot consider the Cabalistic notion of emanations to be derived from Platonism, or from any Greek philosophy. It is true, that the Logos, or Idea, or Intellectual World of Plato, which was the first step in the process of creation, might be looked upon as an emanation from the mind of the Deity: but if I understand the Cabala correctly, emanation, according to that philosophy, was an extension of the substance of the Deity, and therefore totally different from the intellectual emanation of Plato. I am aware also that the later Platonists, Proclus, Simplicius, and others, interpreted Plato's meaning to be, that Matter was eternal, not as having an independent existence, but as having been united from eternity with God, and emanated from him; and that the world proceeded from God, like rays from the sun. This, however, was evidently a misrepresentation of Plato's theory: and would probably never have been devised, if the more rational and philosophical doctrine of the Christians had not been gaining ground, which taught that God created matter out of nothing" (304-307).
There can be little doubt that the rapid increase of Christianity led the later Platonists to alter their master's doctrine, and to make him appear to agree with the Christian notion of Matter being created by God: but I was anxious to establish the fact that Plato believed in the eternity of Matter, because the Gnostics held this doctrine, and I have supposed Platonism to be the principal or fundamental source of Gnosticism. Irenæus says plainly, 'As to their assertion that the Creator made the world out of subject Matter, Anaxagoras, Empedocles, and Plato held them same doctrine before them.' Valentinus, who was one of the most celebrated Gnostics in the second century, undoubtedly held this notion: and we have his sentiments expressed by one of his adherents in the following manner: 'I conceive that there exists, together with God, that which is called Matter, out of which he created all things, separating them by a wise contrivance, and arranging them properly; out of which also Evil seems to come; for Matter being without quality and form, and also carried about without any order, and requiring the skill of the Deity, he did not refuse to apply it, nor did he leave it to be always carried about in that manner; but he did begin to create, and wished to separate the best parts of it from the worst, and thus he created: but the dregs which came from it during the process, these he left as they were, being without arrangement for the purposes of creation, and of no use to him: from which it appears to me, that the present evils of mankind arise.' Such was the opinion of the Gnostics in the second century: and it is plain, that this was borrowed from Grecian philosophy. We may learn the same from the treatise of Tertullian against Hermogenes, who appears to have been at first a Christian, but to have adopted Gnosticism: 'Turning,' as Tertullian says, "from the Christians to the Philosophers, from the Church to the Academy and the Portico, he has learnt from the Stoics to place Matter on a level with God, as if it had always existed; neither born, nor made, nor having any beginning nor end, out of which God afterwards made all things.' The whole treatise may be read with advantage upon this subject: and it will be seen that Tertullian, as in this passage, deduces the eternity of Matter from the Stoics, rather than the Platonists" (314-315).

Length of Relevant Material: 6 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 311-316.
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Eternity of Matter; God's purpose in creation

Author: Rev. Edward Burton, D.D.

Title of Book: An Inquiry Into the Heresies of the Apostolic Age in Eight Sermons

Title of Chapter: "Lecture III"

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Oxford

Publisher: Samuel Collingwood, Printer to the University

Date of Publication: 1829

Library Location: BT 1319 .B87 1980

Nature of Source: This book is comprised of the written texts for a series of eight lectures that were given by Rev. Burton at Oxford in 1829. Rev. Burton, described on the title page as "Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church," mentions in his first lecture that the object of his texts is to discuss all of the heresies mentioned in the New Testament or otherwise, "which infested the church in the lifetime of the apostles" (3). In his conception, the apostolic age ended with the death of St. John, which he surmises must have been at the start of the second century.

Comment: Here is yet another passage that shows that, although Christian ministers did not believe in a creation model other than the ex nihilo, some were very well-versed in alternate, ancient models. This lengthy discussion of what Plato supposedly taught about matter having an eternal, independent existence apart from God demonstrates that these idea filtered down from ancient Greece to 1829 Oxford, and that Joseph Smith need not have turned to the Cabala to find an alternative to ex nihilo. The Greek philosophic idea of God molding previously existing matter seems more similar to Smith's ideas than the Cabalistic idea of emanation.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin  Date: July 16, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The later Platonists saw their doctrines corrupted by the Gnostics, and many of them had read the Jewish and Christian Scriptures. They found Christianity daily gaining ground: and when it was hopeless for them to conquer, they endeavoured to conciliate: they laboured hard to shew that the doctrines of Plato and the gospel were in many points alike: and the obscurity of Plato's language enabled them to ascribe to him sentiments which he certainly never entertained. Thus the later Platonists, and even the Christian Fathers, speak of Plato contradicting himself, by sometimes saying that Matter was eternal, and sometimes that it was created. The Platonists went so far as to assert, that Plato did not hold that Matter was eternal. But the assertion was undoubtedly false: and no position seems more firmly established, and none is more important for a right understanding of ancient philosophy, than that all the schools of antiquity agreed in acknowledging the fundamental principle, that nothing was produced out of nothing, Nullam rem e nihilo gigni divinitus unquam.

Lucret. I. 151.

"Hence it followed, that all the Grecian philosophers believed Matter to be eternal. Whether the one proposition does necessarily lead to the other, or whether a system of emanations, like that of the Cabbala or of Spinoza, might not account for creation without the intervention of Matter, is a question which we are not called upon to discuss. The Grecian philosophers did not adopt the system of emanation. They all held, that Matter was eternal: and such undoubtedly was the opinion of Plato. This was the expedient by which all the philosophers thought to rescue God from being the author of evil: forgetting, as it appears, that at the same time they limited his omnipotence, and made him, though not the author of evil, yet himself subject to its influence: for a being who is all good, and yet restricted in his power, is undoubtedly subject to evil. This, however, is only one of the many inconsistencies which appear in ancient philosophy; and I have already pointed out another, when speaking of the Gnostics,--that the ancients gave to God a power of modifying Matter, though they believed it to be coeternal with himself. "It is, I believe, true--though the remark will not perhaps immediately obtain assent--that unassisted human reason never arrived at the idea that God can created Matter out of nothing. This is one of the points, which we know from revelation only: and that man's metaphysics are as yet very imperfect, who can conceive God to be omnipotent, and yet imagine that anything exists without his will, which he cannot modify and annihilate as he pleases. The world by wisdom knew not God. Plato was wise, but he knew him not: he saw him darkly and at a distance; but his mind was too small to contemplate the time when God spake the word, and called Matter into being. Here, then, was the basis, the false, the unphilosophical basis, on which all the Grecian sages built their systems. Matter was coeternal with God; and the world was formed, either by matter acting upon itself, or being acted upon by God. The School of Epicurus made Matter act upon itself, and the Deity was reduced to a name. The Stoics and Perpatetics believed God to have acted upon Matter, but it was from necessity, and not from choice. "Plato had already adopted a system more worthy of the Deity, and conceived that God acted upon Matter of his own free will, and by calling order out of disorder formed the world. Plato certainly did not believe the world to be eternal, though such a notion is ascribed to Aristotle. Plato held the eternity of Matter; but he believed the arrangement and harmony of the universe to be the work of the Deity. Here begins the peculiar intricacy of the Platonic system. Every thing, except the Deity, which exists in heaven and in earth, whether the object of sense or purely intellectual, was believed to have had a beginning. There was a time when it did not exist: but there never was a time, when the Idea, i.e. the form or archetype, did not exist in the mind of Deity. Hence we find so many writers speak of three Principles being held by Plato, the Deity, the Idea, and Matter" (58-61).

Length of Relevant Material: 30 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 57-86

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Eternity of Matter; God's purpose in creation

Author: Rev. Edward Burton, D.D.

Title of Book: An Inquiry Into the Heresies of the Apostolic Age in Eight Sermons

Title of Chapter: "Lecture V"

Title of Article:

---

Place of Publication: Oxford

Publisher: Samuel Collingwood, Printer to the University

Date of Publication: 1829

Library Location: BT 1319 .B87 1980

Nature of Source: This book is comprised of the written texts for a series of eight lectures that were given by Rev. Burton at Oxford in 1829. Rev. Burton, described on the title page as "Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church," mentions in his first lecture that the object of his texts is to discuss all of the heresies mentioned in the New Testament or otherwise, "which infested the church in the lifetime of the apostles" (3). In his conception, the apostolic age ended with the death of St. John, which he surmises must have been at the start of the second century.

Comment: Here Burton admits that the Apostles never explicitly taught the creation ex nihilo, but he still defends the veracity of the doctrine by reasoning that the Apostles did explicitly teach that it was God himself, and not some lesser being, who created the world. Burton reasons that anything other than the ex nihilo creation would denote a God who did not have absolute mastery of all things. Thus, this passage is a good example of how the ex nihilo creation and the conception of an Absolute God are tied together. Without one doctrine, the other falters.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin

Date: July 16, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "I am not aware of any passage in which he Apostles expressly declare, that God created the world out of nothing. This was one of the questions which exercised the learned in the Schools: but it was not one with which the Apostles chose to encumber the minds of their hearers. Whether the world was created by God, or by an inferior being, was a very different question. It involved directly the majesty of God, and indirectly the whole scheme of Christian redemption. All the practical errors, which arose out of a belief in the Eternity of Matter, were exposed and condemned by the Apostles: but the belief itself, like other physical and metaphysical points, was left to the gradual development of knowledge; when at length it will be seen, as I have already observed, that to conceive God not to have the power of creating or annihilating Matter, is one of the most palpable inconsistencies which the human intellect can entertain" (123).

Length of Relevant Material: 7 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 119-125
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Eternity of Matter; Intelligence and intelligences

Author: Harold Bloom

Title of Book: The American Religion

Title of Chapter: "Enthusiasm, Gnosticism, American Orphism"

Nature of Source: Bloom is not so much a historian as he is a literary and cultural critic, but with those credentials he considers himself to be well qualified to discuss the American belief system. By "American Religion," Bloom does not refer to a particular denomination or church, but instead offers the thesis that America as a unique land and culture has an ingrained set of ideals that act as a sort of national religious faith. Bloom further sees Mormonism as the best example of the American Religion embodied, especially because Mormonism has its roots in Early America itself.

Comment: In this passage Bloom makes an implicit connection between the Mormon belief in co-eternal intelligences and what he calls American Gnosticism (as reflected in American Christian Fundamentalism). Bloom's argument is that Americans in general subscribe, perhaps unconsciously, to the idea that they did not depend (at least not entirely) on God to create them. The American value of individual freedom, in Bloom's mind, necessitates that Americans not depend on anyone but themselves.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin  Date: July 9, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Fundamentalism, as I intimate throughout this book, is a parody of the American Religion, but its defensive anxieties and its wounded aggressivities stem nevertheless from what is most authentic in the American Gnosis. The true issue is by no means Biblical Inerancy, because the Fundamentalists, as unwitting Gnostics, do not believe anyway that God made them. Their deepest knowledge is that they were no part of the Creation, but existed as spirits before it, and so are as old as God himself. . . . What wounds them unforgivably is not the idea of evolution (in whatever version) but the demonstration that they were never God, or part of God. Their sense of freedom depends ultimately upon being free not only of time and of nature but, more secretly, being free of the very Creationism they urge upon all the rest of us" (56-57).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 56-57
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
And god, who is energy and power, surrounds everything and permeates everything, and understanding of god is nothing difficult, my child. "If you wish also to gaze upon him, look at the order of the cosmos and the careful arrangement of this order; look at the necessity of the heavenly phenomena and the providence in what has come to be and what comes to be; look at matter, completely full of life, and a great god moving along with all beings good and fair--god and demons and humans."

"But these are energies, father."

"If they are entirely energies, my child, by whom are they energized? By {any one} other {than god}? Or do you not know that, just as the parts of the cosmos are heaven, water, earth and air, likewise the limbs {of god} are life, immortality, {fate}, necessity, providence, nature, soul and mind, and that the permanence of them is all called the good? In what comes to be and has come to be, there is nothing where god is not, nothing beyond him."

[22] "Is he in matter, then, father?"

"If matter is apart from god, my son, what sort of place would you allot to it? If it is not energized, do you suppose it is anything but a heap? But who energizes it if it is energized? We have said that the energies are parts of god. By whom, then, are all living things made alive? By whom are immortals made immortal? Things subject to change--by whom are they changed? Whether you say matter or body or essence, know that these also are energies of god and that materiality is the energy of matter, corporeality the energy of bodies and essentiality the energy of essence. All this is god, the all."
[23] "But in the all there is nothing he is not. Hence, neither magnitude nor place nor quality nor figure nor time has any bearing on god. For god is all. And the all permeates everything and surrounds everything. Show this discourse reverence, my child, and keep it religiously" (47-48)

Hard Copy (pages): 43-48
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Eternity of matter; Primitive church; Sectarian strife; Corruption of the churches
Author: Richard R. Hopkins
Title of Book: How Greek Philosophy Corrupted the Christian Concept of God
Title of Chapter: "Heresies and Heretics"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Bountiful, Utah
Publisher: Horizon Publishers
Date of Publication: April 1998
Library Location: BX 8631.1 .H776h 1998
Nature of Source: Judging by the extensive use of Mormon doctrine and the undisguisedly pro-Mormon slant of the book's main arguments, I would guess that the author is a member of the LDS church. The book itself has no introduction or inscriptions that might provide additional information about its origins. However, it is a very good secondary source for the interplay between Greek philosophy and early Christian doctrine, especially doctrine on the natures of Deity and Mankind.
Comment: Although, as mentioned above, the book has an obvious agenda to use its source material as a validation of LDS doctrine, it is still fairly objective and informative. The passage in question demonstrates not only that the doctrine of creation ex materia existed early on in the history of the church, but that the doctrine of creation ex nihilo was not automatically derived from the scriptures, instead having a basis in Hellenistic ideas. The in-text citation, included in the passage below, comes from Hippolytus' work, Philosophic Refutation of All Heresies, 8:10.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 15, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Hermogenes, who was a disciple of Marcion, taught that God created the earth out of pre-existing and eternal formless matter. For this doctrine, he was discredited by Hippolytus in his Philosophic Refutation of All Heresies as follows:

A certain heretic, Hermogenes, thinking he was putting forward a very new idea, said that God made all things out of a sort of matter which was as eternal and ungenerated as himself. His reason was that God could not make generated things out of the non-existent, and that as God is eternally ruler and creator, matter is eternally his servant and eternally generated; . . . Hermogenes, it seems, was not aware that all this is found in the Socratic myth which Plato works out so much more fully than he does.
"It is clear from this quotation that, by the time Hippolytus wrote his Refutation in 222 A.D., the Church had either forgotten or chosen to ignore the fact that Justin Martyr taught the very same principle based on Old Testament texts. Justin had noted that the Platonists also taught it, but that had not dissuaded him from following the biblical text. "Surprisingly, another heretic, Basilides, mentioned above, is credited by Hatch as the source of the doctrine that God created the universe out of nothing. Hippolytus, who wrote almost a hundred years later, details Basilides' complete theology in Book 7 of his Refutation. After describing Basilides' doctrine of creation out of nothing, Hippolytus says, 'And these heretics bring this system to light as if it were peculiarly their own, and as if it were some novel doctrine, and some secret disclosure from the discourses of Matthias'.

This suggests that by 222 A.D. the Church had so long taught the ex nihilo doctrine that the source of it was unknown. Hippolytus' account of Basilides and that of Irenaeus are irreconcilable with each other. That is in part because Basilides was the first to teach the ex nihilo doctrine, and Irenaeus knew that. Obviously, Hippolytus did not. This is further evidence that both the heresies and the effort to combat them brought confusion to the early church" (167-168).
debating whether to consider the soul existent before or after God supposedly granted it extra "powers." Burton makes it clear that he considers these ideas to be erroneous, since he believes in the creation ex nihilo, but his treatment of the ideas is enough to show that the ideas themselves were passed around in academic and theological circles.

Researchers: Scott Goodwin

Date: July 16, 1999

Excerpt (pages): Note 18, Lecture III, p. 59

"There can be no doubt that Plato did not believe Matter to have been produced by God: he believed it to have existed without any beginning, and to be equally eternal with God. I need only refer to the Timæus, p.30, and 48. The term, which Plato applies to Matter, [Approximated Greek word] ÜvÜã÷ç, or Necessity, would lead us to think that he ascribed to it an existence independent of God: and such is the remark of Chalcidius, who seems in this respect to be the best interpreter of his master's doctrine. Plato then believed Matter to be eternal, though he believed the world to have been produced and to have had a beginning: and this may explain why different writers have interpreted his meaning differently, and why he has been accused of inconsistency. In the language of Chalcidius, he believed Matter, 'before it was arranged, and received its form and order, to be without beginning or cause; but if considered as arranged and put in order, it is produced by God who arranged it.' The term ὅüοιο, as applied to the world, was used to denote the harmonizing and arrangement of the discordant elements of the world: and the method here proposed for reconciling Plato with himself, is not that of the later Platonists only, but is precisely that, which Plutarch employs in his treatise de Animae Procreatione, where he alludes to 'the alleged and seeming contradiction and disagreement of Plato with himself. For no one would attribute such confusion and inconsistency, in matters which he had particularly studied, even to a drunken sophist, much less to Plato, so as to make him speak of the same nature as at once unproduced and produced; to say that the soul is unproduced, as in Phædrus, and produced, as in Timæus.' He then explains the apparent contradiction thus: 'He speaks of the soul as unproduced, with reference to its moving every thing discordantly and disorderly before the production of the world; but as produced and begotten, when God formed it intelligent and in order, out of this durable and most perfect substance, &c.' The soul was therefore eternal, if considered as existing in Matter, before it was arranged by God; but it had a beginning, and was produced by God, if considered with reference to the powers, which were given to it by God. The same solution will apply to the question of Matter itself being produced or unproduced" (313-314).

Hard Copy (pages): 311-316

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

____________________________

Topics: God's purpose in creation; Intelligence and intelligences; Premortal existence

Author: Rev. Edward Burton, D.D.

Title of Book: An Inquiry Into the Heresies of the Apostolic Age in Eight Sermons

Title of Chapter: "Lecture III"

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Oxford
Publisher: Samuel Collingwood, Printer to the University
Date of Publication: 1829
Library Location: BT 1319 .B87 1980
Nature of Source: This book is comprised of the written texts for a series of eight lectures that were given by Rev. Burton at Oxford in 1829. Rev. Burton, described on the title page as "Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church," mentions in his first lecture that the object of his texts is to discuss all of the heresies mentioned in the New Testament or otherwise, "which infested the church in the lifetime of the apostles" (3). In his conception, the apostolic age ended with the death of St. John, which he surmises must have been at the start of the second century.
Comment: Some of Burton's summary of Plato resonates with LDS doctrine, particularly concerning the pre-existence of souls. The discussion of the eternity of ideas closely resembles the LDS belief in a spiritual creation preceding the physical one, and the mention of the creation of the soul of the universe sounds somewhat like the LDS idea of the pre-existence. However, Plato's ideas about an indirect creation, in which God created lesser beings to create humanity, has very different implications about the nature of humanity's material existence than does the Mormon conception of God's Plan of Salvation.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin       Date: July 16, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "We believe that there was a time, when the world which we inhabit, and every thing which moves upon it, did not exist: but we cannot say that there ever was a time, when the works of creation were not present in the mind of Deity. There may therefore be the image of a thing, though as yet it has received no material form: or to use the illustration of the Platonists, the seal may exist without the impression. We know indeed that our own minds can form to themselves images, which are not only unsubstantial, but no likeness of which was ever yet an object of sense. In the same manner the images of all created things are present to the mind of Deity: and these images must have existed before the material copies of them. Plato supposed these images to possess a real existence, and gave to them the name of Form, Example, Archetype, or Idea; and the use, which he made of them constitutes the peculiar character of the Platonic philosophy. He saw that these Ideas not only preceded the creation of the world, but must have been present to the Deity from all eternity; and he could assign to them no other place than the mind of the Deity, which he sometimes calls Mind, and sometimes Reason. Plato's conception of the creation, or to speak more properly, the formation of the world, borders hard upon the sublime. He conceived the first process of it to be purely mental. The mind or reason of God, in which were the Ideas of all things, acted upon Matter, and gave to the universe a soul, or moving principle. Creation began with beings purely intellectual, whom Plato, in deference to popular opinion, called Gods, but which were very unlike to the Deities of Paganism; and from the obscurity of his language it is difficult to distinguish them from the heavenly bodies. These intellectual beings received a principle of immortality, and were commissioned by God to create beings of an inferior order, whose souls had already existed, when the soul of the universe was formed. Here again we find Plato struggling with the difficulty of believing God to be the author of evil. God employed his celestial agents to finish the creation and to form mortal bodies; for if he formed them himself, he would be the creator of evil, and that evil would be immortal" (62-63).

Length of Relevant Material: 30 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 57-86
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: God's purpose in creation; Progressive
Author: Rev. Joseph Lathrop, D.D.
Title of Book: Sermons by the Late Rev. Joseph Lathrop, D.D.
Title of Chapter: "The Harmony and Consistency of God's Works"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Springfield, Massachusetts
Publisher: A.G. Tannatt & Co.
Date of Publication: 1821
Library Location: BX 7233 .L3 S43 1821
Nature of Source: This book contains the collected sermons and memoirs of Rev. Joseph Lathrop. He came from a religious family (his great-great grandfather was a minister in England before settling in Massachusetts) and himself studied at Yale before becoming a congregational minister. He began his own ministry in the summer of 1756 and continued until March, 1818, when his sight began to fail him.

Comment: This passage is useful primarily as a comparison to Latter-day Saint doctrine. Lathrop's ministry terminated just before Joseph Smith's own ministry, and serves as a good example of the American religious tradition that surrounded Smith's New England. Lathrop's remarks on God's incapacity to grow in happiness or any other virtue contrast with Smith's notion of a progressive God, and his comments on God's purpose in creating mankind support a theocentric view of religion, in other words a view that puts primary emphasis on God and marginalizes more human concerns.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin    Date: June 29, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The first clause in the text [Proverbs 14:4] is similar to many other passages, which we meet with in scripture. 'God hath created all things for his pleasure.'- 'He worketh all things according to the counsel of his own will.'--'He does whatsoever he pleaseth-- and does it for his name's sake.'
"Such expressions cannot be understood as importing, that God in his works aims to increase his felicity or gloriousness; or to make himself more happy, or more excellent, than he is in his nature. As he is an infinite, eternal, and independent being, and possesses all perfections, he cannot be more happy, or more glorious, than he is in himself. 'With him is no variableness or shadow of turning.' But, as we learn from scripture, one end which God intends in his works, is to manifest to intelligent creatures his own existence and perfectness, that they may know him, believe in him, honor and adore him; and he has made intelligent creatures, that they might behold him in his works, render due honor to his name, and be happy in his favor" (3)

Length of Relevant Material: 6 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 3-8
Yet it is a fact that there is something which is not God. Men, for instance, are not such an eternal act of absolute existence. There are therefore some beings that are radically different from God at least in this that, unlike him, they might not have existed, and still may, at a certain time, cease to exist. Thus to be, or exist, is not at all to be, or exist, as God himself is, or exists. It is therefore not to be an inferior sort of god; rather, it is not to be a god at all. The only possible explanation for the presence of such finite and contingent beings is that they have been freely given existence by 'Him who is,' and not as parcels of his own existence, which, because it is absolute and total, is also unique, but as finite and partial limitations of what He himself eternally is in his own right. This act whereby 'He who is' causes to exist something that, of itself, is not, is what is called, in Christian philosophy, 'creation.' Whence there follows, that whereas all that which the Christian God begets must of necessity share in the oneness of God, all that which does not share in his oneness must of necessity be not begotten but created.

Such is, in fact, the Christian world of Saint Augustine. On the one side, God, one in the Trinity of a single, self-existing substance; on the other side, all that which, because it has but a received existence, is not God. Unlike the Plotinian dividing line which we have seen running between the One and all that is begotten by the One, the Christian dividing line runs between runs between God, including his own begotten Word, and all that is created by God. As one among God's creatures, man finds himself therein excluded from the order of the divine. Between 'Him who is' and ourselves, there is the infinite metaphysical chasm which separates the complete self-sufficiency of His own existence from the intrinsic lack of necessity of our own existence. Nothing can bridge such a chasm, save a free act of the divine will only. This is why, from the time of Saint Augustine up to our own days, human reason has been up against the tremendously difficult task of reaching a transcendent God whose pure act of existing is radically distinct from our own borrowed existence. How can man, who out of himself is not, living in a world of things which out of themselves are not, reach, by means of reason alone, 'Him who is'? Such is, to a Christian, the fundamental problem of natural theology" (52-54).

Length of Relevant Material: 38-73

Hard Copy (pages): 36 pp.

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
1. Such shall certainly inherit everlasting life, because they are in present possession of it. See the text: 'Hath everlasting life!' Hath it already begun in his soul. But if any one miss of eternal life, then it is not true that he ever had it. For it is a contradiction in terms, to say, one hath everlasting life, and yet this life may come to an end, and be eternally lost. Therefore, whatever new kind of life one may be possessed of who believes on Christ, yet if it ever come to an end, it cannot, with any propriety, be called everlasting life. But this faith, or believing, spoken of in our text, is the beginning of an everlasting or endless life, and the substance of things hoped for; because it consists in, or implies the knowledge of God, whom to know is eternal life.

2. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance. That is, when God gives grace, faith, or everlasting life to any, he never repents and takes them away again. He never calls any to repentance and faith, and then is sorry for it, & takes them away. God's promises in Christ, are not yea, and nay, but in him are yea. 'For all the promises of God in him are yea, and in him amen, to the glory of God.' When God says yea, he says amen also; even so let it be. Every one, therfore, who hath everlasting life, and is called to repentance, may depend upon it that God never will repent, and take it away; but will continue it forever" (7-8).

"And the Apostle Paul, Hebrews iii. 14, says-- 'For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end.' This plainly implies, that if men do not hold the beginning of their confidence steadfast unto the end, it will be a proof against them that they never were by faith made partakers of Christ.

"Thus, as it is evident that every one who does not hold out to the end, never was really made a partaker of Christ by faith, so every one who is made a partaker of Christ by faith, will certainly hold the beginning of his confidence steadfast unto the end. For the righteous shall hold on his way . . ." (13).

Hard Copy (pages): 1-24

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Comment: Taggart outlines his understanding of the Methodist belief that perfection is attainable in this life, and then refutes it with his own understanding of Christian scripture and doctrine. Taggart disagrees with the idea of unconditional sanctification, and yet at the same time supports an eventual universal salvation, attainable only in the life to come.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: June 23, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "But even now it abundantly appears, that the methods of providence and grace, express nothing like God's being pleased with sin, or tolerating his people in being pleased with sin. He seems rather to exercise his people in this long and painful conflict, wherein they have repeated experience of the lusting of the flesh against the spirit, and of the spirit against the flesh, and they may see more of the evil, and taste more of the bitterness of sin, and feel a more entire dependence upon Christ, and his grace, to do all that in them and for them, of which they stand in need, as well as be qualified to sing, in higher strains, the riches of that grace, and the stability of that everlasting covenant, which, through such a great variety of dangers and difficulties hath brought them all home to glory, suffering not so much as one of them to be lost" (132)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg.
Hard Copy (pages): pg. 132
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________________________

Topics: Lucifer; Opposition in all things; Creation
Author: Samuel Worcester, D.D.
Title of Book: Sermons on Various Subjects, Practical and Doctrinal
Title of Chapter: "Sermon II"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Salem, MA
Publisher: Henry Whipple
Date of Publication: 1823
Library Location: BX 7233 .W685 S4
Nature of Source: This book contains the collected sermons of Samuel Worcester, who was the late senior pastor of the Tabernacle Church in Salem, Massachusetts. According to the preface, Worcester was better known as the Corresponding Secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions than he was for his preaching. However, the content of the book comes from Worcester's own prepared sermons.

Comment: This passage caught my eye because of its use of the word, "coeternal." It suggests to me that the idea of something or someone being as self-existing as God was not an altogether new idea, even if it was immediately rejected. However, in this passage that term is only applied to God and Lucifer, and does not even allude to the possibility of God's children sharing a coeternal past. After all, if even the forces of darkness stem from the same "First Cause," why should we be any different?
Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 13, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "In the false religion of Persia, the country of Cyrus, it was a fundamental principle, that there were two coeternal beings; the one, the author of all good, whose emblem was light: the other, the author of all evil, whose emblem was darkness. In opposition to this, the God of Israel takes occasion to say, I am Jehovah, and there is none else. I form the light and create darkness; I make peace, and create evil; I Jehovah do all these things. Not only did the Persians need to be corrected, in regard to the great First Cause; but, among the Jews, there were many, who were disposed presumptuously to arraign his providence, and to find fault with his dealings towards his people" (32).

Length of Relevant Material: 13 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 31-43

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Men become gods

Author: Clement of Alexandria (trans. G.W. Butterworth)

Title of Book: Clement of Alexandria

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: London

Publisher: William Heinemann Ltd.

Date of Publication: 1919

Library Location: BR 65 .C65 P66 1919

Nature of Source: Clement of Alexandria was probably born in Athens roughly 150
A.D. Although he was probably not a Christian at the outset of his life, he later converted and became a presbyter of the church in Alexandria, teaching for more than twenty years.
From his citations it appears that Clement was not only versed in the Old and New Testaments, but also in a wide variety of Greek literature, including Plato. Although Clement uses Platonic examples to clarify his teachings, it is unclear how much he believed in the philosopher's ideas. On a whole, Clement taught against mainstream Greek philosophy and religion.

Comment: This passage briefly mentions the idea of men following Christ's example to become gods. From the passages before and after this statement, it can be inferred that Clement equated becoming a god with salvation, but what remains unclear is whether he phrased the teaching in this way because of his polytheistic audience. Keith Norman, in his article entitled "Divinization: The Forgotten Teaching of Early Christianity," says that the idea of men becoming gods was espoused by many early Christian authorities, and that Clement referred to this idea in other works (Sunstone, Winter 1975, pp. 14-19).

Researcher: Scott Goodwin    Date: July 1, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "As for you, however, if you do not trust the prophets, and if you suppose both the fire and the men who say it to be a legend, the Lord himself shall speak to you, He 'who being in the form of God did not count His equality with God as an opportunity for gain, but emptied Himself,' the God of compassion who is eager to save man. And the Word himself now speaks to you plainly, putting to shame your unbelief, yes, I say, the Word of God speaks, having become man, in order that such as you may learn from man how it is even possible for man to become a god" (23)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Topics: Men become gods; Adam; Eternity of matter; God's purpose in creation
Author: Samuel Worcester, D.D.
Title of Book: Sermons on Various Subjects, Practical and Doctrinal
Title of Chapter: "Sermon II"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Salem, MA
Publisher: Henry Whipple
Date of Publication: 1823
Library Location: BX 7233 .W685 S4
Nature of Source: This book contains the collected sermons of Samuel Worcester, who was the late senior pastor of the Tabernacle Church in Salem, Massachusetts. According to the preface, Worcester was better known as the Corresponding Secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions than he was for his preaching. However, the content of the book comes from Worcester's own prepared sermons.
Comment: I found this passage relevant not because it bears any striking resemblance to Latter-day Saint doctrine, but because it demonstrates why Joseph explained the King Follett discourse the way he did. Long before he began teaching that men could become gods, Joseph prepared the minds of the people by teaching that the soul was not created by God, but is co-eternal with Him. As the passage below demonstrates, to say that God created man entirely is to say that man is completely dependant on Him, and always will be. Joseph circumvented this conclusion by teaching that there was a part of mankind that didn't depend on God for its existence. That is what makes reaching God's level possible.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 13, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "We are led to consider the dependent state of mankind. About fifty eight centuries ago the race of mankind began to exist. Before that date, no human being existed in the universe. And God said, Let us make man. It rested, then, entirely, with the sovereign good pleasure of God, whether there should be such a race of beings. For who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or, being his counsellor, hath taught him? It was his infinite and eternal good pleasure, that mankind should exist; and, therefore, at the appointed moment, he formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. Such was the origin of our being; and the same divine hand, which first fashioned our clay, has supported our race, through all successive generations. Adam, in the moulding hand of his Maker, was no more dependent, then have been all his posterity. At the sovereign good pleasure of God, all the generations of men commenced their existence; and by his preserving and all supporting providence, they are continued in being. How strong is that hand, which bears up the pillars of the universe! How wonderful that providence, which preserves and sustains unnumbered millions of beings! Alas! that man should dare strive with his Maker!" (38-39).
Topics: Men become Gods; Creation
Author: Hans Jonas
Title of Book: The Gnostic Religion (2nd edition)
Title of Chapter: "The Poimandres of Hermes Trismegistus"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: Beacon Press
Date of Publication: 1963
Library Location: BT 1390 .J62 1963
Nature of Source: Not only does this book give a detailed overview of the Gnostic system of belief, but it also devotes individual chapters to explaining the differences in Gnosticism's most distinct variations. This makes the book a god secondary source for Simon Magus, Marcion, Hermes Trismegistus, Valentinus, and Mani.
Comment: This passage was taken from the Festugière translation of the Corpus Hermeticum, which had its origins in the Renaissance and was probably the most influential version of the ancient work. The editorial comments are Jonas' own, although I find his understanding of the text to be consistent with my own. Jonas notes that the Gnostic/Hermetic idea of divinization was more like a return or reassimilation into God than it was an attainment a separate Godhood.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 21, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "[The last part of the instruction (24-26) is devoted to the soul's ascent after death. First at the dissolution of the material body you yield up to the demon you sensuous nature (?) Now ineffective, and the bodily senses return each to its source among the elements.] '25) And thereafter, man thrusts upward through the Harmony, and to the first zone he surrenders the power to grow and to decrease, and to the second the machinations of evil cunning, ow rendered powerless, and to the third the deceit of concupiscence, now rendered powerless, and to the fourth the arrogance of dominion, drained of [or: now impotent to achieve] its ambition, and to the fifth the impious audacity and the rashness of impulsive deed, and to the sixth the evil appetites of wealth, now rendered powerless, and to the seventh zone the lying that ensnares. (26) and then denuded of the effects of the Harmony, he enters the nature of the Ogdoas [i.e., the eighth sphere, that of the fixed stars], now in possession of his own power, and with those already there exalts the Father; and those present rejoice with him at his presence, and having become like his companions he hears also certain powers above the eighth sphere exalting God with a sweet voice. And then in procession they rise up towards the Father and give themselves up to the Powers, and having become Powers themselves, enter the Godhead. This is the good end of those who have attained gnosis: to become God" (153).
Bloom is not so much a historian as he is a literary and cultural critic, but with those credentials he considers himself to be well qualified to discuss the American belief system. By "American Religion," Bloom does not refer to a particular denomination or church, but instead offers the thesis that America as a unique land and culture has an ingrained set of ideals that act as a sort of national religious faith. Bloom further sees Mormonism as the best example of the American Religion embodied, especially because Mormonism has its roots in Early America itself.

Comment: In this passage Bloom suggests that Mormonism enjoys such success and progress in America because its doctrine corresponds directly with the way that Americans inherently view themselves, anyway.

Excerpt (pages): "But I come here to a central argument of this book. The God of the American Religion is not a creator-God, because the American never was created, and so the American has at least part of the God within herself. Freedom for an American, as I have intimated throughout, means two things: being free of the Creation, and being free of the presence of other humans. The Mormons rejoice in the first freedom, while fleeing the solitude of the second, which is to be alone with Jesus, as is granted to the Southern Baptist Moderates. Mormons have a Gnostic freedom from the world of nature, a necessary liberty for men who aspire to become gods, each with his own planet, a world altogether his own" (114).

Length of Relevant Material: 17 pp.

Topics: Men become Gods; Justification; Sanctification
Author: John Wesley
Title of Book: A Form of Discipline, for the Ministers, Preachers, and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, Considered and Approved at a Conference Held at Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, On Monday the 27th of December, 1784
Title of Article: "A Plain Account of Christian Perfection as Believed and Taught by the Rev. Mr. John Wesley, From the Year 1725, to the Year 1765"

Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: William Ross
Date of Publication: 1789
Library Location: 080 Sh64 EVANS 21961
Nature of Source: This book contains several key Methodist texts which outline most of its basic practices and beliefs. In "Plain Account," Wesley explains how he came to an understanding of what he called "Perfection," based on his literal interpretation of biblical passages.

Comment: Here Wesley outlines his basic beliefs on the subject of Perfectionism, which maintained a significant influence in Early American Christianity. Authors on the subject of the Perfectionist or Sanctification movements often refer to Wesley as an important figure in the development of the Perfectionist ideology, since his ideas served as the inspiration for many important proponents of Perfectionism whose teachings became prominent nearly a decades later. Note, however, that Wesley's definition of perfection poses certain semantic difficulties, since he neither believes that achieving perfection signifies neither an end of progression nor the attainment of the kind of absolute perfection that God alone may possess. However, the idea that perfection can only come with continual effort meshes well with other progressive world-views, including that of Joseph Smith.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 1, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "In the year 1764, upon a review of the whole subject, I wrote down the sum of what I had observed, in the following short propositions:
'1. There is such a thing as perfection; for it is again and again mentioned in scripture.
2. It is not so early as justification; for justified persons are to go on to perfection. Heb. vi. 1.
3. It is not so late as death; for St. Paul speaks of living men that were perfect. Phil. iii. 15.
4. It is not absolute. Absolute perfection belongs not to man, nor to angels; but to God alone.
5. It does not make man infallible: none is infallible while he remains in the body.
6. Is it sinless? It is not worth while to contend for a term. It is salvation from sin.
7. It is perfect love; 1 John iv. 18. This is the essence of it: its properties, or inseparable fruits, are rejoicing evermore, praying without ceasing, and in every thing giving thanks. 1 Thes. v. 16, &c.
8. It is improvable. It is far from lying in an indivisible point, from being incapable of increase, that one perfected in love, may grow in grace far swifter than he did before.
9. It is omissible, capable of being lost; of which we have numerous instances. But we were not thoroughly convinced of this 'till five or six years ago.
10. It is constantly both preceded and followed by a gradual work" (126-127).

Hard Copy (pages): 43-131
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
This book features a new English translation of the Greek Corpus Hermeticum, a series of treatises concerning man's relationship to God that were produced in Roman Egypt. Hermes Trismegistus, a "semi-divine sage or even a god," has been attributed as the author of the treatises, supposedly having written the original documents in Egyptian around the first century A.D. The Corpus Hermetica was also written in Greek, Latin and Arabic, and gained considerable attention in the 17th century, thanks to a 15th century Latin translation.

Comment: This passage reveals the Hermetic belief in man's divine potential. John L. Brooke has made the assertion, in his book The Refiner's Fire, that Joseph Smith's teachings about men becoming gods were actually taken from the Hermetic tradition, so these Hermetic texts are useful to make comparisons with the doctrine Smith taught. Compare the excerpt from Copenhaver's translation with the same passage in A.D. Nock and A.J. Festugiere's earlier translation:

*Man is a divine being, to be compared not with the other earthly beings, but with those who are called gods, up in the heavens. Rather, if one must dare to speak the truth, the true Man is above even the gods, or at least fully their equal. After all, none of the celestial gods will leave the heavenly frontiers and descend to earth; yet Man ascends even into the heavens, and measures them, and knows their heights and depths, and everything else about them he learns with exactitude. What is even more remarkable, he establishes himself on high without even leaving the earth, so far does his power extend. We must presume to say that earthly Man is a mortal god, and that the celestial God is an immortal man. And so it is through these two, the world and Man, that all things exist; but they were all created by the One. (qtd. in The Egyptian Hermes by Garth Fowden, pg. 111)* immortal human. Through these two, then, cosmos and human, all things exist, but they all exist by the action of the one" (36)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg.

Hard Copy (pages): pg. 36

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Men become gods; Progressive

Author: Carl L. Becker

Title of Book: The Heavenly City of Eighteenth Century Philosophers

Title of Chapter: "The Uses of Posterity"

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New Haven, Connecticut

Publisher: Yale University Press

Date of Publication: 1932

Library Location: B 802 .B4 1966

Nature of Source: This book, based on a series of lectures given at the Yale School of Law in 1931, argues that the Age of Enlightenment, proclaimed as an atmosphere of reason over faith, actually borrowed and internalized its most fundamental assumptions and attitudes from pre-Enlightenment Christianity.

Comment: Becker makes a convincing case for the internalization of Christian beliefs by Enlightenment philosophers who needed to make their ideas palatable to a civilization already steeped in religious faith. He shows how basic Christian optimism, manifest in its hope of an other-worldly perfection (heaven, salvation, and sanctification), became transformed into the enlightenment belief in Progress and the eventual perfectibility of society through man's own efforts. This general belief in Progress, although not in itself a religious idea, easily worked its way back into Christianity, influencing Christian ideas of the millennium and man's eternal progression. America as well as Europe was so influenced by the longstanding Enlightenment emphasis on progress that it probably made Joseph Smith's revelations on eternal progression more palatable.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin

Date: June 28, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "In the later eighteenth century this mood was replaced by another; complaisance gave way to discontent. Optimism remains, is even intensified; but it is no longer an optimism resting on satisfaction with things as they are. It is an optimism projected into the future, sustained by the conviction that what is wrong now will shortly be set right. . . .

"In the seventeenth century Hakewill had advanced, as one reason for denying the "world's universal decay," the pragmatic argument that such an idea 'quails the hopes and blunts the edge of men's endeavours.' It is in the later eighteenth century that we can verify the reverse of this idea, namely, that when men hope much and greatly endeavor they are eager to believe in the world's speedy and universal amelioration. The determination to set things right, which culminated in the great Revolution, generated and sustained and gave an emotional and even a religious quality to the conviction that the future--the immediate future it might very well be--would be infinitely better than the present or the past" (137-139)

Hard Copy (pages): 119-150
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Men become Gods; Progressive
Author: Carl L. Becker
Title of Book: The Heavenly City of Eighteenth Century Philosophers
Title of Chapter: "The Uses of Posterity"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New Haven, Connecticut
Publisher: Yale University Press
Date of Publication: 1932
Library Location: B 802 .B4 1966
Nature of Source: This book, based on a series of lectures given at the Yale School of Law in 1931, argues that the Age of Enlightenment, proclaimed as an atmosphere of reason over faith, actually borrowed and internalized its most fundamental assumptions and attitudes from pre-Enlightenment Christianity.
Comment: Becker makes a convincing case for the internalization of Christian beliefs by Enlightenment philosophers who needed to make their ideas palatable to a civilization already steeped in religious faith. He shows how basic Christian optimism, manifest in its hope of an other-worldly perfection (heaven, salvation, and sanctification), became transformed into the enlightenment belief in Progress and the eventual perfectibility of society through man's own efforts. This general belief in Progress, although not in itself a religious idea, easily worked its way back into Christianity, influencing Christian ideas of the millennium and man's eternal progression. America, as well as Europe, was flooded with this Progressive optimism to the extent that it probably made Joseph Smith's revelations on progression more palatable.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin       Date: June 28, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "But the tenacious strength of the Christian story was independent of its historical accidents. The importance of the Christian story was that it announced with authority (whether truly or not matters little) that the life of man has significance, a universal significance transcending and including the temporal experience of the individual. This was the secret of its enduring strength, that it irradiated pessimism with hope: it liberated the mind of man from the cycles in which classical philosophy had inclosed it as in a prison, and by transferring the golden age from the past to the future substituted an optimistic for a disillusioned view of human destiny.
The eighteenth-century Philosophers might therefore rewrite the story of man's first state, relegating the Garden of Eden to the limbo of myths; they might discover a new revelation in the book of nature to displace the revelation in Holy Writ; they might demonstrate that reason, supported by the universal assent of mankind as recorded in history, was a more infallible authority than church and state--they might well do all this and yet find their task but half finished. No "return," no "rebirth" of classical philosophy, however idealized and humanized, no worship of ancestors long since dead, or pale imitations of Greek pessimism would suffice for a society that had been so long and so well taught to look forward to another and better world to come. Without a new heaven to replace the old, and new way of salvation, of attaining perfection, the religion of humanity would appeal in vain to the common run of men.

The new heaven had to be located somewhere within the confines of the earthly life, since it was an article of philosophical faith that the end of life is life itself, the perfected temporal life of man; and in the future, since the temporal life was not yet perfected. But if the celestial heaven was to be dismantled in order to be rebuilt on earth, it seemed that the salvation of mankind must be attained, not by some outside, miraculous, catastrophic agency (God or the philosopher-king), but by man himself, by the progressive improvement made by the efforts of successive generations of men; and in this cooperative enterprise posterity had its undeniable uses: posterity would complete what the past and present had begun. . . Thus, the Philosophers called in posterity to exorcise the double illusion of the Christian paradise and the golden age of antiquity. For the love of God they substituted love of humanity; for the vicarious atonement the perfectibility of man through his own efforts; and for the hope of immortality in another world the hope of living in the memory of future generations" (128-130).
of Hermetism, both within Egypt and in the rest of the Graeco-Roman world" (xxvi-xxvii).

Comment: The world view of the Hermetic tradition has some very obvious similarities to the world view established by Joseph Smith, particularly in his later ministry. What remains unclear is what, if any, historical connection there is between the two schools of thought. The Hermetic texts were being widely read by 1st century A.D. but existed apart from mainstream Christianity, so any potential routes between those texts and Joseph Smith's New England remain somewhat obscure. However, the parallels are worth noting: the relationship between God and Man, the search for salvation through knowledge of God, the ascension to Godhood, etc. It is also interesting to note that the hermetic belief in divinization, like the LDS belief in achieving Godhood, is both personal and the result of conscious effort. On the other hand, the two views differ in their conception of Godhood, for whereas the Hermetics believed in assimilation into the One God, LDS belief purports a separate and distinct Godhood.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin;
Date: June 30, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "It should be clear by now that the knowledge of God that the Hermetic initiation is supposed to bring is not an external knowledge, of one being by another, but an actual assumption by the initiate of the attributes of God: in short, divinization. The way of Hermes is the 'way of immortality'; and its end is reached when the purified soul is absorbed into God, so that the reborn man, although still a composite of body and soul, can himself fairly be called a god. . . . This 'way of Hermes' is to be distinguished from the routes by which other contemporaries reached the divine realm. The Hermetist's was a divinization neither public and official as that of the emperor, nor accorded in consequence of death as was increasingly the custom at this time regardless of social status. It was, rather, deeply private, and the reward of conscious effort--no mere rite of passage. And while the emperor and the dead were placed among, indeed regarded as of a status somewhat inferior to, the plurality of traditional gods, the Hermetist was assimilated to the One God" (110-111).

Length of Relevant Material: 12 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 104-115

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Men become gods; Salvation through knowledge; Intelligence and intelligences; Spirit, soul, and body; Plurality of gods

Author: Etienne Gilson

Title of Book: God and Philosophy

Title of Chapter: "God and Christian Philosophy"

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New Haven, Connecticut

Publisher: Yale University Press

Date of Publication: April, 1941

Library Location: BT 101 .G53
Nature of Source: This book is based on a series of lectures at Indiana University, given by the then visiting professor, Etienne Gilson from the Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies in Toronto. Specializing in philosophy, Gilson uses the book to outline the relationship and difficulties between God and metaphysics. The chapter from which this excerpt is taken focuses on how theologians and philosophers have tried to reconcile the Christian conception of God with philosophy.

Comment: Here Gilson gives a brief summary/history of how early Christians tried to apply Platonic and Plotinian philosophy to the Christian Creator. It is in this time period that the long-standing traditions of God as "the One" Absolute Creator or Emanator and Man as Finite creation or emanation of godhood get formed, which continued to affect how Christians in the 19th century saw themselves and their potential for growth (relative to God).

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 6, 1999

Excerpt (pages): 'When Plotinos and Saint John thus met in the mind of Augustine, their combination was instantaneous. Reading the gospel into Plotinos' Enneads, he found that the soul of man, though it 'bears witness of the light,' yet itself 'is not that light; but the Word of God, being God, is that true light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.' Why should not men use this constant presence of the divine light in their souls as an always open way to the Christian God?

"This is precisely what Augustine did, or, at least, what he tried to do, for the task proved to be a much more difficult one than he himself had imagined. In inheriting the philosophical world of Plato, Augustine had fallen heir to Plato's man. Now, man, as Plato conceived him, was not the substantial unity of body and soul; he was essentially a soul. Instead of saying that man has a soul, we should therefore say that man is a particular soul, that is to say, an intelligent, intelligible, and eternally living substance, which, though it now happens to be conjoined to a body, has always existed before it and is ultimately destined to outlive it. In Plato's own words, man is 'a soul using a body,' but he is no more his body than a worker is the tools he uses or than any one of us is his own garments.

"By accepting this definition of man, Augustine was putting himself in an exceedingly awkward philosophical position. In Plato's doctrine, and still more clearly in that of Plotinos, to be purely intelligible, living, and immortal substance was exactly to be a god. Human souls then are just so many gods. When a man philosophizes and, discarding his body, focuses his mind upon intelligible truth, he simply behaves like a god who remembers to be a god. Rightly to philosophize then is nothing else, for each and every one of us, than to behave as becomes the god which each and every one of us actually is. True, we are but individual Intelligences radiated by the supreme Intellect, and therefore by the One. For this very reason, just as we are by and in the One, we also know, and contemplate, by and in the light of the supreme Intellect who eternally emanates from the One. Yet, when all is said and done, we nevertheless are so many gods, lesser gods as we may be, patiently working our way back into the company of our fellow gods. Dialectics, as Plato and Plotinos understood it, was but the method which enables man to achieve a sort of philosophical salvation, by progressively raising him to the full awareness of his own divinity. A god may eventually forget himself but he cannot possibly stand in need of being saved.
"This is the fundamental reason why Saint Augustine has found it so hard to reach the Christian God by means of methods borrowed from Plato and Plotinos. To him, as to them, all that was immaterial, intelligible, and true was divine in its own right; but, whereas, in Plato's philosophy, man was naturally entitled to the possession of truth as a divinity is entitled to the possession of things divine, he could no longer appear as entitled to it in a Christian philosophy where, metaphysically speaking, man in no way belongs in the divine order. Hence this important consequence, that man was bound to appear to Augustine as a creature endowed with something that was divine in its own right. If truth is divine, and if man is not a god, man should not be possessed of truth. In fact, however man is; consequently, the only conceivable way for Augustine to account for the paradoxical presence of intelligible truth, which is divine, in man, who is not a god, was to consider man as knowing in the permanent light of a supremely intelligible and self-subsisting truth, that is, in the light of God" (55-59)

Length of Relevant Material: 38-73

Hard Copy (pages): 36 pp.

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Men become gods; Seeing God; Three degrees of glory; Eternal life

Author: Keith Norman

Title of Book: Deification: The Content of Athanasian Soteriology

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Ann Arbor, MI

Publisher: University Microfilms International

Date of Publication: 1980

Library Location: BT 752 .N67x 1980

Nature of Source: The following passages were taken from the Doctoral thesis of Keith Norman, completed at Duke University. Although the dissertation primarily concerns itself with the writings of Athanasius, it includes the writings of his predecessors to put his ideas into historical perspective. This passage concerns Irenaeus of Lyons, an early church authority whose writings fall somewhere between 177 and 202 A.D.

Comment: This passages gives a basic outline of Irenaeus' fundamental teachings regarding deification. Norman's point is to show that, contrary to popular belief, the idea of men becoming gods is not new. Instead, he demonstrates that the idea existed for the first several centuries after Christ, and that it was only with the adoption of certain Platonic principles that the idea was rejected. This excerpt is heavily footnoted, so those who wish to investigate the primary sources should consult the original text.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin      Date: July 2, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "The content of deification for Irenaeus amply justifies the use of the idea. It includes immortality, which tends to be the most prominent characteristic in polemical contexts. Although Harnack characterized Irenaeus' apotheosis of mortal man through his acquisition of immortality as 'the idea of salvation which was taught in the ancient mysteries,' Irenaeus' idea of immortality as the victorious action of God in resurrection is far removed from the Hellenistic doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul. Irenaeus insisted that the soul's immortality is by grace, not nature. More importantly, he held to a general resurrection of all flesh, albeit to differing levels of glory or punishment. This means that immortality alone does not constitute deification for Irenaeus; mere existence alone does not imply the blessedness of the divine life. Only 'the perfect' or 'the spiritual' are joined to God, and even among them there are gradations of exaltation.

"This personal communion or fellowship with God includes eternal life in the fullest sense, incorruptibility, an inheritance of glory, and 'the full knowledge and enjoyment of God.' The visio Dei is the epitome of this soteriology; 'For Irenaeus, to see God is the equivalent of being divinized.' Irenaeus sets forth the standard Patristic attitude: contemplation of God constitutes the spiritual life, and the culmination of that life is the direct vision of God face to face, which is only possible for a fellow being--one who is like God" (58-60).

Length of Relevant Material: 9 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 54-62
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Mysteries of God (esoteric knowledge); Learning; Adam; Jews
Author: Rev. Edward Burton, D.D.
Title of Book: An Inquiry Into the Heresies of the Apostolic Age in Eight Sermons
Title of Chapter: "Lecture II"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Oxford
Publisher: Samuel Collingwood, Printer to the University
Date of Publication: 1829
Library Location: BT 1319 .B87 1980
Nature of Source: This book is comprised of the written texts for a series of eight lectures that were given by Rev. Burton at Oxford in 1829. Rev. Burton, described on the title page as "Regius Professor of Divinity and Canon of Christ Church," mentions in his first lecture that the object of his texts is to discuss all of the heresies mentioned in the New Testament or otherwise, "which infested the church in the lifetime of the apostles" (3). In his conception, the apostolic age ended with the death of St. John, which he surmises must have been at the start of the second century.

Comment: I cite this passage mainly as evidence of what types of things were known about the Cabala during the lifetime of Joseph Smith. However, I found it particularly interesting that the speaker accredits the Cabalists with teaching that a tradition of secret doctrine have been passed down from Adam through the Patriarchs. This resonates with LDS teachings of sacred temple instruction. The passage is also useful for its discussion of what causality, if any, exists between Cabala and Gnosticism.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: July 16, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The Jewish Cabbala may be loosely defined to be a mystical system, affecting the theory and practice of religion, founded upon oral tradition. It has been disputed, at what time the Cabbala may be said to have begun: and it has been argued, because a Rabbi at the end of the second century was the first to make a collection of the scattered traditions of his countrymen, that the Cabbala, as a system, did not exist before, and that therefore it could not have contributed to the rise of Gnosticism. It has however been satisfactorily shewn, that the Presidents of the Sanhedrim, for several years before the birth of Christ, had gradually been raising unwritten tradition to a level with the written law. If we would believe the Cabbalists themselves, a collection of those traditions had already been made by Ezra: but such a document has never been produced. They say also, that God revealed some secret doctrines to Adam, which were received from him by tradition: similar doctrines were received from Abraham and Moses: and hence these unwritten traditions were known by the name of Cabbala, from a Hebrew word signifying to receive. It will perhaps be conceded, that some communications were made to the Patriarchs beyond those which the sacred books have recorded. Thus the history of the Creation, if it was known to the Jews before the time of Moses, must have been preserved among them by an unwritten tradition. It is also plain, that a mystical interpretation of scripture, which is another important part of the Cabbala, did not rest entirely upon a false and artificial foundation. St. Paul has taught us, that under certain restrictions we are authorized in extracting a double sense from scripture: and I say this to shew, what has been the conclusion of learned men, and which seems in fact to be the fair and rational conclusion, that there was once a pure Cabbala, that is, there were some genuine unwritten traditions; and there was a sober and rational mode of allegorizing scripture: but in both these points the later Jews sadly departed from the simplicity of their fathers. In both these points there was a striking resemblance between the Cabbalists and the Gnostics. With the latter, to interpret scripture literally was the exception; and they only did it, when it suited their purpose: their rule was to extort a hidden meaning from every passage; and to make every word, and almost every letter, contain a mystical allusion. The Gnostics also resembled the Cabbalists in appealing to oral tradition. They said, that Christ taught two doctrines; one, the common and popular; and another, which he delivered to his disciples only. But this was a small part of the resemblance between the Cabbalists and the Gnostics: nor would it have been inferred, that the two doctrines were connected, if the Cabbala had not contained a system of emanations, which bears some affinity to that adopted by the Gnostics" (51-53).

Hard Copy (pages): 29-56
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Mysteries of God (esoteric knowledge); Salvation through knowledge; Learning
Author: Garth Fowden
Title of Book: The Egyptian Hermes
Title of Chapter: "Religio Mentis"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Cambridge, U.K.
Publisher: University Press
Date of Publication: 1986
Nature of Source: This book is a self-described study into the social milieu of late pagan thought. The author says that he was curious about what most literate pagans in the Greek-speaking world believed, particularly as it related to their relationship with God, and how they came to this knowledge. In the author's own words, the organization of the book is as follows: "The book is arranged in three parts. The first located the Hermetic literature's origin in the fusion of Egyptian and Greek ways of thought that occurred in the Nile valley during the Ptolemaic and Roman periods. Part II argues that Hermetism [also known as Hermeticism] can only be properly understood if the technical and philosophical books are seen as enshrining related aspects of Man's attempt to understand himself, the world around him, and God--in fact, as a practical spiritual 'way'. . . Finally, part III addresses itself to the historical evidence for the milieu and audience of Hermetism, both within Egypt and in the rest of the Graeco-Roman world" (xxvi-xxvii).

Comment: The world view of the Hermetic tradition has some very obvious similarities to the world view established by Joseph Smith, particularly in his later ministry. What remains unclear is what, if any, historical connection there is between the two schools of thought. The Hermetic texts were being widely read by 1st century A.D. but existed apart from mainstream Christianity, so any potential routes between those texts and Joseph Smith's New England remain somewhat obscure. However, the parallels are worth noting: the relationship between God and Man, the search for salvation through knowledge of God, the ascension to Godhood, etc.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin        Date: June 30, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "This comparison with the late antique Platonists raises a final question: How may we characterize the way of Hermes in general doctrinal terms? . . . The answer must lie in the central aspiration of the Hermetist to attain knowledge of God. The idea that one may 'know God' is extremely rare in the literature of classical and Hellenistic paganism, but common in Jewish and Christian usage; and its prominence in Hermetism is symptomatic of that preoccupation with the divine at the expense of the human sphere which was increasingly marked in late paganism. For the Hermetist, true philosophy was piety towards God and contemplation of His works; and although the Hemetic paideia embraced, in theory, all forms of knowledge of God's creation, the author of the Perfect discourse could reject as the sin of curiosity the high estimation in which traditional philosophers held the natural sciences, mathematics, astronomy, music and so forth, and emphasize their merely auxiliary role in the pursuit of the 'pura sanctaque philosophia'. In fact, for the Hermetist no product of human intellectual investigation, not even knowledge of God, was an end in itself; for underlying all human thought and action is the desire for release from this world of flux and materiality, for the salvation of the soul. Accordingly, the only truly useful knowledge is that of the way of immortality; and such knowledge was treated, naturally enough, as a treasure whose existence ought not to be casually revealed to all and sundry. It is this dualist, soteriological and esoteric philosophy that lies at the heart of the gnostic systems that were so widely diffused in the Roman empire; and of the pagan aspect of this movement is by far the best-documented example" (112-113)

Length of Relevant Material: 12 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 104-115
Topics: New Jerusalem; One true church; Judgement; Destruction; Second Coming; New Church; Judgement Day; Sectarian strife
Author: None given
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "SWEDENBORGIANS"
Title of Periodical: The Reflector
Place of Publication: Palmyra, NY
Publisher: O. Dogberry ??
Date of Publication: March 16, 1830
Library Location: 071 R259 1829 (special collections--vault)
Nature of Source: Other than that this is a newspaper contemporary with Joseph Smith, I could find no information about it.
Comment: This excerpt is taken from a larger article that outlines most of Swedenborg's basic beliefs and religious views. Because of his unique view of the spirit world (that it co-exists with the natural world on a level that cannot be perceived except through spiritual means), he rejects such ideas as a physical resurrection and a literal destruction of the world.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: June 18, 1999
Excerpt (pages):
"[Emanuel Swedenborg and his followers believe] That all those passages in the Scripture generally supposed to signify the destruction of the world by fire, and commonly called the last judgement, must be understood according to the above-mentioned science of correspondences, which teaches, that by the end of the world, or consummation of the age, is not signified the destruction of the world, but the destruction or end of the present Christian church, both among Roman Catholics and Protestants, of every description or denomination; and that the last judgement actually took place in the spiritual world in the year 1757; from which era is dated the second advent of the Lord, and the commencement of a new Christian church, which, they say, is meant by the new heaven and new earth in the Revelation, and the New Jerusalem thence descending" (87).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg.
Hard Copy (pages): pg. 87

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Plural worlds; Perfection; Progressive; Spirit child of God; Men become Gods
Author: Rev. Edward D. Griffin, D.D.
Title of Book: Sermons by the Late Rev. Edward D. Griffin, D.D., Vol. II
Title of Chapter: "Heaven"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
The employment of heaven is delightful. The saints are delivered from all the cares and toils of this life, and have nothing to do but serve and praise God, to go on his errands to different worlds, to study into the mysteries of his nature and the wonders of his works, and to converse with their brethren on these high and exhaustless themes.--Every faculty has attained its full employment; the understanding in grasping the great truths of God and expiating among the glories of nature; the memory in going over his past dispensations and collecting materials for an everlasting monument of praise; the heart in loving and thanking him; the will in choosing him and his service; the eyes in beholding his glory; the hands and feet in doing his will; the tongue in high conversation and bursting songs.

"In that world they have attained to the perfection of all their powers; not to that perfection which excludes progress, but to that which fits them for the highest action and enjoyment that their capacities admit. They are delivered from every clog to mediation, devotion, or service, arising from a weak or disordered body; from all the passions and prejudices which warped their judgment here; from all those indiscretions by which they feared they should injure the sacred cause they loved; and attained unto unerring wisdom. Their memories are strengthened to recall the leading actions of their lives and the principal dealings of God with them. They are freed from all languor and wanderings in duty, and can hold their attention perpetually fixed without weariness or satiety.

"They have attained to the perfection of knowledge: not that perfection, I say again, which excludes progress, but that which prevents error. They have advanced greatly in the positive knowledge of all those things which a sanctified spirit desires to know. The feeblest infant that has gone to heaven, probably knows more of God than all the divines on earth. They see as they are seen and they know as they are known. Besides the light directly shed upon them, in the excursions which they make through the universe they have a glorious opportunity to study God in his works and dispensations.
"They have escaped from all the sufferings of the present life; from sickness and pain and the mortification of being laid aside as useless; from want and the fear of want; and have attained to the perfect gratification of every taste and desire,—to the possession of all things. . . . As heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, they own the sun, moon, and stars; they possess the eternal God.

"They have escaped from all the degradation and scorn and slander which their poverty drew upon them here, and have reached the highest honors of the sons of God. They have been crowned, and have sat down with Christ on his throne, with their golden harps and robes of light forever sing and forever shine" (437-439).

Topics: Resurrection; Plural worlds; spirit and matter; Astronomy; Angels

Author: Rev. Edward D. Griffin, D.D.

Title of Book: Sermons by the Late Rev. Edward D. Griffin, D.D., Vol. II

Title of Chapter: "Heaven"

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Albany, NY

Publisher: Packard, Van Benthuysen & Co.

Date of Publication: 1838

Library Location: BX 7233 .G75 S4 vol. 2

Nature of Source: The sermons from which the following passage was taken were given by Rev. Griffin, who was a congregationalist minister in Revolution-era New England. He was born on January 6, 1770 in East Hadden, Connecticut, and lived in New Hartford, Newark, Andover, Boston, and Williamstown before his death in Newark on November 8, 1837. Rev. Griffin's memoirs, which precede the collection of sermons, detail a well-established association with the religious events and trends of his day. He had a fairly close association with the Presbyterian church.

Comment: Although Griffin's entire sermon talks about the nature of heaven, this passage is the most explicit in describing its material nature. He seems to imply that spirits before the resurrection will also dwell in heaven, and that angels do not have physical bodies.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin  Date: June 24, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "One reason that heaven makes so little impression upon us is that we contemplate it in generals, and of course confusedly. We must take it in detail. We must go through its golden streets, and traverse its flowery fields, and examine its objects one by one. Let us spend a few moments in attempting this, and for a season imagine ourselves there.

"The reflection of least importance respecting that world is, that it is a pleasant country. In whatever part of the universe it is situated, there is a local heaven, where the body of Jesus is, where the bodies of Enoch, and Elijah, and those who arose with Christ are, and where the bodies of all the saints will be after the resurrection. Those bodies will be material, and of course will occupy space, and must have a local residence, as really as the bodies which are now on the earth. That country is already prepared, (it was "prepared from the foundation of the world," and is unquestionably material. The idea that the saints will have no place to dwell but in the air, has no countenance in the word of God. Their city, in more sense than one, "hath foundations." It is a real country; and my first remark is, that it is a pleasant country. He that could make the scenes which we behold, can unite the most beautiful of them into one and surpass them all. And there can be no doubt the place which he has chosen for the metropolis of his empire, and which Christ selected from all worlds for his residence and the residence of his Church must be the most beautiful of all the worlds he has made. It is set forth in Scripture under images drawn from the most enchanting objects of sense. I know that these are intended to illustrate its spiritual glory, but can you prove that this is all? Why are spiritual things set forth by sensible objects? You say, because men are in the body. And pray, will they not eternally be in the body after the resurrection? And will not an exhibition to the senses of the riches of the divine nature, be as useful an auxiliary to other revelations than as now. Nor can we doubt that unimbodied spirits are capable of beholding and enjoying the material works of God. Otherwise the material universe would be a blank to the angels, and to human spirits before the resurrection.

"We may then reasonably conclude that heaven is a world of more resplendent and varied beauty than the mortal eye has ever seen" (435-436).

Hard Copy (pages): 433-447
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________
Griffin echoes Smith's opening remarks from the King Follett discourse, saying that the purpose of this life is to learn about God's character, but while Smith builds on this idea by saying that we use this knowledge to become ourselves like God, Griffin keeps the relationship more static. When he says that knowledge of God exalts, he means an internal rather than literal exaltation.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin       Date: June 28, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "This knowledge [of God], at the same time that it is the most humbling, is the most exalting. One such view as Moses had, will raise the soul above the world and lift it to heaven. It will do more than all other views to ennoble the mind, to elevate it above the vulgar pursuits of men, and make it conversant with the skies. If it is a dignity to be intimately acquainted with great men, what is the dignity of knowing and being known of God? It is the most noble and sublime knowledge, and worthy of the most aspiring desires of the immortal mind" (283).

Length of Relevant Material: 17 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 273-289
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Salvation through knowledge; God's purpose in creation
Author: Rev. Edward D. Griffin, D.D.
Title of Book: Sermons by the Late Rev. Edward D. Griffin, D.D., Vol. I
Title of Chapter: "The Knowledge of God"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Packard, Van Benthuysen & Co.
Date of Publication: 1838
Library Location: BX 7233 .G75 S4 vol. 1
Nature of Source: The sermons from which the following passage was taken were given by Rev. Griffin, who was a congregationalist minister in Revolution-era New England. He was born on January 6, 1770 in East Hadden, Connecticut, and lived in New Hartford, Newark, Andover, Boston, and Williamstown before his death in Newark on November 8, 1837. Rev. Griffin's memoirs, which precede the collection of sermons, detail a well-established association with the religious events and trends of his day. He had a fairly close association with the Presbyterian church.
Comment: Griffin is a good preacher to analyze to get an impression of what were some of the key religious beliefs and assumptions at the time of Joseph Smith. In this sermon, Griffin echoes Smith's opening remarks from the King Follett discourse, saying that the purpose of this life is to learn about God's character, but while Smith builds on this idea by saying that we use this knowledge to become ourselves like God, Griffin keeps the relationship more static. In his view, we need to learn about God because of who He is, rather than for what we can become.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin       Date: June 28, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "In general it may be observed that the great end for which men were sent into the world was to learn the character of their maker, by studying his glories in his works and word, that they might obey and enjoy him. The great end which God had in view of all his works was to make an illustrious display of his perfections, that creatures might know him and be united to him in sublime and everlasting communion. All things which are proposed as objects of our belief or knowledge, are but one complicated lesson of God which we are sent into the world to learn. The vast and interesting object on which his divine eye is immovably fixed, and which in the progress of time he will fully attain, is to fill the world,—the universe,—with the knowledge of his glory. . . .

"Further, God is the being with whom we have the most intimate and interesting connexion [sic]; and therefore we ought certainly, and it chiefly concerns us, to become acquainted with him. He is the being with whom we chiefly have to do in time and eternity. It is in him that we live and move and have our being, and he will be our final Judge. He is the author of all our comforts on earth; and he will be to eternity either the author and object of our whole enjoyment, or the executioner of his wrath upon us. Should it not be a chief desire to get acquainted with the benefactor who has sent all our comforts to us for so many years, and with the fearful Name on which all our future destinies depend? Shall a man be anxious to see the generous stranger who once relieved his wants, or the relation in a foreign country who is to make him his heir? and shall we be indifferent to an acquaintance with our God?" (274-276)

Length of Relevant Material: 17 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 273-289
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Salvation through knowledge; Learning; Men become gods; Spirit child of God
Author: Garth Fowden
Title of Book: The Egyptian Hermes
Title of Chapter: "Religio Mentis"
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Cambridge, U.K.
Publisher: University Press
Date of Publication: 1986
Library Location: BF 1591 .F75 1986
Nature of Source: This book is a self-described study into the social milieu of late pagan thought. The author says that he was curious about what most literate pagans in the Greek-speaking world believed, particularly as it related to their relationship with God, and how they came to this knowledge. In the author's own words, the organization of the book is as follows: "The book is arranged in three parts. The first located the Hermetic literature's origin in the fusion of Egyptian and Greek ways of thought that occurred in the Nile valley during the Ptolemaic and Roman periods. Part II argues that Hermetism [also known as Hermeticism] can only be properly understood if the technical and philosophical books are seen as enshrining related aspects of Man's attempt to understand himself, the world around him, and God--in fact, as a practical spiritual 'way'. . . . Finally, part III addresses itself to the historical evidence for the milieu and audience of Hermetism, both within Egypt and in the rest of the Graeco-Roman world" (xxvi-xxvii).

Comment: The world view of the Hermetic tradition has some very obvious similarities to the world view established by Joseph Smith, particularly in his later ministry. What remains unclear is what, if any, historical connection there is between the two schools of thought. The Hermetic texts were being widely read by 1st century A.D. but existed apart from mainstream Christianity, so any potential routes between those texts and Joseph Smith's New England remain somewhat obscure. However, the parallels are worth noting: the relationship between God and Man, the search for salvation through knowledge of God, the ascension to Godhood, etc.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: June 30, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "So far, Hermetic gnosis has simply been defined as the knowledge of God that the initiate longs for. In order to understand better what this gnosis is, two further points should be borne in mind.

"In the first place, Man's contemplation of God is in some sense a two-way process. Not only does Man wish to know God, but God too desires to be known by the most glorious of His creations, Man; and to this end he freely bestows on the initiate some of his own power, mediated through a spiritual instructor. Indeed, Hermes goes so far as to assert, in Corpus Hermeticum XIII, that the mysteries of the spirit 'are not taught, but we are reminded of them by God, when he wishes'. . . . The Hermetic initiation, then, is not merely an encounter, but an interaction, between Man and God; and it is only by grasping the genuine reciprocity of this experience that we can appreciate the deeply gnostic core of Hermeticism.

"The second point arises from the first. Why should a transcendent God wish to be known by mere mortals? The Hermetists' answer is that the most glorious of God's creations is animated by a divine spark, and therefore himself divine. Man is of double nature, and so the difference between the divine and human spheres is less substantial than it seems. The idea is deceptively simple. In fact, very few men have any inkling of their own divinity; and it was for this reason that the Hermetists regarded an understanding of the origin and nature of the World and Man as an essential preliminary to spiritual illumination. 'To know the stages of the creative process is also to know the stages of one's own return to the root of all existence.' Man's crippling disability is his ignorance; and the Hermetist's highest aspiration was to overcome that ignorance and, by helping Man to understand his true nature, bring him at last to know God and assert his own divinity" (104-105).

Length of Relevant Material: 12 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 104-115

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Sanctification
Author: Samuel Taggart
Title of Book: A Scriptural Vindication
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
These excerpts were taken from the appendix of a book written by Samuel Taggart, whom the title page lists as "Pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Colrain." While the main body of the book concerns itself with the Presbyterian definition of perseverance (the final salvation of all believers), the following passage was taken from the book's Appendix, which responds to the corresponding doctrine of Methodism and, to a lesser degree, Calvinism.

Comment: Taggart outlines his understanding of the Methodist belief that perfection is attainable in this life, and then refutes it with his own understanding of Christian scripture and doctrine. Taggart disagrees with the idea of unconditional sanctification, and yet at the same time supports an eventual universal salvation, attainable only in the life to come.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: June 23, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "I have been larger upon this point of perfection, than I first intended, because it appears to be a darling topic with Methodists, one which all their preachers must not only profess to believe, but are expressly enjoined to preach. Platform page 22. 'Are you going on to perfection? Do you expect to be made perfect in love, in this life? Are you groaning after it?' Page 169. 'All our preachers should make a point or preaching Christian perfection to believers, constantly, strongly, and explicitly.' "And because it appears to me, to be a doctrine the belief of which is highly injurious to certain classes of people, particularly to such as have peculiar exercises with the body of sin, the strong remains of their various heart corruptions. This doctrine has a natural tendency to cause them to cast away their confidence, and give way to despondency. It wounds those whom the gospel balm is designed to heal. Instead of biding up the broken hearted, it widens the breach. It has also a tendency to strengthen the hands, or encrease [sic] the confidence of the self deceived hypocrite, who, being ignorant of God's righteousness, or of his own need of it, goes about to establish his own. None are more apt to dream of perfection than such. 'God, I thank thee, I am not as other men, I have walked in all good conscience,' is a language natural to people of this description. If perfection is attainable, who so likely to find it as they? By this means they are hardened against conviction, and led to cry peace, peace, while there is no peace. But upon the authority of scripture, and christian experience, we rest the decision. Hypocrites and enthusiasts may dream of a state of sinless perfection in this life, but the serious, rational, bible christian, finds it to be his constant employment to press forward toward the end of the race, till that which is perfect is come, and that which is in part shall be done away"

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg.

Hard Copy (pages): pg. 132

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Sanctification; Jesus Christ; Spiritual death

Author: Samuel Taggart
Calvinists have no more faith than Methodists, in virtue of what the latter are pleased to call a death purgatory. They believe, that to the blood of Christ, and the sanctifying influences of the spirit only, we owe a thorough cleansing from all sin, and, it would appear, that their faith in this sovereign remedy, was even stronger than that of the Methodists, because they believe that, wherever God sprinkles the clean water of sanctification, the subject shall be assuredly cleansed from all his filthiness, whereas the latter believe that a person may be truly sanctified by the blood of Christ, and yet perish everlastingly. But where it is said, "The blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin," it is in the present sense, not hath cleansed, as if the work was completed, but this same blood hath begun, to cleanse, is now cleansing, and will continue to cleanse, till the work is perfected: and God will perfect that which concerns his people, even the work of faith with power. We doubt not Christ's ability to perfect this cleansing in this life, and, even instantaneously, in the first moment of conversion, if it was agreeable to his sovereign good pleasure. But we believe, and we think, both scripture, sound reason, and Christian experience, warrant the conclusion, that Christians are, like soldiers fixt to their post, by the Lord Jesus Christ, the captain of their salvation. When they have been exercised in this spiritual warfare, as long as he sees meet, he will give them a discharge; by calling them home to reap the rewards of victory. Whenever this warfare is accomplished, the discharge will be given. The work of some he cuts short, while others are kept longer in the field: but till a discharge is given, enemies from within and without, will continue to give more or less disturbance. But perfection is a glorious part of the prize or reward, therefore no part of the race. When this is once attained, sanctification is completed, and the warfare is accomplished, and, we see not why the saints should not be immediately removed to heaven, where, alone, they can find suitable companions and employment. We farther believe that he will never forsake the work of his hands, but whenever he begins a good work, he will carry it on to perfection. This appears to be, much more consonant to scripture, reason, and Christian experience, than to suppose, that the good work of sanctification, may be, not only begun, but considerably advanced, and even perfected, yet afterwards marred, destroyed, and lost, and those who are to Christ as the apple of his eye, plucked out of his hand" (131-132)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 131-132
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Spirit, Soul, and body; fortunate fall
Author: Keith Norman
Title of Book: Deification: The Content of Athanasian Soteriology
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Ann Arbor, MI
Publisher: University Microfilms International
Date of Publication: 1980
Library Location: BT 752 .N67x 1980
Nature of Source: The following passages were taken from the Doctoral thesis of Keith Norman, completed at Duke University. Although the dissertation primarily concerns itself with the writings of Athanasius, it includes the writings of his predecessors to put his ideas into historical perspective. This passage concerns Irenaeus of Lyons, an early church authority whose writings fall somewhere between 177 and 202 A.D.
Comment: This passages gives a basic outline of Irenaeus' fundamental teachings regarding deification. The excerpt is heavily footnoted, so those who wish to investigate the primary sources should consult the original text. Also, Norman occasionally uses Greek words and character which "are Greek to me," necessitating that I exclude them from this excerpt. By inference, I gather that they refer to the body and the spirit.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin
Date: July 2, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Irenaeus' anthropology is based solidly on the imago Dei in man, which makes him "capax incorruptionis et immortalitatis." Against the Gnostics, Irenaeus argued that is was the complete person, not just the [Greek], which carried the image and likeness of God. Although he did not consistently distinguish between [Greek] and [Greek], he tended to refer the former to the body, and the latter to the mind and spirit. The image is inherent in the nature of man, but the likeness is a superadded grace of the Spirit, which man has lost through the Fall, so that he now lives irrationally and apart from the Spirit, estranged from God.
"But man's disobedience did not thwart the plan of salvation; in fact, the Fall was part of that overall scheme which culminated in the Incarnation. 'The original destination of man was not abrogated by the fall, . . . the fall was intended as a means of leading men to attain this perfection to which they were destined.' First of all, it enabled man to experience hardship ans sin in order to increase his awareness and valuation of the good. It also helped him to recognize the source of his blessings, especially in the appearance of Christ, who fulfills the destiny of man" (55-56).
Length of Relevant Material: 9 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 54-62
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: Spirit World; Eternal Marriage; Visions, dreams, revelation; Fate of those without the gospel
Author: Emanuel Swedenborg
Title of Book: The True Christian Religion
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Amsterdam, Netherlands
Publisher: ??
Date of Publication: 1771
Library Location: BX 8712 .T8 1980 vol.2
Nature of Source: Swedenborg was a prolific Swedish official and scholar who, in his early life, became well acquainted with the scientific thought of his age. His religious ideas came from visions that he claimed to have had, starting sometime between 1744 and 1745. As a visionary, he asserted that his descriptions of heaven, such as the one meticulously outlined in this book, came from divine revelation rather than speculation.
Comment: This passage is found in the supplement to Swedenborg's book, in which he gives a detailed account of the existence after death, which he calls the "spiritual world." The rest of the supplement continues his description of this world, in which there is landscape, separate nations (such as the English, Germans, and Dutch) and cities. In Swedenborg's description we find that there is still commerce, labor, ministerial work, and so on.
Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: June 16, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "And yet, man after death is as much a man as he was before, so much as to be unaware that he is not still in the former world; for he has sight, hearing and speech as in the former world; he walks, runs, and sits, as in the former world; he lies down, sleeps, and awakes, as in the former world; he eats and drinks as in the former world; he enjoys marriage delight as in the former world; in a word, he is a man in each and every respect. From all this it is clear that death is not the extinction but the continuation of life, and is merely a transition" (352).
Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 352-354
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Spirit world; Resurrection; Eternal life; Progressive
Author: Colleen McDannell and Bernhard Lang
Title of Book: Heaven: A History
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New Haven, Connecticut
Publisher: Yale University Press
Date of Publication: 1988
Nature of Source: This book discusses the images and conceptualizations that Christians have used to describe Heaven, and how those images and conceptualizations have changed through history. The book draws not only from institutional and societal beliefs, but also from independent thinkers and artists. The chapter in which this passage is found deals primarily with the ideas of Emanuel Swedenborg.

Comment: This passage gives a brief overview of Swedenborg's conception of heaven, which was a departure from the "theocentric" or God-centered heaven put forth by the majority of Protestant reformers and Catholic counter-reformers before his time. Those before him saw heaven as a place where our primary function is to worship God and learn from him, with our earthly ties all but forgotten. As this section shows, Swedenborg's ideas reflected a gradual shift away from theocentrism and a shift towards anthropocentrism--a view of heaven that focuses on humanity rather than deity.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin
Date: June 16, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "With the publication of Swedenborg's writings in the mid-eighteenth century, a major shift occurred in the perception of heavenly life. Hints of this shift were also evident in the more conventional theology of the period, indicating a slow realignment of the images of the other world. While the majority of Christians during that time took little notice of the Swedish visionary, the cultural climate supported the general perspective of his views. This perspective of heaven, which we term "modern," has four characteristics: First, only a thin veil divides heaven from earth. For the righteous, heavenly life begins immediately after death. Concepts of purgatory or sleeping in the grave until the general resurrection are either denied or minimized. Secondly, rather than viewing heaven as the structural opposite of life on earth, it is seen as a continuation and fulfillment of material existence. Heaven possesses a material character which give it a sensuous quality. Delighting the senses, once perceived as a frivolous pastime, becomes a major aspect of eternal life. Thirdly, although heaven continues to be described as a place of "eternal rest," the saints are increasingly shown engaged in activities, experiencing spiritual progress, and joyfully occupying themselves in a dynamic, motion-filled environment. The journey to God does not end with admittance to heaven but continues eternally. Spiritual development is therefore endless. Finally, a focus on human love expressed in communal and familial concerns slowly replaces the primacy of divine love experienced in the beatific vision. Social relationships, including the love between man and woman, are seen as fundamental to heavenly life and not in conflict with divine purpose. God is loved not only directly but also through the love and charity shown to other in heaven" (183).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg.
Hard Copy (pages): pg. 183
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Three degrees of glory; Eternal life
Author: None given
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Sermon on 1 Corinthians 15: 41-42"
Comment: The author of this sermon begins by asserting that Paul's comparison of the Resurrection with the sun, the moon, and the stars is indicative of a Heaven in which there are differing degrees of glory. He, the author, reasons that if there are different degrees of glory among the angels, why not among the resurrected dead? He draws addition support from Christ's allusion to his father's "many mansions," inferring that this means that in Heaven there will be differing degrees of happiness and enjoyment. The author goes on to conclude that these differing degrees must be based on each individual's worthiness in the sight of God. The author also asserts that these degrees of glory do not suggest impartiality on God's part, because God endowed all his creations with different capacities. He seems to suggest that it is our God-determined capacity for happiness and glory, and not our actions, that will determine what degree of glory we are rewarded in the next life.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin      Date: June 14, 1999
Excerpt: "The Apostle Paul, in explaining the nature of the Resurrection, and illustrating our condition in a future world of glory, does it by referring to our senses; by which we perceive there are various degrees of beauty, splendor, and magnificence among the heavenly bodies. So also, says he, is the resurrection of the dead. Hence it is manifest that the doctrine he teaches is that there will be different degrees of happiness or glory in the kingdom of heaven: a truth which men sometimes seem to doubt, or deny" (102).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 101-106
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Unpardonable sin
Author: Elijah Norton
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Methodism Examined"
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Windsor, Vermont
Publisher: Alden Spooner
Date of Publication: 1791
Library Location: 080 Sh64 EVANS 23645
Nature of Source: This document is not a religious creed in the sense that it outlines all the main beliefs of Methodism, but is instead a single sermon which uses John 6:47 to explain the Methodist belief in election and everlasting life. In it own words, the sermon illustrates and proves "the DOCTRINES of FAITH; and FINAL PERSEVERANCE of all
BELIEVERS," and refutes the doctrines of "FALLING from GRACE and other DOCTRINES connected therewith" (1).

Comment: Although the sermon devotes itself almost exclusively to the subject of election, the brief mention of the unpardonable sin demonstrates an awareness of the idea, even if it is only a dismissive awareness. The context of the statement seems to imply that the speaker does not deny that the unpardonable sin exists, but simply rejects the idea that a believer, whom he asserts already has everlasting life in his grasp, could succumb to that sin. By implication, we might infer that the Methodist speaker believes that only unbelievers are subject to committing the unpardonable sin. To him, believers cannot fall from grace.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: June 23, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "What great danger unbelievers are in, of being led astray by false teachers, who are holding up doctrines exactly agreeable to the carnal hearts of men. The unbelieving sinner wants to have it made out, that he is on as good ground, and sure foundation as the believer. And this doctrine of falling from grace, (if it were true) makes it out completely. Especially, if we believe as some affirm, that the believer is liable to commit the unpardonable sin, which unbelievers are not capable of. But if this be so, then unbelievers are no more liable, or exposed to everlasting destruction than believers are. And if sinners can be made to believe this, it will naturally tend to silence all their fears, and settle them down secure in unbelief" (22).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg.
Hard Copy (pages): pg. 22
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Visions, dreams, revelations; Angels; Corruption of biblical texts; New Jerusalem; Spirit World; Three degrees of glory; Three separate beings; Restoration;
Author: none given
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "SWEDENBORGIANS"
Title of Periodical: The Reflector
Place of Publication: Palmyra, NY
Publisher: ???
Date of Publication: March 16, 1830
Library Location: 071 R259 1829 (special collections--vault)
Nature of Source: Other than that this is a newspaper contemporary with Joseph Smith,
I could find no information about it.

Comment: This article, although a second-hand source, gives a succinct description of Swedenborg's primary beliefs and assertions. His claim of divine visitation and personal revelation, as well as his linking of the natural and spiritual world, make him an interesting figure of comparison with Joseph Smith. This particular excerpt covers his claim to prophecy, his ideas on the Trinity, and his concept of the three heavens.

Researcher: Scott Goodwin Date: June 18, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "He [Swedenborg] confessed himself to be the founder of the New Jerusalem Church, alluding to the New Jerusalem spoken of in the book of Revelation.
He asserts that, in the year 1743, the Lord manifested himself to him by a personal appearance, and that at the same time opened his spiritual eyes, so that he was enabled constantly to see and converse with spirits and angels. . .

"With respect, therefore, to the sacred Trinity, though he rejected the idea of three distinct persons as destructive of the unity of the Godhead, he admitted three distinct essences, principles, or characters, as existing in it; namely, the divine essence or character, in virtue of which he is called the Father or Creator; the human essence, principle, or character united to the divine in the person of Jesus Christ, in virtue of which he is called the Son and Redeemer; and lastly, the proceeding essence or principle, in virtue of which he is called the Holy Ghost. He further maintains, that the sacred Scripture contains three distinct senses, called celestial, spiritual, and natural, which are united by correspondences; and that in each sense it is divine truth accommodated respectively to the angels of the three heavens, and also to men on earth. This science of correspondence (it is said) has been lost for some thousands of years, viz. ever since the time of Job, but is now revived by Emanuel Swedenborg, who uses it as a key to the scriptural or internal sense of the sacred Scripture; every page of which, he says, is written by correspondence, that is, by such things in the natural world as correspondent unto and signify things in the spiritual world" (87).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 pg.
Hard Copy (pages): page 87
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
he could not sin. Because the head lives, and is infallible, the members are so also. But I have no notion of its being possible, to make a mere creature, without that connection, so that he is infallible; or cannot sin. But though I suppose that Adam was created, that had he continued in his primitive rectitude, he would have grown up into that union; yet since the fall, by which he lost that constitution; there must be a new creating in Christ Jesus, in order to that; because it cannot grow from any thing we derive from Adam" (22-23 footnotes).

Length of Relevant Material: 3
Hard Copy (pages): footnotes on pp. 22-24
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: angels
Author: Ebenezer Chaplin, A. M.
Title of Book: A Treatise on the Nature and Importance of the Sacraments
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Worcester, Massachusetts
Publisher: Daniel Greenleaf
Date of Publication: 1802
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a no. 2009
Nature of Source: a religious book written in three parts about sacraments in the Christian church. Part one addresses the sacraments generally and their nature, necessity, and importance. Part two discusses baptism and its meaning, design, proper mode and subjects. Part three discusses sacraments connected to covenants.
Comment: reference is made to angels, when they were created, and their nature in relation to human beings.
Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 15 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "Concerning the Angels.--They are a part of that great and glorious System, which God made; when he created, the Heavens and the Earth, and all things that are therein. I am no insensible that many, and perhaps most people, are in the habit of supposing, that the Angels were created, long before what Moses calls the beginning of the Creation. They suppose that the words in Job xxxiii. 7; saying, The morning Stars sang together, at the time, of the creation of the Earth, proves that the Angels were created some indefinite time before. For it is supposed those morning Stars which sang, were the Angels. But allowing they were the Angles; yet I feel nothing against their being created, in these Six Days of the Creation, of which Moses speaks. For they might be created, the first Day; about the time, of the first springing forth of light; and be called morning Stars in allusion to that; in that view they would eminently morning Stars, rising the first morning that ever existed. And then they would have, all the rest of the week, five days and a half to sing, and rejoice; feeling their own consciousness, of newly springing into existence; and viewing the wonderful works of God, progressing to perfection. We may readily conceive, they would likely be transported into an ecstasy of delight and rejoicing. But what they could be employed about, before any other Creation, besides themselves, was progressing, perhaps no one can derive. Before other things were created, there was nothing for them to do, of what they are represented, as made for; and as their name signifies. For ANGEL signifies a minister, or a messenger. They are abundantly represented, in Scripture, as attending upon God, in the carrying on his providence, in this world; and as having very particular concern, for the prosperity of God's cause in the world. Christ says, there is joy in Heaven, over one sinner that repenteth; Again, there is joy in the presence of the Angels, &c. Luke xv. 7, 10. So that the Angels, evidently appear, to belong to the same System of Intelligences we do. Many other places might be adduced, to the same purpose. But God's asserting, that he made the heavens and the earth, and all the hosts of them, at that time, may properly supercede, any further investigation, of that point. Hence they are a part of the System we have knowledge of; and are in a special relation to mankind. Though their creation, appears to be different from ours. For by the account, the Scriptures give of them, they all exist as collaterals; though not as equals; for there is an Archangel, and different orders, as Cherubims, Seraphims, &c. So that, there are rank, order, grades, superiority and subordinancy among the Angels. Thus it appears, they were created, in a Systematical arrangement; and organization, fitted to act a glorious part, according to their relation in the great System" (12-14).

Length of Relevant Material: 3
Hard Copy (pages): 12-14
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: baptismal covenant; mode of baptism
Author: Lamech and Agrippa; translated from the original German by J. Max Hark
Title of Book: Chronicon Ephratense: A History of the Community of the Seventh Day Baptists at Ephrata, Lancaster County, PA.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Ephrata, Lancaster County, PA
Publisher: S. H. Zahm and Co.
Date of Publication: (translation) 1889; (original) 1786
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche CS 43. G46x LH 545
Nature of Source: a book containing the history of the Seventh Day Baptist community at Ephrata, Pennsylvania. The Ephrata community came from German Pieists who left Germany because of religious persecution.
Comment: the origins of the restoration of baptism by immersion in Germany is discussed (pp. 1-2). Describes eight men who "restored immersion, as a candle to its candlestick" thus restoring proper baptism "according to the doctrine brought from heaven to Christ" (2). Baptism is called a "transplanting into the death of Christ" (20) and Johann Conrad Beissel attempts to find a human organization in America that can baptize him in the proper manner, including with witnesses (20). Baptism is called "the new covenant" (20). Reference is made to the necessity of a worthy life before baptism (26) even though "baptism contains in itself the forgiveness of all past sins (26). Once Beissel is baptized, he has "ratified his covenant with God in the water" (31).
Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 22 June, 1999
Excerpt (pages): "It has before been mentioned how baptism, as a transplanting into the death of Christ, was again brought to light; now he [Johann Conrad Beissel] had become abundantly convinced on that subject, but at that time he knew neither of a congregation according to his own mind, nor of a man who would have been worthy to baptize him. Once he made an attempt to baptize himself in the waters of Mill Creek; but his conscience was not satisfied; nor was the transaction valid, since there were no witnesses present. He was to obtain it through men; and that was difficult for him. How at last he humbled himself under the ordinance of God, and became a child of the new covenant, this shall be shown forth in the following chapter [pp. 21-30], although another excursion from the subject will be necessary, in order to trace the matter to its origin" (20).
Length of Relevant Material: 12 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 1-2, 20-30
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Bible
Author: Reverend Charles Jenkins
Title of Book: Sermons
Title of Article: "Character and Claims of Revelation"
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Portland
Publisher: A. Shirley
Date of Publication: 1832
Library Location: HBLL BX 7233 .J4 S4x 1832
Nature of Source: Book of sermons all from Rev. Charles Jenkins of the Third Congregational Church
Comment: The first chapter of this book discusses the importance of reading the scriptures and treats the Bible with the typical Protestant attitude: it is the whole and complete word of God and must be studied diligently if a person is to understand God's will. The passage asserts that the Bible is clear enough to guarantee no confusion among readers. Among the reasons for studying the scriptures is included the assertion that they contain "the most authentic record of past events" (15)
Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 25 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): God "gave to our world the volume of grace [the Bible]. This volume contains all that man needs to know of God, of himself, of his wants, and of his destination. It is, moreover, so full and lucid in its disclosures, that the feeblest mind is able to avoid seriously mistaken, or fatal views of it. (14)
The scriptures "antiquity claim regard. They undeniably contain the most ancient authentic record of past events, extant in or world. Indeed, they contain the only history in existence, that deserves the least credence, of those early and most deeply interesting events that took place, during the period of twenty or thirty centuries after creation. But for the Bible, we should be wholly in the dark respecting the creation of the world, the origin of our species, their original purity and happiness in their Creator's favor, their subsequent ruinous apostacy, the destruction of the old world by the deluge, the confusion of tongues and the consequent dispersion of men over the face of the earth, the selection of one family as the depository of the true religion, and nearly the whole chain of their eventful history, for a succession of ages" (16).

Lenght of Relevant Material: 24
Hard Copy (pages): 2-26
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: consecration
Author: Lamech and Agrippa; translated from the original German by J. Max Hark
Title of Book: Chronicon Ephrantense: A History of the Community of the Seventh Day Baptists at Ephrata, Lancaster County, PA
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Ephrata, Lancaster County, PA
Publisher: S. H. Zahm and Co.
Date of Publication: (translation) 1889; (original) 1786
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche CS 43 .G46x LH 545
Nature of Source: a book containing the history of the Seventh Day Baptist community and Ephrata, Pennsylvania. The Ephrata community came from German Pietists who left Germany because of religious persecution.
Comment: In discussing Zion, the male convent at Ephrata, the author refers to an "Order" that provided economic stability to the convent. It first discusses offerings or tithes. But they were not sufficient to provide for the needs of the community. So the Prior (leader of Zion, male convent) and the Mother of the Sister (leader of female convent) decided to institute a "worldly economy for the sustenance of the natural life, which represented a ducal court-economy" (139). This order allowed the brethren and sisters to work at various trades and took away the "primitive" nature of the community.
This order required that each who entered the community turn over their personal possessions, which were not returned upon leaving the community.
Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 27 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "And since at this time also the offerings did not come in very plentifully anymore, the Prior was seized with unbelief, and sank into purely temporal prospects. And as the Mother of the Sister also fell into this faithlessness, they secretly took counsel together how they might organize the economy so as to provide a living without having to depend upon the favor of the domestic households upon which dependedncc could no longer be placed. All this took place behind the Superintendent's back, who had ever been solicitous that the things of this world might not find entrance in the Settlement; although the Mother herself complined of the Brethren to the Superintendent when thy carried it to extremes; for she souhgt her own interes in arousing differences between the Superintendent and the Prior. Now therefore there was instituted in the Settlement a worldly economy for the sustenance of the natural life, which represented a ducal court-economy, wherein the Brethren and Sister wer made men servants and women servants. Through this much of the primitive simplicity was lost, wherein God had manifested his wonders; and in its setad was opened a wide outlook into the wolrd, for the Brethren, whose intelligence had been widened at their conversion, set up various mechanical trades, which brought in great profits, and which they handed over to the Prior, so that in a short time a treasury became so rich that money began to be loaned out; yes, it is likely that if God had not destroyed this economy, the Brethren would by this time have ships upon the sea.

"Besides this, the possessions of those who entered the Order were taken from them without considering whether or not these would find their benefit in the Order; and if they left the Order again, they received nothing back, and this by virtue of a rule that anyone who would leave the Order would lose whatever he had contributed to the same. Not even the Courts could prevent this, for it was always claimed that there were no laws covering such cases" (139-140).

Length of Relevant Material: 7
Hard Copy (pages): 137-144
Date When Copying Was Completed:
covenant, but which, at the same time, does not contain a mutual promise of engagement between two or more parties, we are obliged, by the nature of the case, to explain it in a figurative, rather than a literal seven. Thus the promise which God made to Noah, that he would never destroy the world again by flood, is called in scripture a covenant, and the rainbow is represented as a token or seal of the covenant.

Length of Relevant Material:
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: covenant; covenants with Israel; kingdom of heaven on earth
Author: Moses Hemmenway, D. D.
Title of Book: Discourse concerning the Church.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: I. Thomas and E. T. Andrews
Date of Publication: 1792
Library Location: BYU HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh 64 24389
Nature of Source: book written by the pastor of a Congregational Church in Wells, Massachusetts, part of the Catholic Church. In the author's own words the book does the following: "the Several Acceptations of the Word Are Explained and Distinguished; The Gospel Covenant Delineated: A Right of Admission and Access to Special Ordinances, in their Outward Administration and Inward Efficacy, State and Discussed, Designed to Remove the Scruples and Reconcile the Differences of Christians" (title page).
Comment: The first chapter of this book contains an interesting discussion on covenant, its nature, and the rights, privileges, and responsibilities given to those under covenant. Church government is connected to Hebrew theocracy. Hemmenway discusses a "visible" and an "invisible" church, the latter consisting of those people who are not currently members of the organized Church, but will ultimately be considered disciples of Christ. Hemmenway refers often to a "new covenant" being the covenant ratified by the blood of Christ rather than beasts.
Researcher: Sunny Grames    Date: 29 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The Hebrew commonwealth was a kingdom of God, formed by a special covenant which he made with the people when he brought them out of Egypt. Jehobah was their Law-giver, Judge and King. But this was an earthly theocracy, a kingdom of this world, constituted and governed in this peculiar manner, that it might, as a type, represent the kingdom of heaven, the gospel church.
"As all who were interested in the Sinai covenant, which was ratified and sealed by the blood of sacrificed beasts, belonged to the commonwealth of Israel, and were entitled to some at least of its peculiar privileges; so all who are interested in the new-covenant, ratified and sealed by the blood of Christ, belong to the kind of heaven, and are members of the church of God.
"The covenant then, being the great charter and law of the kingdom of heaven, contains a grant of promise of all those special privileges to which the people of God are entitled, and prescribes all that worship, service and obedience, which they are to render to him. And all who are in the covenant, and so members of the church, are under special bonds and engagements to comply with the duties prescribed to them; and are by a covenant grant entitled to peculiar privileges. But some have a greater interest in the blessings of the covenant than others, and belong to the church in a special and more important sense.

"Sometimes we are to understand by the church, the whole collective body of true saints, who shall finally be admitted to the blessedness of the heavenly state. This is commonly termed the invisible church, and by the Apostle the body of Christ; which in its largest acceptation comprehends all who shall have an inheritance in the kingdom of glory; many of whom may not yet be actual members, but only in the foreknowledge and purpose of God. But in a stricter sense, this invisible or mystical church is that part of the mystical body of Christ which is actually formed; consisting of those who are now the children of God by regeneration and special adoption. Of these some are glorified saints, who are termed the church triumphant. Some are saints consisting with their enemies on earth, who are the church militant. This collective body constitutes the universal invisible church; and being universal it can be but one. It is called invisible, not only because [??] part of them being perfected spirits, are removed from human sight, but also because though members of the church militant are visible in their persons, yet those special qualification and privileges by which they are essentially discriminated from all others, cannot be seen or known by men; and so by way of contradistinction from the visible church . .:"

Length of Relevant Material: 5
Hard Copy (pages): 5-10
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________

Topics: creation
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: Hermes presents a logical defense for the fact that all things that are created need to have a creator, specifically a father for human beings. He discusses the marvelous characteristics of man. Similar to the Mormon idea that human beings are children of God.

Researcher: Sunny Grames
Date: 29 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "If you wish also to see the vision through mortal things on earth and in the deep, my child, consider how the human being is crafted in the womb, examine the skill of the craftwork carefully, and learn who it is that crafts this beautiful, godlike image of mankind. Who traced the line round the eyes? Who pierced the holes for nostrils and ears? Who opened up the mouth? Who stretched out the sinews and tied them down? Who made channels for the veins? Who hardened the bones? Who drew skin over the flesh? Who parted the fingers? Who flattened the bottoms of the feet? Who cut passages for the pores? Who stretched the spleen? Who made the heart in the form of a pyramid? Who joined the {ribs} together? Who flattened the liver? Who hollowed out the lungs? Who made the belly spacious? Who set the most honored parts in relief to make them visible but hid the shameful parts away?

"See how many skills have been applied to the same, single material, how many labors within the compass of a single work, all of them exquisite things, all finely measured, yet all different. Who made them all? What sort of mother or what sort of father if not the invisible god, who crafted them all by his own will? No one claims that a statue or a picture has been produced unless there is a sculptor or a painter. Has this craftwork been produced without a craftsman, then? Oh, how full of blindness, how full of irreverence, how full of ignorance! Tat, my child, never deprive the craftworks of their craftsman . . . . Or rather, he is stronger even {than a name used of god,} so great is the father of all. Surely it is he alone whose work it is to be a father" (19-20).

Length of Relevant Material: 3

Hard Copy (pages): 18-20

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: creation

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge

Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: this passage is the first of 17 or 18 treatises that make up the Corpus Hermeticum. It contains an account of the creation of the world. It is strikingly similar to the Biblical account Hermes (it's assumed) sees the formation of light, darkness, water, fire, and earth. Creation comes by "the word." God creates man in his own image.

Excerpt (pages): "I saw an endless vision in which everything became light--clear and joyful--and in seeing the vision I came to love it. After a little while, darkness arose separately and descended--fearful and gloomy--coiling sinuously so that it looked to me like a (snake). Then the darkness changed into something of a watery nature, indescribably agitated and smoking like a fire; it produced an unspeakable wailing roar. Then an inarticulate cry like the voice of fire came forth from it. But from the light . . . a holy word mounted upon the (watery) nature, and untempered fire leapt up from the watery nature to the height above. The fire was nimble and piercing and active as well, and because the air was light it followed after spirit and rose up to the fire away from earth and water so that it seemed suspended from the fire. Earth and water stayed behind, mixed with one another, so that (earth) could not be distinguished from water, but they were stirred to hear by the spiritual word that moved upon them" (1)

Lenght of Relevant Material: 7

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: -----------------------------

Topics: creation

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the first treatise in the Corpus Hermeticum contains a vision of Hermes's of the creation of the world. It is similar in tone to visions in the Book of Mormon and Doctrine and Covenants, with "visions opening up" (D&C 76) or a dialogue between a person and God or the Spirit (1 Nephi 11-12; Moses 1-2, 7).

Excerpt (pages): "Once, when thought came to me of the things that are and my thinking soared high and my bodily senses were restrained, like someone heavy with sleep from too much eating or toil of the body, an enormous being completely unbounded in size seemed to appear to me and call my name and say to me: 'What do you want to hear and see; what do you want to learn and know from your understanding?'

"Who are you?" I asked.

"I am Poimandres,' he said, 'mind of sovereignty; I know what you want, and I am with you everywhere.'

"I said, 'I wish to learn about the things that are, to understand their nature and to know god. How much I want to hear!' I said.

"Then he said to me: 'Keep in mind all that you wish to learn, and I will teach you.'

"Saying this, he changed his appearance, and in an instant everything was immediately opened to me. I saw an endless vision . . . ." (1)

Length of Relevant Material: 7

Hard Copy (pages): 1-7

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: In the first treatise of Corpus Hermeticum, Hermes (the speaker) asks Poimandres (the revealer) how man can advance up to be with god again after falling from light and dark. Poimandres explains a process of rising up through layers of cosmos to finally be god.

Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 25 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Tell me again (about) the way up; tell me how it happens."

"To this Poimandres said: 'First, in releasing the material body you give the body itself over to alteration, and the form that you used to have vanishes. To the demon you give over your temperament, now inactive. The body's senses rise up and flow back to their particular sources, becoming separate parts and mingling again with the energies. And feeling and longing go on towards irrational nature. Thence the human being rushes up through the cosmic framework, at the first zone surrendering the energy of increase and decrease; at the second evil machination, a device now inactive; at the third the illusion of longing, now inactive; at the fourth the ruler's arrogance, now freed of excess; at the fifth unholy presumption and daring recklessness; at the sixth the evil impulses that come from wealth, now inactive; and at the seventh zone the deceit that lies in ambush. And then stripped of the effects of the cosmic framework, the human enters the region of the ogdoad; he has his own proper power, and along with the blessed he hymns the father. Those present there rejoice together in his presence, and, having become like his companions, he also hears certain powers that exist beyond the ogdadic region and hymn god with sweet voice. They rise up to the father in order and surrender themselves to the powers, and, having become powers, they enter into god. This is the final good for those who have received knowledge: to be made god" (6).
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the first treatise of 17 or 18 in Corpus Hermeticum describes the creation of the world and the nature of the earth. Earth is female and mates with man. Man dominates the earth and all things in her.
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyrion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the eleventh hermetic dialogue states that the soul's vice is ignorance and that its virtue is knowledge "for one who knows is good and reverent and already divine" (32).

Excerpt(s): "The vice of the soul is ignorance. For the soul, when it is blind and discerns none of the things that are nor their nature nor the good, is shaken by the bodily passions, and the wretched thing becomes-in ignorance itself-a slave to vile and monstrous bodies, bearing the body like a burden, not ruling but being ruled. This is the vice of the soul. The virtue of the soul, by contrast, is knowledge; for one who knows is good and reverent and already divine" (32).

Length of Relevant Material: 7
Hard Copy (pages): 30-36
Date When Photocopying Was Done:

Topics: fortunate fall
Yates discusses the similarities between the biblical Genesis and the Genesis or creation story found in the Corpus Hermeticum. He explains that for the Egyptians the fall of the first man was "an act of power," not disobedience. The Corpus Hermeticum also included the idea that Adam was divine before and even after the fall.

Excerpt (pages): "It is true that the Mosaic Genesis, like the Egyptian Genesis, says that Man was made in the image of God and was given dominion over all creatures, but it never said in the Mosaic Genesis that this meant that Adam was created as a divine being, having the divine creative power. Not even when Adam walked with God in the Garden of Eden before the Fall is this said of him. When Adam, tempted by Eve and the serpent, wished to eat of the Tree of Knowledge and become like God, this was the sin of disobedience, punished by the exile from the Garden of Eden. But in the Egyptian Genesis the newly created Man, seeing the newly created Seven Governors (the planets) on whom all things depend, wishes to create, to make something like that. Nor is this treated as a sin of disobedience. He is allowed into the society of the Seven Governors who love him and impart to him their powers. This Egyptian Adam is more than human; he is divine and belongs to the race of the star demons, the divinely created governors of the lower world. He is even stated to be 'brother' to the creative Word-Demiurge--Son of God, the 'second god' who moves the stars.

"It is true that he falls, but his fall is in itself an act of power. He can lean down through the armature of the spheres, tear open their envelopes and come down to show himself to Nature. He does this of his own free will moved by love of the beautiful Nature which he himself helped to create and maintain, through his participation in the nature of the Seven Governors. He was moved to do this by love of his own image, reflected in the face of Nature (just as God love Man, seeing him him his own beautiful image). And Nature recognises his power, the powers of the Seven Governors in him, and is united to him in love.

"It is true that this is a Fall which involves loss, that Man in coming down to Nature and taking a mortal body puts this mortal body, put his mortal part, under the dominion of the stars, and it is perhaps punished by the separation into two sexes (after the curious period of the Seven sexless men engendgered by Man and Nature)" (27-28).
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchiridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: In the second treatise of Corpus Hermeticum, Hermes explains to Asclepius god's nature and then discusses the importance of procreation and "the making of children." Childlessness has eternal ramifications beyond this life.

Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 28 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "God's other name is 'father' because he is capable of making all things. Making is characteristic of a father. Prudent people therefore regard the making of children as a duty in life to be taken most seriously and greatly revered, and should any human being pass away childless, they see it as the worst misfortune and irreverence. After death such a person suffers retribution from demons. This is his punishment: the soul of the childless is sentenced to a body that has neither a man's nature nor a woman's—a thing accursed under the sun. Most assuredly then, Asclepius, you should never congratulate a childless person. On the contrary, show pity for his calamity, knowing what punishment awaits him" (12).

Length of Relevant Material: 5

Hard Copy (pages): 8-12

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.
Comment: The second treatise of Corpus Hermeticum is a dialogue between Hermes and Asclepius about the nature of the cosmos and things moved and things that move. They discuss the nature of god as intelligence and his relationship to other beings as the cause of their being. God is called the "father" because he makes (creates).
Researcher: Sunny Grames
Excerpt (pages): "Place is incorporeal, then, but the incorporeal is either divine or else it is god. (By 'divine' I mean here the unbegotten, not the begotten.) If it is divine, it is something essential; but if it is god, it comes to be even without essence. Otherwise, it is something intelligible, and this is why: for us, god is the foremost intelligible entity, but not so for god himself; what is intelligible falls within the awareness of one who thinks of it; thus, for himself god is not intelligible because he is not something distinct form the object of his thought, i.e., so as to be an object of thought for himself. For us, however, he is something distinct; hence, he is an object of thought for us. But if place is intelligible, it is intelligible not as god but as place, and if it were intelligible as god, it would be regarded so not as place but as energy capable of containing" (9).
"God is what does not subsist of any of these [the good, the truth, the archetype of spirit, the archetype of soul] since he is the cause of their being, for all of them and for each and every one of them that exists. And he has left nothing else remaining that is not-being, for all things are those that come to be from things that are, not from those that are not. Things that are not do not have a nature that enables them to come to be; their nature is such that they cannot come to be anything. Things that are, on the other hand, do not have a nature that prevents them from ever existing."
"God is not mind, but he is the cause of mind's being; he is not spirit, but the cause of spirit's being; and he is not light, but the cause of light's being. Hence, one must show god reverence with those two names assigned to him alone and to no other. Except god alone, none of the other beings called gods nor any human nor any demon can be good, in any degree. That good is he alone, and none other. All others are incapable of containing the nature of the good because they are body and soul and have no place that can contain the good. For the magnitude of the good is as great as the substance of all beings, corporeal and incorporeal, sensible and intelligible. This is the good; this is god. You should not say that anything else is good or you will speak profanely, nor should you ever call god anything but 'good' in speaking, of course, but not all understand what it can mean. For this reason, god is not understood by all. In their ignorance, they apply the name 'good' to the gods and to certain humans even though these beings are never able to be good or to become so. The good is what is inalienable and inseparable from god, since it is god himself. All other immortal gods are given the name 'good' an honor, but god is the good by nature, not because of honor. God has one nature--the good. In god and the good together there is one kind, from which come all other kinds. The good is what gives everything and receives nothing; god gives everything and receives nothing; therefore, god is (the) good, and the good is god.

"God's other name is 'father' because he is capable of making all things. Making is characteristic of a father" (11-12).

Length of Relevant Material: 5

Hard Copy (pages): 8-12

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: God (nature of)

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge

Publisher: Cambridge University Press

Date of Publication: 1992

Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992

Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the eleventh hermetic dialogue contains an explanation of the god and his nature. God seems to be an omnipresent essence that give life and energy to all other things. He is a creator and full of goodness and wisdom. But he is more abstract than an exalted man. The speaker of the dialogue says that one must become like god to understand him. The dialogue also includes a discussion of the universe, cosmos, time, and eternity and the relationship between them.

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 2 August 1999

Excerpt(s): "God, eternity, cosmos, time, becoming."

"God makes eternity; eternity makes the cosmos; the cosmos makes time; time makes becoming. The essence (so to speak) of god is [the good, the beautiful, happiness,] wisdom; the essence of eternity is identity; of the cosmos, order; of time, change; of becoming, life and death. But the energy of god is mind and soul; the energy of eternity is permanence and immortality; of the cosmos, recurrence and counter-recurrence; of time, increase and decrease; of becoming, quality <and quantity>. Eternity, therefore, is in god, the cosmos in eternity, time in the cosmos, and becoming in time. And while eternity has stood still in god's presence, the cosmos moves in eternity, time passes in the cosmos but becoming comes to be in time.

"The source of all things is god; eternity is their essence; the cosmos is their matter. Eternity is the power of god, and the cosmos is eternity's work, but the cosmos has never come into being; it comes to be forever from eternity. Therefore, nothing in the cosmos will ever be corrupted (for eternity is incorruptible), no will it pass away since eternity encloses the cosmos."

"But the wisdom of god—what is it?"

"The good and the beautiful and happiness and all excellence and eternity. Eternity establishes an order, putting immortality and permanence into matter."

"The becoming of that matter depends from eternity, just as eternity depends from god. Becoming and time, whose natures are twofold, exist in heaven and on earth: in heaven they are changeless and incorruptible, but on earth they change and become corrupt. And god is the soul of eternity; eternity is the soul of the cosmos; heaven is the soul of earth. God is in mind, but mind is in soul, and soul is in matter, yet all these exist through eternity. Inwardly, a soul full of mind and god fills the universal body in which all bodies exist, but outwardly soul surrounds the universe and brings it to life. Outwardly, the universe is this great and perfect living thing, the cosmos; inwardly, but on earth below in changes what it comes to be" (37-38).

Length of Relevant Material: 6

Hard Copy (pages): 37-42

Date When Photocopying Was Done:

---

Topics: God (nature of)
Comment: the eleventh hermetic dialogue contains an explanation of the god and his nature. God seems to be an omnipresent essence that give life and energy to all other things. He is a creator and full of goodness and wisdom. But he is more abstract than an exalted man. The speaker of the dialogue says that one must become like god to understand him. The dialogue also includes a discussion of the universe, cosmos, time, and eternity and the relationship between them.

Excerpt(s): "God, eternity, cosmos, time, becoming."

"God makes eternity; eternity makes the cosmos; the cosmos makes time; time makes becoming. The essence (so to speak) of god is [the good, the beautiful, happiness,] wisdom; the essence of eternity is identity; of the cosmos, order; of time, change; of becoming, life and death. But the energy of god is mind and soul; the energy of eternity is permanence and immortality; of the cosmos, recurrence and counter-recurrence; of time, increase and decrease; of becoming, quality <and quantity>. Eternity, therefore, is in god, the cosmos in eternity, time in the cosmos, and becoming in time. And while eternity has stood still in god's presence, the cosmos moves in eternity, time passes in the cosmos but becoming comes to be in time.

"The source of all things is god; eternity is their essence; the cosmos is their matter. Eternity is the power of god, and the cosmos is eternity's work, but the cosmos has never come into being; it comes to be forever from eternity. Therefore, nothing in the cosmos will ever be corrupted (for eternity is incorruptible), no will it pass away since eternity encloses the cosmos."
"But the wisdom of god-what is it?"
"The good and the beautiful and happiness and all excellence and eternity. Eternity establishes an order, putting immortality and permanence into matter."
"The becoming of that matter depends from eternity, just as eternity depends from god. Becoming and time, whose natures are twofold, exist in heaven and on earth: in heaven they are changeless and incorruptible, but on earth they change and become corrupt. And god is the soul of eternity; eternity is the soul of the cosmos; heaven is the soul of earth. God is in mind, but mind is in soul, and soul is in matter, yet all these exist through eternity. Inwardly, a soul full of mind and god fills the universal body in which all bodies exist, but outwardly soul surrounds the universe and brings it to life. Outwardly, the universe is this great and perfect living thing, the cosmos; inwardly, but on earth below it changes what it comes to be" (37-38).

Length of Relevant Material: 6
Hard Copy (pages): 37-42
Date When Photocopying Was Done:

Topics: Hebrew
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Life and Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg"
Title of Periodical: Christian Examiner and General Review
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Co.
Date of Publication: July 1843
Library Location: HBLL Microfilm 057 B Reel 454
Nature of Source: first called the Christian Disciple, the Christian Examiner "promoted 'spiritual and moral improvement,' [and] focused mainly on religious topics, and included some book reviews, religious news, and poetry." It was a "tower of strength for Unitarians . . . waging war against the Spirit of the Pilgrims, an anti-Unitarian magazine." In 1857 it adopted more liberal ideas and became completely absorbed by transcendentalism. (Index to American Periodicals 53)
Comment: Emanuel Swedenborg states his belief in the necessity of learning Hebrew to understand God's word.
Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 24 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "'I was prohibited reading dogmatic and systematic theology, before heaven was opened to me, by reason that unfounded opinions and inventions might thereby easily have insinuated themselves, which with difficulty could afterwards have been extirpated; wherefore when heaven was opened to me, it was necessary to learn the Hebrew language, as well as the correspondences of which the whole Bible is composed, which led me to read the Word of God over many times; and inasmuch as the Word of God is the source whence all theology must be derived, I was thereby enabled to receive instruction from the Lord who is the Word."
Length of Relevant Material: one paragraph
Hard Copy (pages): 312
Nature of Source: popular sexual manual containing information on male and female sexual organs, philosophies of marriage and procreation, problems and questions about the human body, etc. Otho T. Beall argues that it "may be viewed as a trustworthy index of popular knowledge of and attitudes toward sex and gynecology in America for the period 1760-1840" ("Aristotle's Masterpiece in America: A Landmark in the Folklore of Medicine," WMQ 20 (1963), 219-20, as qtd. in John Brooke The Refiner's Fire, Cambridge: Cambridge Univ. Press, 1994, 214).

Comment: the introduction and first few chapters of this handbook present marriage and sexual relations as positive sources of happiness for men and women despite the "present age" opinion that marriage was an "insupportable yoke" (13). It contends that marriage comes from God who is the creator of men and women and is an institution that provides "prohibition and restriction" for the benefit of men and women. Marriage was meant to be between one man and one woman. When desires are acted out beyond the "married state," the blessing of this relation becomes a curse. The passage refers to the Biblical idea that man was incomplete without woman, that woman was created to be a companion and help meet for man. Adam was not happy until he enjoyed a married state with Eve. There is open discussion of the bodies of men and women and no contempt for the body.

Researcher: Sunny Grames

Excerpt (pages): "What is more common than the begetting of children? And what is more wonderful than the plastic power of nature, by which children are formed" (3).

"I will point out the prohibition or restriction, that the Creator of all things and Lord of nature has put upon man by the institution of marriage, with the advantage it brings to mankind" (3).

"In the beginning marriage was of one man to one woman: so that as the conjugal delights cannot be enjoyed but in a married state, so neither, in that state, can they lawfully be participated of with more than one wife. And it is the breaking of this order that has filled the world with confusion and debauchery; has brought diseases on the body, consumption on estates, and eternal ruin to the soul, if not repented of. Let all those, therefore, of either sex, that have a desire to enjoy the delights of mutual embraces, take care that they do it in a marriage state, with their own wives or husbands, or else it will become a curse to them, instead of a blessing: And, to that end let them consider what is due to the transgressors of his law, who hath said, Thou shalt not commit Adultery" (13).
"Matrimony, in the present age, is looked upon as the most insupportable yoke: wives and husbands are accounted the greatest clogs and burdens to those who give up the reins to their unbridled appetites. Notwithstanding the present mode of thinking is against me, I doubt not of making it appear, that a marriage state is the most happy condition (where persons are equally yoked) that is to be enjoyed on this side of Heaven" (13).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 4-5, 13-14
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: marriage
Author: Moses Hart
Title of Book: Modern Religion
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1818
Library Location: SS Microfiche 44274
Nature of Source: a religious book written by Moses Hart "to heal the wounds flowing from religious intolerance, persecution, fanaticism, bigotry, and tyranny; and to seat religion on the bed of truth, virtue, and brotherly love" (preface) containing discourses on the creation, marriage, prayers, naming children, the sabbath, funeral services. It appears to be a sort of handbook that explains religious procedures, even the words to be said in marriage ceremonies.
Comment: a marriage ceremony is described in detail, including the words to be said when a man and woman are married. The vows do not mention covenants or eternity and are only binding "during the existence of my marriage" (18) implying a definite end to the marriage. If a "high priest, director, priest, or such other person as is authorized by law or custom"(17) is not available, three witnesses beside the participating parties are sufficient to authorize the marriage. The book also discusses the process of divorce. A couple's case is to be brought before a jury arbitrarily selected. The jury decides the necessity of the divorce.
Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 6 July 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The ceremony is to be performed by the high priest, director, priest, or such other person as is authorized by law or custom, where ther is no director, or priest near, in the presence of at least there witnesses, of age, beside the parties.
"May the Benevolent Almighty Creator who hath caused all the creatures of nature to smile with love and pleasure, who hath been graciously pleased to favour mankind in a peculiar degree, with the enjoyment of chaste and delicious conjugal love and embraces; may he be pleased that A. B. And C. D., who are now abot becoming enearing husband and wife, in lawful marriage, that they may support that state with dignity and honour, and that concord and peace may crown the ovservance of their vows.
"He then asks the bridgroom and bride if they are ready to enter the sacred state of wedlock, of their own free will, and without any constraint. If they reply in the affirmative, the contract of marriage, if there is one, may be read.

[The bride is then to take the following oath.]

"I, A. B. In the presence, and invoking the testimony, of the High Almighty Great Creator, of my own free will do sacredly and sincerely swear, that during the existence of my marriage state with C. D., who I am now about marrying, I will love and obey him, when not injurious to myself, be faithful and true to him, and guard his honour, and be his steady friend and wife; and in his presence I will always command my ill temper, or passions to the utmost of my abilities."

[He is next to administer the following oath to the bridgroom.]

"I, C. D., in the presence, and invoking the testimony of the High Almighty Great Creator, of my own free will do sacredly and sincerely swear, that I will honour, respect, love, protect, comfort, and support, according to my abilities, A. B. Who I am now about marrying, and be her faithful friend and husband; and in her presence I will always command my ill temper, or passion, to the utmost of my abilities.

[The director, minister, or authorized person, then presents a ring to the bridgroom, who puts it on the finger of his wife.]

"He then says, I do hereby, in the presence of the Almighty Creator and Author of love and friendship; and in the presence of (naming the three witnesses) declare A. B. And C. D. To be lawfully, sacredly, and solemnly joined together, as husband and wife" (17-19).
experiments in communal living that took place in eighteenth and nineteenth century New England supposedly inspired by Hermetic thought.

Researcher: Sunny Grames
Date: 16 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "After the Superintendent through this awakening in Tulpehocken had received valuable re-inforcements for his divine work, and thereby was made aware that God was with him, he took advantage thereof, and instituted measures for building a meeting-house to God's glory; for hitherto the meetings had been held in private houses. For its erection both the Solitary and householders willingly contributed their share. The structure contained, besides the hall for meetings, also large halls fully furnished for holding the Agapae, or love-feasts, besides which there were also cells built for the Solitary, after the manner of the old Greek church. At that time it happened that a housefather handed over his daughter, a young lass, to the Superintendent, with the request that he should bring her up to the glory of God. Anyone else would probably have declined such a present; but he regarded the matter as a providential leading, received her, and had her serve him for a purpose, namely to found the Order of Spiritual Virgins. She with two others were given a residence in the second story of the church-building just mentioned; which latter was named Kedar. These four Sisters were the first who bound themselves by a pledge to a communal life; but the one who gave the first occasion to it, at last forsook again the narrow way of the cross, and joined herself to a man, after having lived I their convent many years, under the name Abigail. Soon after this the Superintendent quartered four Solitary Brethren in the lower story of this house; which increased the suspicion against them, for no one would believe that matters could go on properly thus. The Superintendent, however, cared more to have an essential separateness, than that there should be an outward appearance thereof which might not be real. Consequently there finally came to be as unrestrained a life in the Settlement as though all were of the same sex. It must be granted the Superintendent that in this respect he went further than some before him in the conventual or celibate life; for where others went out of the way of danger, he plunged his followers into the midst of it" (76-77)

"It is to be known that at his [the Superintendent] first awakening at Heidelberg he came unto the Virgin above, through whom the whole creation is restored again to God, and who was enamored of his limbum beyond measure, which was one cause of his many sufferings, for she wished to have him feminine and quite subject unto herself, whereas he was still possessed of the ardor of rising manhood. Now however the graft of the upper virginhood was through him to be implanted in others for the spread of God's kingdom. Wherefore his spiritual daughters were sent unto him in the bloom of youth; all of whom, without distinction he received. Whoever came to him at that time saw with astonishment his whole house filled with his spiritual daughters; and as he then had reached his fortieth year, it is easy to imagine what temptations he had to endure in his natural body, in reference to which he once declared that he had really first learned to know his Father in his fortieth year. Before his death also, he placed among the many blessings God had shown him this, that he had preserved him from the allurements of the female sex"(80-81)

Length of Relevant Material: 6

Hard Copy (pages): 76-81

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
"It is an affecting fact that what provoked God to hasten the destruction of the old world was professors contracting marriages with unbelievers, see 6th Gen. 1st, 7th. It is a violation of prudence and self-interest. Who is insensible of the great influence of a Mother in forming the taste, sentiments and habits of children? If a believer be not insensible to the moral and religious improvement of his children, he must be stupid to contract with an ungodly woman.

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 26-27

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: In the tenth hermetic dialogue, Hermes explains deification to his son. This is a very different kind of deification than the idea that men will become like God. It encompasses change within in the souls of all living creature to a higher state. Creatures are put on a hierarchical system and when they are separated from their souls, their souls change or advance to the next state. So humans change to become "demons" which seem to be the same thing as angels (not necessarily evil).

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 2 August 1999

Excerpt(s): "Yes, but the vision of the good is not like the ray of the sun which, because it is fiery, dazzles the eyes with light and makes them shut. On the contrary, it illuminates to the extent that one capable of receiving the influence of intellectual splendor can receive it. It probes more sharply, but it does no harm, and it is full of all immortality. Those able to drink somewhat more deeply of the vision often fall asleep, moving out of the body toward a sight most fair, just as it happened to Ouranos and Kronos, our ancestors."

"Would that we, too, could see it, father."

"Indeed, my child, would that we could. But we are still too weak now for this sight; we are not yet strong enough to open our mind's eyes and look on the incorruptible, incomprehensible beauty of that good. In the moment when you have nothing to say about it, you will see it, for the knowledge of it is divine silence and suppression of all the senses. One who has understood it can understand nothing else, nor can one who had looked on it look on anything else or hear of anything else, nor can he move his body in any way. He stays still, all bodily senses and motions forgotten. Having illuminated all his mind, this beauty kindles his whole soul and by means of body draws it upward, and beauty changes his whole person into essence. For when soul has looked on <the> beauty of the good, my child, it cannot be deified while in a human body."

"Deification, father-what do you mean?"

"The changes that belong to any separated soul, my son."

"What do you mean by 'separated'?"

"In the General Discourses did you not hear that all the souls whirled about in all the cosmos-portioned out, as it were-come from the one soul of all? Many are the changes of these souls, then, some toward a happier lot, other the opposite. The snake-like change into water creature; the watery change into things of dry land; the dry-land souls change into winged things; the aerial into humans; and human beings changing into demons, possess the beginning of immortality, and so then they enter the troop of gods, which is really two troops, one wandering the other fixed. And this is soul's most perfect glory. But if a soul that has entered into humans remains vicious, it neither tastes immortality nor shares in the good but turns back and rushes down the road toward the snakes, and this is the sentence pronounced against a vicious soul" (31-32).

Topics: men become gods
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Comment: explanation of man's divinization and the idea that men are divine and of the same nature as God. Similar to the idea "As God is man may become; as man is God once was."

Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 29 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "For none of the heavenly gods will go down to earth, leaving behind the bounds of heaven, yet the human rises up to heaven and takes its measure and knows what is in its heights and its depths, and he understands all else exactly and-greater than all of this-he comes to be on high without leaving earth behind, so enormous is his range. Therefore, we must dare to say that the human on earth is a mortal god but that god in heaven is an immortal human. Through these two, then, cosmos and human, all things exist, but they all exist by action of the one" (36).

Length of Relevant Material: 7
Hard Copy (pages): 30-36
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchrydion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: In the first treatise of Corpus Hermeticum, Hermes (the speaker) asks Poimandres (the revealer) how man can advance up to be with god again after falling from light and dark. Poimandres explains a process of rising up through layers of cosmos to finally become god.

Excerpt (pages): "Tell me again (about) the way up; tell me how it happens."
"To this Poimandres said: 'First, in releasing the material body you give the body itself over to alteration, and the form that you used to have vanishes. To the demon you give over your temperament, now inactive. The body's senses rise up and flow back to their particular sources, becoming separate parts and mingling again with the energies. And feeling and longing go on towards irrational nature. Thence the human being rushes up through the cosmic framework, at the first zone surrendering the energy of increase and decrease; at the second evil machination, a device now inactive; at the third the illusion of longing, now inactive; at the fourth the ruler's arrogance, now freed of excess; at the fifth unholy presumption and daring recklessness; at the sixth the evil impulses that come from wealth, now inactive; and at the seventh zone the deceit that lies in ambush. And then stripped of the effects of the cosmic framework, the human enters the region of the ogdoad; he has his own proper power, and along with the blessed he hymns the father. Those present there rejoice together in his presence, and, having become like his companions, he also hears certain powers that exist beyond the ogdoadic region and hymn god with sweet voice. They rise up to the father in order and surrender themselves to the powers, and, having become powers, they enter into god. This is the final good for those who have received knowledge: to be made god" (6).

Length of Relevant Material: 7
Hard Copy (pages): 1-7
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: men become gods; perfection
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.
Comment:the fourth treatise from Corpus Hermeticum contains a dialogue between Hermes and his son Tat on the mind and knowledge. The mind is god's gift to man if he chooses to partake of it and makes him perfect.
Researcher: Sunny Grames
Date: 28 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "God shared reason among all people, O Tat, but not mind, though he begrudged it to none. Grudging envy comes not from on high; it forms below in the souls of people who do not possess mind."
"For what reason, then, did god not share mind with all of them, my father?"
"He wanted it put between souls, my child, as a prize for them to contest."
"And where did he put it?"
"He filled a great mixing bowl with it and sent it below, appointing a herald whom he commanded to make the following proclamation to human heart: 'Immerse yourself in the mixing bowl if your heart has the strength, if it believes you will rise up again to the one who sent the mixing bowl below, if it recognizes the purpose of your coming to be.'"
"All those who heeded the proclamation and immersed themselves in mind participated in knowledge and became perfect people because they received mind" (16).

Length of Relevant Material: 3

Hard Copy (pages): 15-17

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: mode of baptism

Author: Ebenezer Chaplin, A. M.

Title of Book: A Treatise on the Nature and Importance of the Sacraments

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Worcester, Massachusetts

Publisher: Daniel Greenleaf

Date of Publication: 1802

Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a no. 2009

Nature of Source: a religious book written in three parts about sacraments in the Christian church. Part one addresses the sacraments generally and their nature, necessity, and importance. Part two discusses baptism and its meaning, design, proper mode and subjects. Part three discusses sacraments connected to covenants.

Comment: Part two of this book contains a lengthy argument concerning John the Baptist's manner of baptism. If nothing else, this passage is a good example of the rhetoric applied to biblical passages in defense of a particular position concerning doctrine. Chaplin uses the following logic to support his claim that John couldn't have baptized by immersion: based on the number of people John baptized and the amount of time he spend in the ministry, it would have taken him too long to baptize so many people (assuming it takes ten minutes to baptize one person by immersion); he would have jeopardized his health standing in the water so much; baptism by immersion would have required the people to change their clothes in the wilderness, which would have been inappropriate; the Greek words translated into the prepositions "in" "into" and "out of" the water, in English could have also been translated "at," implying the baptisms were done "at" the Jordan river, not in it.

Researcher: Sunny Grames
Date: 16 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "A Question which deserves examination here, is, What MODE of applying the water, did John practice in baptizing?

"In answer to this Question, it may be said, that John must baptize in the same mode, that God instituted by Moses. It has been above considered, that it would have been unlawful, like offering strange fire, for him to attempt any innovation, in his ministry. And we have the most incontestible evidence, that he did not in the least deviate from the Law of God, which he was under; for even his enemies, could make no exception against him; and especially as to his baptism. But if he had introduced, a new mode of baptism, different from the divine Law; they would have had an ample exception against him. The mode of baptism God instituted by Moses; has been examined, in the foregoing pates; and found to be; by taking water with the hand, and applying it to the face, with some degree of friction. Which therefore, must be the mode of baptism John practiced.

"I am sensible that some people, are in the habit of supposing, that John baptized by immersion or plunging. But if we candidly examine that matter; it will be found to be impossible" (111).

Length of Relevant Material: 19
Hard Copy (pages): 111-130
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: _______________________________________________________

Topics: mode of baptism
Author: Ebenezer Chaplin, A. M.
Title of Book: A Treatise on the Nature and Importance of the Sacraments
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Worcester, Massachusetts
Publisher: Daniel Greenleaf
Date of Publication: 1802
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a no. 2009
Nature of Source: a religious book written in three parts about sacraments in the Christian church. Part one addresses the sacraments generally and their nature, necessity, and importance. Part two discusses baptism and its meaning, design, proper mode and subjects. Part three discusses sacraments connected to covenants.

Comment: a discussion of the proper mode of baptism. After citing several references in the scriptures where God himself baptized people (Noah and his family), it is concluded that the scriptures do not specify the proper mode of baptism although much can be learned from the cited examples. It is concluded that immersion cannot be the proper mode because it is a symbol of destruction, not salvation.

Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 15 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Something now will be attempted, to illustrate, what is the proper MODE of applying the water, in Baptism. Although the principal meaning, and design of Baptism; and who are the proper subjects; are clearly decided in the above samples; yet the Mode is not. Because those were performed by God himself. And the modes of applying the water, for the Salvation of the subject in those Baptisms, are inimitable. And it appears that God never designed, that we should take our modes of worship, or ordinance, from similitudes, or supposed similitudes of himself; or of his operations. But has strictly forbidden our attempting any such thing.

"However, perhaps so much may be learned, from those instances of Baptism; that the mode should be such, as signifies; or is a figure of Salvation by water, by purifying or cleansing away, that which tends to the injury of the person. Hence although we cannot directly determine, from those instances above considered, what the mode is, or ought to be, yet we may from those Baptisms, in some measure determine, what it is not; or what cannot be the proper mode. And here, from the above Baptisms, performed by God himself; we may conclude that immersion, or plunging, cannot be the proper mode of Baptism; for that is rather a Figure, or emblem of destruction, that of Salvation. And it was the real mode, in which God destroyed by water those he took away, to baptize, those he saved by water" (82)

Length of Relevant Material: 9

Hard Copy (pages): 81-90

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the third treatise in Corpus Hermeticum discusses the nature of god but also a plurality of gods and their role in creation.

Researcher: Sunny Grames    Date: 28 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "God is the glory of all things, as also are the divine and the divine nature. God, as well as mind and nature and matter, is the beginning of all things that are since he is wisdom meant to show them forth. The divine is also a beginning, and is nature and energy and necessity and completion and renewal.
"In the deep there was boundless darkness and water and find intelligent spirit, all existing by divine power in chaos. Then a holy light was sent forth, and elements solidified [ ] out of liquid essence. And all the gods {divide the parts} of germinal nature. While all was unlimited and unformed, light elements were set apart to the heights and the heavy were grounded in the moist sand, the whole of them delimited by fire and raised aloft, to be carried by spirit. The heavens appeared in seven circles, the gods became visible in the shapes of the stars and all their constellations and the arrangement of (this lighter substance) corresponded to the gods contained in it. The periphery rotated (in) the air, carried in a circular course by divine spirit.
"Through his own power, each god sent forth what was assigned to him. And the beasts came to be-four-footed, crawling, water-dwelling, winged-and every germinating seed and grass and every flowering plant; {within them they had the seed of rebirth. The gods sowed} the generations of humans to know the words of god; to be a working witness to nature; to increase the number of mankind; to master all things under heaven; to discern the things that are good; to increase by increasing and multiply by multiplying. And through the wonder-working course of the cycling gods they created every soul incarnate to contemplate heaven, the course of the heavenly gods, the works of god and the working of nature; to examine things that are good; to know divine power; to know the whirling changes of fair and foul; and to discover every means of working skillfully with things that are good.

"For them this is the beginning of the virtuous life and of wise thinking as far as the course of the cycling gods destines it, and it is also the beginning of their release to what will remain of them after they have left great monuments on earth in works of industry. {In the fame of seasons they will become dim, and, from every birth of ensouled flesh, from the sowing of crops and from every work of industry,} what is diminished will be renewed by necessity and by the renewal that comes from the gods and by the course of nature's measured cycle.

"For the divine is the entire combination of cosmic influence renewed by nature, and nature has been established in the divine"(13-14).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 1/2
Hard Copy (pages): 13-14
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
"The Deity did not exist, in the simple personality. For if he had been, but mere simple personality of Existence, there could have been no possibility, of any such things, as are called the moral Perfections of God. There can be no such thin as Righteousness, where there is only, a mere simple personality of Existence. For Righteousness is a relative term; or a term expressing the Relation, of rational Intelligences to each other. In order for there to be, any such thing as Righteousness; there must be a subject and an object. So also of Love, which is the foundation of all moral goodness; there must be a subject and an object; a person to love and a person to be loved. We can have no Idea of love where there is a mere simplicity of Existence. So also , it may be said of Holiness, which consists in general, o universal Love or Benevolence. Hence it is evident, to a demonstration, that God eternally existed in a plurality or diversity of persons; or could not be just, righteous, or holy: Because all those attributes are relative terms; requiring a subject and an object, to have any Idea of them.

"Moreover, in all the things we are acquainted with , absolute simplicity, cannot multiply or increase. Which affords another, very considerable argument, that the Deity did not exist in simplicity.

"Accordingly, he very early revealed himself, existing in a plurality of Persons, before he had finished the Creation. Gen. I. 26 And God said let us make man in OUR IMAGE, after OUR likeness. And the Plurality of the persons, in the Deity, is abundantly alluded to, in various places in the Scriptures; and expressly asserted, in many places. Christ very abundantly, teaches this Doctrine; speaking of himself, the Father and the Comforter, the Holy Ghost: And expressly asserts the three persons in the God Head, in his institution of Baptism; and ordering it as a motto for the holy sign or seal. And the Apostle John by divine inspiration asserts, "There are three that bear record in Heaven, The Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost; and these three are one." I John v. 7.

"Thus it appears, both by reason and Scripture; that GOD exists a PLURALITY in UNITY; a SOCIETY and SYSTEM of DEITY" (7-9)
Comment: earlier in this same book, reference was made to a calling without any human interaction. This passage speaks of an ordination through the same person who ordained Elijah and John the Baptist.

Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 22 June, 1999

Excerpt (pages): "After the Superintendent [Johann Conrad Beissel] had now ratified his covenant with God in the water, in which he gave himself unconditionally unto him, Providence brought it about that those who had been baptized with him elected him as their Teacher. In this John Mayer was mainly instrumental; and thus without himself seeking it he was thrust into the vineyard. His ordination to this office he received from the same one who had bestowed it upon Elijah, John the Baptist and other reformers, who were awakened specially and directly to come to the help of a church fallen asunder" (31).

Length of Relevant Material: one paragraph

Hard Copy (pages): p. 31

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood; Melchizedek priesthood; ordination

Author: Lamech and Agrippa; translated from the original German by J. Max HArk

Title of Book: Chronicon Ephratense: A History of the Community of the Seventh Day Baptists at Ephrata, Lancaster County, PA.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Ephrata, Lancaster County, PA

Publisher: S. H. Zahm and Co.

Date of Publication: (translation) 1889; (original) 1786

Library Location: HBLL Microfiche CS 43 .G46x LH 545

Nature of Source: a book containing the history of the Seventh Day Baptist community at Ephrata, Pennsylvania. The Ephrata community came from German Pieists who left Germany because of religious persecution.

Comment: brief reference to the Melchizedek priesthood and the idea that one can be ordained to a position within the priesthood before birth: Johann Conrad Beissel was pre-ordained to the Melchizedek priesthood. The phrase "order of the priesthood" is used. There is no reference to receiving authority or an ordination from another person. His conversion is described as being "directly from God, without any human instrumentality" (4). He is also described as receiving a blessing which "descended upon him from God" (5). Again, no reference is made to human involvement. Several years of events are described as being "the circumstances of [his] godly calling" (12).

Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 22 June, 1999

Excerpt (pages): Johann Conrad Beissel "was born two months after [his father's] death, and was therefore a true opus posthumum; by which orphan-birth the Spirit indicated his future lone condition, and that, as one pre-ordained to be a priest after the order of Melchizedek, he should derive little comfort from his natural kindred" (3)

Length of Relevant Material: 9 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): pp. 3-12
"What then is the sense of the word prophecy? In every other instance it would be considered the madness of enthusiasm or the summit of wickedness to set aside two positive prohibitions by one ambiguous text. But the text is not ambiguous except to the unthinking and uninformed. In the song of Deborah 5th Judges 9th, The Targum says "Deborah in prophecy said" &c. Which was evidently singing. In 1 Chron. 25th Chap. 1st, 3rd, Prophecy is used for singing so also in 1 Sam. 10th Chap. 5th, and 1 Sam. 19th Chap. 23rd. The Jewish expositors universally explain these passages as singing.

"This use of the word 'prophecy' had its origin in this; that the Jewish predictions as well as the heathen oracles were delivered in poetry, hence poetry was called prophecy. It seems some the Corinthian women in imitation of certain of the heathen priestesses attended to the public prayers and singing in the churches with their heads uncovered, which among the heathen was an indication of their being in subjection to no man, but that they were free for promiscuous, licentious intercourse. Therefore the apostle condemns the practice" (24).
Though the punishment of the second be severe and dreadful we are not authorised to believe it will be endless, nor that those unhappy victims will be forever debarred from the favor of God and the enjoyment of life. For we are informed of a time when death shall be swallowed up in victory (Isaiah xxv. 8.) when death the last enemy, shall be destroyed; (1 Cor. Xv. 2.) and certainly the second death is later than the first, and this is the enemy to be destroyed. We are informed, immediately after the account of the second death and its punishment, that 'God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes;' (even of those unhappy subjects of the second death) and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are past away.' Is it not then egregiously wrong to contend for the endless continuance of the second death when we have the word of God to prove its total destruction or annihilation? We read Lam. iii. 31, that 'the Lord will not cast off forever.' God says, Isa. lvii. 16, 17, 18, 'For I will not contend forever, neither will I be always wroth: for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made, For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: I hid me and was wroth, and he went on frowardly in the way of his heart. I have seen his ways, and will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners.' We read Rev. xv 1, of the 'seven last plagues,' that in them is filled up the wrath of God.' Is it not then, preposterous to contradict these passages of scripture and say the wrath of God never will be filled up, but will forever smoke against his creatures, and eternally remain insatiate? We read that 'the anger of the Lord endureth but for a moment,' but 'his mercy endureth forever.'

"Though it is said the subjects of the second death should have their names blotted out of the book of life, yet they will again be written there when 'the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of his holy prophets since the world began,' (Acts iii. 21,) shall be brought about. 'They shall obtain mercy that had not obtained mercy; and it shall come to pass that in the place where is was said, "ye are not my people," there shall they be called, the children of the living God.' Probably nearly the same thing is meant by, 'blotting out their names from the book of life,' as is meant in the 11th chapter of Rom. By unbelieving and apostate Israel was not always to abide in unbelief, but be grafted in again, as all Israel, together with the fulness of the gentiles was eventually to be saved, (Rom. Xi. 25, 26,) even so those whose names were once blotted from the book of life, shall again be registered in the life-book of the Lamb."

Length of Relevant Material: 3
Hard Copy (pages): 25-27
Date When Photocopying Was completed:
"But a Sacrament, is a Figure or Token, of some thing or things, now existing; which it concerns us to apprehend; and is designed, to excite, quicken and maintain in our minds, a proper sense of those things.
"But after all these distinctions we can make, it depends wholly on the divine Institution, to make them proper and efficacious, for the purpose, for which they are designed. And it highly concerns us, to examine into their true meaning and design; what we are to understand by them, and how to improve them; that we may not degenerate concerning them, either in Insignificancy or Idolatry" (5-7).

Length of Relevant Material: 3
Hard Copy (pages): 5-7
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Spirit, Soul, and Body
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.
Comment: In the eighteenth hermetic dialogue, Hermes presents the relationship between the human body and spirit. He compares the idea that the body hinders spirit to an inspired musician playing with a flawed instrument.
Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 2 August 1999
Excerpt(s): "If someone promises to bring harmony out of a piece of music played on many instruments, his effort will be laughable if during the performance discord among the instruments hinders his zeal. Since weak instruments are altogether unequal to the task, inevitably the spectators will jeer at the musician. Indeed, while this well-meaning person gives tirelessly of his art, <the hearer> finds fault with the weakness of the instruments. He who is truly a musician by nature, not only producing harmony in song but also providing the rhythm of the music appropriate to each instrument, this tireless musician is god, for it does not befit got to tire. If ever a performer wanted to excel in a musical contest, entering just after the trumpeters had likewise shown their skill, after the flautist had produced sweet music on their melodious instruments, after <others> had finished the singing of the song with reed-pipe and plectrum, no one would blame the musician's inspiration <if his instrument failed under the strain>, nor would they blame the almighty, to whom they would render due honor while finding fault with the defective instrument because, in fact, it created a hindrance to greater beauty by hindering the musician's rapport with his music and robbing the audience of sweet song.

"With us it is the same. Let no spectator irreverently find fault with our kind for weakness that belongs to the body. Let it be known, however, that god is a tireless inspiration, who always and in the same way possesses the skill appropriate to him, whose blessings are uninterrupted, who continually enjoys the same kind attentions. If even the craftsman Phidias used material that did not yield to his striving for consummate diversity . . . <and> our musician could only make the best of his ability, let us not put the blame on him but find fault with the weak string that [slackened the tension,] lowered the tone and muffled the rhythm of the lovely music" (63)

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy (pages): 63-66
Date When Photocopying Was Finished: ________________________________

Topics: Spirit, Soul, and Body
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Life and Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg"
Title of Periodical: Christian Examiner and General Review
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Co.
Date of Publication: July 1843
Library Location: HBLL Microfilm 057 B Reel 454
Nature of Source: first called the Christian Disciple, the Christian Examiner "promoted 'spiritual and moral improvement,' [and] focused mainly on religious topics, and included some book reviews, religious news, and poetry." It was a "tower of strength for Unitarians . . . waging war against the Spirit of the Pilgrims, an anti-Unitarian magazine." In 1857 it adopted more liberal ideas and became completely absorbed by transcendentalism. (Index to American Periodicals 53)
Comment: Swedenborg's ideas on the soul and body.
Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 24 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "The object of Swedenborg in investigating this organization of the human body, was to obtain a knowledge of the soul, which he was convinced had some correspondence with the body. It is everywhere maintained in his theological works that the mind fills and governs the whole body; that it corresponds with the whole and every part of the body; that when the mind of man is fully regenerated, it is fully in the human form, but when unregenerate, it is not in the human form. Therefore all purification and advancement in goodness and truth are seen, in the other world, as successive developments of the human form. By an angel the affections and thoughts are seen to operate according to the organize laws of the human system; and there is no secret operation in the internal structure of either the spiritual or natural body, which may not be seen from the light of heaven. Just in proportion, therefore, as a person is elevated above a knowledge of the comparatively imperfect anatomy of the human body to the more perfect organization of the human mind, the more light will he necessarily have concerning the anatomy of the body which corresponds to the mind" (319).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages): 319
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Spirit, Soul, and Body
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: In the eighteenth hermetic dialogue, Hermes presents the relationship between the human body and spirit. He compares the idea that the body hinders spirit to an inspired musician playing with a flawed instrument.

Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 2 August 1999
Excerpt(s): "If someone promises to bring harmony out of a piece of music played on many instruments, his effort will be laughable if during the performance discord among the instruments hinders his zeal. Since weak instruments are altogether unequal to the task, inevitably the spectators will jeer at the musician. Indeed, while this well-meaning person gives tirelessly of his art, <the hearer> finds fault with the weakness of the instruments. He who is truly a musician by nature, not only producing harmony in song but also providing the rhythm of the music appropriate to each instrument, this tireless musician is god, for it does not befit got to tire. If ever a performer wanted to excel in a musical contest, entering just after the trumpeters had likewise shown their skill, after the flautist had produced sweet music on their melodious instruments, after <others> had finished the singing of the song with reed-pipe and plectrum, no one would blame the musician's inspiration <if his instrument failed under the strain>, nor would they blame the almighty, to whom they would render due honor while finding fault with the defective instrument because, in fact, it created a hindrance to greater beauty by hindering the musician's rapport with his music and robbing the audience of sweet song. "With us it is the same. Let no spectator irreverently find fault with our kind for weakness that belongs to the body. Let it be known, however, that god is a tireless inspiration, who always and in the same way possesses the skill appropriate to him, whose blessings are uninterrupted, who continually enjoys the same kind attentions. If even the craftsman Phidias used material that did not yield to his striving for consummate diversity . . . <and> our musician could only make the best of his ability, let us not put the blame on him but find fault with the weak string that [slackened the tension,] lowered the tone and muffled the rhythm of the lovely music" (63)

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy (pages): 63-66
Date When Photocopying Was Finished:

Topics: Spirit, Soul, and Body
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchydion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: In the eighteenth hermetic dialogue, Hermes presents the relationship between the human body and spirit. He compares the idea that the body hinders spirit to an inspired musician playing with a flawed instrument.

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 2 August 1999

Excerpt(s): "If someone promises to bring harmony out of a piece of music played on many instruments, his effort will be laughable if during the performance discord among the instruments hinders his zeal. Since weak instruments are altogether unequal to the task, inevitably the spectators will jeer at the musician. Indeed, while this well-meaning person gives tirelessly of his art, <the hearer> finds fault with the weakness of the instruments. He who is truly a musician by nature, not only producing harmony in song but also providing the rhythm of the music appropriate to each instrument, this tireless musician is god, for it does not befit got to tire. If ever a performer wanted to excel in a musical contest, entering just after the trumpeters had likewise shown their skill, after the flautist had produced sweet music on their melodious instruments, after <others> had finished the singing of the song with reed-pipe and plectrum, no one would blame the musician's inspiration <if his instrument failed under the strain>, nor would they blame the almighty, to whom they would render due honor while finding fault with the defective instrument because, in fact, it created a hindrance to greater beauty by hindering the musician's rapport with his music and robbing the audience of sweet song.

"With us it is the same. Let no spectator irreverently find fault with our kind for weakness that belongs to the body. Let it be known, however, that god is a tireless inspiration, who always and in the same way possesses the skill appropriate to him, whose blessings are uninterrupted, who continually enjoys the same kind attentions. If even the craftsman Phidias used material that did not yield to his striving for consummate diversity . . . <and> our musician could only make the best of his ability, let us not put the blame on him but find fault with the weak string that [slackened the tension.] lowered the tone and muffled the rhythm of the lovely music" (63)

Length of Relevant Material: 4

Hard Copy (pages): 63-66

Date When Photocopying Was Finished:

---

Topics: Spirit, Soul, and Body

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: In the eighteenth hermetic dialogue, Hermes presents the relationship between the human body and spirit. He compares the idea that the body hinders spirit to an inspired musician playing with a flawed instrument.

Researchers: Sunny Grames  Date: 2 August 1999

Excerpt(s): "If someone promises to bring harmony out of a piece of music played on many instruments, his effort will be laughable if during the performance discord among the instruments hinders his zeal. Since weak instruments are altogether unequal to the task, inevitably the spectators will jeer at the musician. Indeed, while this well-meaning person gives tirelessly of his art, <the hearer> finds fault with the weakness of the instruments. He who is truly a musician by nature, not only producing harmony in song but also providing the rhythm of the music appropriate to each instrument, this tireless musician is god, for it does not befit got to tire. If ever a performer wanted to excel in a musical contest, entering just after the trumpeters had likewise shown their skill, after the flautist had produced sweet music on their melodious instruments, after <others> had finished the singing of the song with reed-pipe and plectrum, no one would blame the musician's inspiration <if his instrument failed under the strain>, nor would they blame the almighty, to whom they would render due honor while finding fault with the defective instrument because, in fact, it created a hindrance to greater beauty by hindering the musician's rapport with his music and robbing the audience of sweet song.

"With us it is the same. Let no spectator irreverently find fault with our kind for weakness that belongs to the body. Let it be known, however, that god is a tireless inspiration, who always and in the same way possesses the skill appropriate to him, whose blessings are uninterrupted, who continually enjoys the same kind attentions. If even the craftsman Phidias used material that did not yield to his striving for consummate diversity . . . <and> our musician could only make the best of his ability, let us not put the blame on him but find fault with the weak string that [slackened the tension.] lowered the tone and muffled the rhythm of the lovely music" (63)

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy (pages): 63-66
Date When Photocopying Was Finished:

Topics: Spirit, Soul, and Body
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.
Comment: In the eighteenth hermetic dialogue, Hermes presents the relationship between the human body and spirit. He compares the idea that the body hinders spirit to an inspired musician playing with a flawed instrument.
Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 2 August 1999
Excerpt(s): "If someone promises to bring harmony out of a piece of music played on many instruments, his effort will be laughable if during the performance discord among the instruments hinders his zeal. Since weak instruments are altogether unequal to the task, inevitably the spectators will jeer at the musician. Indeed, while this well-meaning person gives tirelessly of his art, <the hearer> finds fault with the weakness of the instruments. He who is truly a musician by nature, not only producing harmony in song but also providing the rhythm of the music appropriate to each instrument, this tireless musician is god, for it does not befit got to tire. If ever a performer wanted to excel in a musical contest, entering just after the trumpeters had likewise shown their skill, after the flautist had produced sweet music on their melodious instruments, after <others> had finished the singing of the song with reed-pipe and plectrum, no one would blame the musician's inspiration <if his instrument failed under the strain>, nor would they blame the almighty, to whom they would render due honor while finding fault with the defective instrument because, in fact, it created a hindrance to greater beauty by hindering the musician's rapport with his music and robbing the audience of sweet song.

"With us it is the same. Let no spectator irreverently find fault with our kind for weakness that belongs to the body. Let it be known, however, that god is a tireless inspiration, who always and in the same way possesses the skill appropriate to him, whose blessings are uninterrupted, who continually enjoys the same kind attentions. If even the craftsman Phidias used material that did not yield to his striving for consummate diversity . . . <and> our musician could only make the best of his ability, let us not put the blame on him but find fault with the weak string that [slackened the tension,] lowered the tone and muffled the rhythm of the lovely music" (63)

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy (pages): 63-66
Date When Photocopying Was Finished:

---

Topics: spirit and matter
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarian such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.
Comment: all things are identified as being part of the cosmos. Since the cosmos is eternal and can never be destroyed, all matter is eternal as well, being part of the cosmos.

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 1 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Now, my son, we must speak about soul and body and say in what way the soul is immortal and whence comes the energy that composes and dissolves the body. Death actually has nothing to do with this. Death is a notion that arises from the term 'immortal': either it is an empty usage, or, through the loss of the frist syllable, 'immortal' is taken to mean 'mortal.' Death has to do with destruction, yet none of the things in the cosmos is destroyed. If the cosmos is a second god and an immortal living things, it is impossible for any part of this immortal living things to die. All things in the cosmos are parts of the cosmos, but especially mankind, the living thing that reasons" (25)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 1/2

Hard Copy (pages): 25-26

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: spirit and matter

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge

Publisher: Cambridge University Press

Date of Publication: 1992

Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992

Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Library Location: HBLL BF 1600 .H475 1992
Comment: the fourth treatise of Corpus Hermeticum establishes a difference and separateness between spiritual and material. Hermes tells his son, Tat, of the need to shun corporeal things for the higher spiritual things.

Researcher: Sunny Grames
Date: 28 June 1999

Excerpt (pages): "But those who participate in the gift that comes from god [mind], O Tat, are immortal rather than mortal if one compares their deeds, for in a mind of their own they have comprehended all--things on earth, things in heaven and even what lies beyond heaven. Having raised themselves so far, they have seen the good and, having seen it, they have come to regard the wasting of time here below as a calamity. They have scorned every corporeal and incorporeal thing, and they hasten toward the one and only. This, Tat, is the way to learn about mind, to {resolve perplexities} in divinity and to understand god. For the mixing bowl is divine."

"I wish too to be immersed, my father."

"Unless you first hate your body, my child, you cannot love yourself, but when you have loved yourself, you will possess mind, and if you have mind, you will also have a share in the way to learn."

"What do you mean by this, father?"

"My child, it is impossible to be engaged in both realms, the mortal and the divine. Since there are two kinds of entities, corporeal and incorporeal, corresponding to mortal and divine, one is left to choose one or the other, if choice is desired. One cannot {have both together when one is left to choose}, but lessening the one reveals the activity of the other" (16).

Length of Relevant Material: 3

Hard Copy (pages): 15-17

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Spirit child of God

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge

Publisher: Cambridge University Press

Date of Publication: 1992

Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992

Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the eighteenth hermetic dialogue contains a reference to god as the father of human souls.

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 2 August 1999
Excerpt(s): "To god, <then,> who is entirely undefiled, who is father of our souls, it is fitting that praise should rise up from ten thousands of mouths and voices, even if one can say nothing worthy of him because our speech is no mathch for him; the new born cannot sing a hymn worthy of their father, yet if they render him as much ofhis die as their strengthn permits, then they also will be forgiven. Moreover, this very fact contributes to god's renown: that he is greather than his own progeny, and that the preface, beginning, middle and end ofour praises are to confess our fahter's limitless power and limitless extent. For the king it is just the same" (65).

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy (pages): 63-66
Date When Photocopying Was Done:

Topics: Spirit child of God
Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver
Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge
Publisher: Cambridge University Press
Date of Publication: 1992
Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992
Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnets
Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the eighteenth hermetic dialogue contains a reference to god as the father of human souls.

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 2 August 1999

Excerpt(s): "To god, <then,> who is entirely undefiled, who is father of our souls, it is fitting that praise should rise up from ten thousands of mouths and voices, even if one can say nothing worthy of him because our speech is no match for him; the new born cannot sing a hymn worthy of their father, yet if they render him as much of his die as their strengthn permits, then they also will be forgiven. Moreover, this very fact contributes to god's renown: that he is greater than his own progeny, and that the preface, beginning, middle and end of our praises are to confess our father's limitless power and limitless extent. For the king it is just the same" (65).

Length of Relevant Material: 4

Hard Copy (pages): 63-66

Date When Photocopying Was Done:

Topics: Spirit child of God

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge

Publisher: Cambridge University Press

Date of Publication: 1992

Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992

Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.
Comment: the eighteenth hermetic dialogue contains a reference to god as the father of human souls.

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 2 August 1999

Excerpt(s): "To god, <then,> who is entirely undefiled, who is father of our souls, it is fitting that praise should rise up from ten thousands of mouths and voices, even if one can say nothing worthy of him because our speech is no match for him; the new born cannot sing a hymn worthy of their father, yet if they render him as much of his due as their strength permits, then they also will be forgiven. Moreover, this very fact contributes to god's renown: that he is greater than his own progeny, and that the preface, beginning, middle and end of our praises are to confess our father's limitless power and limitless extent. For the king it is just the same" (65).

Length of Relevant Material: 4

Hard Copy (pages): 63-66

Date When Photocopying Was Done:

Topics: Spirit child of God

Author: notes and translation by Brian P. Copenhaver

Title of Book: Hermetica (The Greek Corpus Hermeticum and the Latin Asclepius in a new English translation)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, Cambridge

Publisher: Cambridge University Press

Date of Publication: 1992

Library Location: BF 1600 .H475 1992

Nature of Source: supposedly written by an ancient Egyptian priest/god, Hermes Trismegistus (thought to be a combination of the Greek god, Hermes, and the Egyptian god, Thoth), Corpus Hermeticum was actually a combination of treatises written by various Greek authors from the first and second century A.D. Early Christian thinkers, like Lactantius and Augustine, validated the text as Christian because of its references to "God the Father" and "the Son of God." It was revived during the Renaissance when Cosimo de Medici ordered its translation done by Marsilio Ficino. Hermetic philosophy and a hermetic tradition of magical and alchemical practices (drawn from other texts such as the Jewish Cabala and Picatrix) were popularized and legitimized by Ficino and Giovanni Pico della Mirandola. Hermeticism made its way to revolutionary England thanks to radical sectarians such as John Everard who combined reformed Christianity with hermetic philosophical and practical ideas available in works like d'Espagnet's Enchyridion and movements like Paracelsus's alchemical medicine. Hermeticism emerged in Joseph Smith's world through the migration of groups such as the Quakers, Baptists, Pietists, and perfectionists.

Comment: the eighteenth hermetic dialogue contains a reference to god as the father of human souls.

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 2 August 1999
To god, who is entirely undefiled, who is father of our souls, it is fitting that praise should rise up from ten thousands of mouths and voices, even if one can say nothing worthy of him because our speech is no match for him; the new born cannot sing a hymn worthy of their father, yet if they render him as much of his due as their strength permits, then they also will be forgiven. Moreover, this very fact contributes to god's renown: that he is greater than his own progeny, and that the preface, beginning, middle and end of our praises are to confess our father's limitless power and limitless extent. For the king it is just the same" (65).

Length of Relevant Material: 4

Hard Copy (pages): 63-66

Date When Photocopying Was Done:

---

Topics: spiritual gifts; visions, revelation, gift of prophecy; Melchizedek priesthood

Author: trans. By J. Max Hark, D. D. From the original German by Lamech and Agrippa

Title of Book: Chronicon Ephratense; A History of the Community of Seventh Day Baptists at Ephrata, Lancaster County, Penn

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Lancaster, PA

Publisher: S. H. Zahm & Co.

Date of Publication: original 1786; translation 1889

Library Location: HBLL Microfiche CS 43 .G46x LH no. 545

Nature of Source: the community of Seventh Day Baptists at Ephrata, Pennsylvania originated from the German pietists who left Europe because of religious persecution. In his book, The Refiner's Fire, John Brooke identifies this community as one of the religious traditions that continued the tradition of Hermeticism in the early United States (42-44).

Comment: reference is made to the spirit of prophecy descending upon people, even women. Their prophecies were recorded although sometimes confusing. The leader of the Ephrata community produces hymns by prophecy. He is described talking about his visions in a way similar to those who reported hearing Joseph Smith talk about his visions and revelations.

Researcher: Sunny Grames
Date: 16 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "We make remembrance of those blessed times when, beside these sorrow, the spirit of prophecy also manifested itself so strongly. The Superintendent in those days was lifted above the world of sense, and had surmounted time with its changes. His hymns composed then are full of prophecy, and belong to the evening of the sixth time-period, that is, to the Ante-Sabbath. They represent the mysteries of the last times so impressively, that it seems as though the kingdom were already dawning. It appears that it was the intention to set upon a candlestick the wonders of the last times through the revelation of the heavenly Virgin-estate and of the Melchizedekian priesthood in American; for that these hymns were given unto him in visions he at times betrays, when he adds, 'This did we see in the spirit,' while ordinarily under similar circumstances he is very self-reliant. All these hymns are to be found in a new collection under the title 'Paradiesisches Wunderspiel.' Soon after he undertook an important work in the spirit, namely, he investigated what must have moved God to have so many animals slaughtered in his service for the redemption of man, which his righteousness would not have permitted if animals had not guilt resting upon them because of the fall of man. About this he became spiritually exercised and produced a singular writing which he called 'Wunder Schrifft.' Because he thereby disregarded nature too much, he contracted a severe illness. On account of its excellence it was printed in English with the title: 'Dissertation on Man's Fall.' Unless, however, the reader is versed in the spirit of the Virgin-estate, it is somewhat unclear in its expressions. In it, however, he has opened up a far outlook into eternity, and has gone further than even the holy Apostles in their revelations, bringing glorious things to light concerning the Mother Church, and how the Father finally shall deliver his office to the Mother; similarly concerning the Sabbatic Church in the time of the bound dragon; what God's purposes are with this Church; and why he permitted her to be so severely tried by Gog and Magog. . . .

"It was remarked that afterwards the spirit of prophecy descended upon the offices, and therefore hit the Prior of the Brethren and the Mother of the Sisters; even as among the Jews, when the spirit of prophecy entered into the room, the high-priest began to prophecy. The Prior wrote so much at this time, that he employed two Brethren in copying; but as he was then himself but only rising, his witness also was confused and unclear. His writings were kept hidden by his admirers long after his death; but now no one knows anything about them. After the prophetic spirit had withdrawn again into his chamber, and echo of it yet remained from the time of the bound dragon or the Sabbatic Church, with which the meeting was entertained for years" (134-136)

Length of Relevant Material: 7
Hard Copy (pages): 129-136
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: the Fall
Author:
Title of Book: "Life and Writings of Emanuel Swedenborg"
Title of Article: Christian Examiner and General Review
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: James Munroe and Co.
Date of Publication: July 1843
Library Location: HBLL Microfilm 057 B Reel 454
Nature of Source: first called the Christian Disciple, the Christian Examiner "promoted 'spiritual and moral improvement,' [and] focused mainly on religious topics, and included some book reviews, religious news, and poetry." It was a "tower of strength for Unitarians . . . waging war against the Spirit of the Pilgrims, an anti-Unitarian magazine."
In 1857 it adopted more liberal ideas and became completely absorbed by transcendentalism. (Index to American Periodicals 53)
Comment: Swedenborg defines some of the differences in man before and after the Fall.
Excerpt (pages): "Previous to the fall, [Swedenborg] says, when man was in a state of integrity, he had all the essentials of wisdom and true philosophy inscribed on his heart; he had then only to open his eyes in order to see the causes of all the phenomena of the universe around him; but in his present state of sin and non-conformity with Divine Order, he is obliged to investigate truths by a laborious external application of the mind" (316).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): pp. 316-317
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: the fall; Adam; Eve
Author: Anon (supposed author: Richard Cosway [Casway?])
Title of Book: A Miscellaneous Metaphysical Essay: Or, an Hypothesis Concerning the Formation and Generation of Spiritual and Material Beings
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: London
Publisher: Printed for A. Miller
Date of Publication: 1748
Library Location: BYU Special Collections Rare 233 C824m 1748
Nature of Source:
Comment: Chapter ten seems to serve as a summary of other material in the book and contains an explanation of the fall and the nature of Adam and Eve. Adam is a collective being with a masculine and feminine nature. Before the fall, only Adam's intellectual (or masculine) faculties were operative. The fall was essentially the result Adam leaving behind his intellect to indulge in sensual pleasures (his feminine nature). The text seems to equate the fall with the creation of Eve, or at least the wakening of Adam's feminine faculties. Eve is called "the feminized Adam" but doesn't seem to be a person until after the fall has been completed, at which point Adam called her "the Life of his vehicle, Eve, because it is indeed the Mother of all the Generations of Men that live upon the Earth" (187)

Excerpt (pages): "And the Lord God said, it is not good that Man should be alone: I will make him an Help meet for him. Hitherto Moses had taken no Notice in the aethereal Adam, or that Order of Spirits which were afterwards human, of any other Faculties, but such as were intellectual, and carried up the Soul to the holy Intellect, the Divine Being; and this seems to be the perfect and Masculine Adam, which consisted in his Power of contemplating the Divine Supreme Intellect: In this State Man may be conceived without his superior Vehicle, that is, without social or animal Sensations of Pleasures; contemplating upon God, and his divine moral Attributes, and his Works of Creation and Providence, ad intra; knowing the Names and Natures of all other Beings in Theory, as well the better as the worse Genii of the angelic Orders, as also of the animal and vegetable World: and God brought them all in view before his intellectual Faculties, and he pronounced right in what Judgment and Knowledge he professed about them; but among these Orders of Being, there was not any that was proper to be a Vehicle for tis Masculine Adam to associate with, and give him the Pleasures of Society, by his partaking of animal sensitives Pleasures; wherefore the Divine Being thought proper to endue the Soul of Man, or that Masculine Adam, with a Faculty of being united to a superior Vehicle, by which means it became united to Matter, and acted, and was acted upon by material Beings around it, and thus became capable of all the Pleasures of Sense: He thus took Adam off from a too great View of the Light of the Divine Being, and allowed him to look downwards, and contemplate upon the lower Orders of Being, as well as the higher Genii, ad extra, and to be pleased with the Sensations and Joys of his Vehicle; so that his higher Faculties of contemplating the Divine Being became drowsy and sleepy, and the Feminine Pleasures of the Vehicle became vivid and strong; and he immediately allowed, that all his former intellectual Pleasures were not so grateful to him, as this social Knowledge of Beings in the same Class with himself; in so much that he found the Sensations of his Vehicle so agreeable to him, that he said it was Bone of his Bone, &c. And called it after his own Name, and said, For such Gratifications as these, will Man leave the perpetual Contemplation of the Divine Being and Perfections, which are too high and sublime for the Nature of Man, and will cleave to the joyful and cheerful Life of the Vehicle, and shall account the Whole as one Being or Person: and thus Adam, or the human Species, stood exposed naked to the View of God, with his new-wedded Joy, the Pleasures of Sense; but, being yet innocent and simple, having not set up his selfish Will and Pleasures, owing to his Vehicle, or Feminine Part of his Being, against the Will and Commandment of God, he was not ashamed" (179-181).

Length of Relevant Material: 13
Hard Copy (pages): 179-192
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: woman's role
Author: George Keely
Title of Book: The Nature and Order of a Gospel Church (With an Appendix containing an enquiry into the Standing of Females in a Christian Church)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Haverhill, Mass.
Publisher: Green at the Patriot Press
Date of Publication: 1819
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a
Nature of Source: religious pamphlet containing the printed form of a sermon "preached at the Baptist Meeting-House, Haverhill, Mass" 29 Nov. 1818.
Comment: The appendix to this religious pamphlet explores the role and station of women in "a Christian Church." It is determined that women are not members of the church since they can't vote or participate, which is an "unreasonable oppression" probably brought on by a "licentious spirit" in the other extreme (women's over-involvement). The argument is that women are not to teach or participate in the church when they are in the presence of men. But when they are only among their sex, they are at liberty to be involved.

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 23 June 1999
Excerpt (pages): "It is evident, that in the primitive churches, female members were more respected than they are in some churches in our day; and, by consequence, were more useful. Phoebe was a Deaconess (diaconon) of the church at the port of Cenchrea, see 16th Rom. 1st 2nd. I would ask, if her business were he own, why was the church ordered to help? But if she were in office, and entrusted with the business of the of the church to which she belonged, how will the conduct of some churches quadrate with their's. 'Such women were called deaconesses who served the church in those offices, in which the deacons could not with propriety exercise themselves; such as keeping the doors of that part of the church where the women sat; for they were not seated promiscuously with the men, but had separate places in the church; deaconesses assisted the women to undress and dress at baptism. They privately instructed those of their own sex, and visited those imprisoned for the faith. They were of mature and advanced age when chose; of good manners, and reputation. They were in primitive times appointed to the office with the imposition of hands. Concil, Laodic. 11' Calmet's Dict.

"By the licentious spirit referred to above, I mean those unhappy instances where modesty and truth are both violated by ambition and ignorance. The prohibition in scripture of women making prayers and teaching are, I presume, confined to assemblies where men are present. They are under no restriction, I conceive when they are with their own sex only."

"I must be allowed to remark, that, that woman appears to me lost to modesty and prudence, who has boldness enough to teach or exhort where men are present. If she were a relative of mine, I should request her to change her name and remove to a distance where her connections were not known."

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 21-27
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: women's role; Adam; Eve
Author: Lucy Aikin
Title of Book: Epistles on Women, Exemplifying Their Character and condition in Various Ages and Nations with Miscellaneous Poems.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: W. Wells and T. B. Wait and Co.
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: Microfiche Shaw-Shoemaker 19325
Nature of Source: a book of poems originally written by a woman to her friend Mrs.
Charles Rochemont Aikin. Although not a "religious document," Aikin's poems contain expressions of religious ideas. She states in her introduction that her "moral song!" is "to point out, that between the two partners of human life, not only the strongest family likeness, but the most complete identity of interest subsists: so that it is impossible for man to degrade his companion without degrading himself, or to elevate her without receiving a proportional accession of dignity and happiness" (viii). She maintains in her introduction that women are naturally and physically inferior to men and therefore the more "domestic and private" responsibilities fall to them. She also states that her purpose is "to mark the effect of various codes, institutions, and states of manners, on the virtue and happiness of man, and the concomitant and proportional elevation or depression of woman in the scale of existence" (vii).

Comment: the third poem in this book discusses marriage and the hope that it can be an eternal bond of "everlasting love." Many terms applied to the Mormon concept of celestial marriage are used in this poem like "glory," "coheirs," "God's pure altar."

Researcher: Sunny Grames  Date: 8 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Now comrades, equals, in the toilsome strife,
Partners of glory and coheirs of life,
See sex to sex with port sublimer turn,
And steadier flames and holier ardours burn;
At God's pure altar pledged, the nuptial band
Turns to a lifelong vow, and dreads no severing band;
E'en death, they deem, . . .
With stronger, purer, closer ties shall bind
The blest communion of the immortal mind,
Free the winged soul to larger bliss above,
And ope the heaven of everlasting love" (60-61)

Length of Relevant Material: 3
Hard Copy (pages): 60-62
Date When Copying Was Completed: ______________________________

Topics: women's role; Adam; Eve
Author: Lucy Aikin
Title of Book: Epistles on Women, Exemplifying Their Character and condition in Various Ages and Nations with Miscellaneous Poems.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: W. Wells and T. B. Wait and Co.
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: Microfiche Shaw-Shoemaker 19325
Nature of Source: a book of poems originally written by a woman to her friend Mrs. Charles Rochemont Aikin. Although not a "religious document," Aikin's poems contain expressions of religious ideas. She states in her introduction that her "'moral song'" is "to point out, that between the two partners of human life, not only the strongest family likeness, but the most complete identity of interest subsists: so that it is impossible for man to degrade his companion without degrading himself, or to elevate her without receiving a proportional accession of dignity and happiness" (viii). She maintains in her introduction that women are naturally and physically inferior to men and therefore the more "domestic and private" responsibilities fall to them. She also states that her purpose is "to mark the effect of various codes, institutions, and states of manners, on the virtue and happiness of man, and the concomitant and proportional elevation or depression of woman in the scale of existence" (vii).

Comment: the second half of the first poem in this book discusses Adam and Eve. Adam was in a state of meaningless existence until he is united with Eve. He is described as "vainly intelligent," "idly strong," with "listless steps and torpid air." He has a "brow of densest gloom and fixt infantile stare" . . . "Love nursed him not with sweet endearing wiles,/ Nor woman taught the sympathy of smiles" (25). Once Eve comes to him, Adam can speak, and the two become happy and fulfilled. Although the poem argues that woman is naturally weaker, as embodied in Eve, she is the source of life and joy for man. Aikin also argues in the poem that the Fall was the reason for inequality between man and woman; they were equal until sin and the consequences of the Fall existed.

Researcher: Sunny Grames Date: 8 July 1999

Excerpt (pages): "Now rose complete the mighty Maker's plan,
And Eden opened in the heart of Man;
Kindled by Hope, by gentle Love refined,
Sweet converse cheered him, and a kindred mind;
Nor deem that He, beneficent and just,
In woman's hand who lodged this sacred trust,
For man alone her conscious soul informed,
For man alone her tenderer bosom warmed;
Denied to her the cup of joy to sip,
But bade her raise it to his greedy lip,
Poor instrument of bliss, and tool of ease,
Born but to serve, existing but to please:....
No;....hand in hand the happy creatures trod,
Alike the children of no partial God;
Equal they trod till want and guilt arose,
Till savage blood was spilt, and man had foes:
Ah! Days of happiness,....with tearful eye
I see you gleam, and fade, and hurry by:
Why should my strain the darkening theme pursue?
Be husht, my plaintive lyre! My listening friend, adieu!
(27-28)

Length of Relevant Material: 32

Hard Copy (pages): Introduction to page 28

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Zion

Author: trans. By J. Max Hark, D. D. From the original German by Lamech and Agrippa
Reference is made to Zion, a house on a hill where men lived communally—a sort of convent comparable to the women’s Kedar previously explained in the book. The community at Zion is Excerpt (pages): "This hill was called Zion, and from it the society afterwards went by the name of the Zionitic Brotherhood, which name clung to them in all their doings. At this time, too, the name Ephrata was given the Settlement by the Superintendent, of which he said, that here his Rachel, for whom he had served so many years, was buried, after she had borne to him Benoni, the child of anguish; whereby he pointed to the history of the patriarch Jacob. . . ." (108)

"Thus at length the hermit Order in the Settlement was converted, amid many temptations, to a conventual life. Our predecessors of both sexes followed this angelic life in the forests of Conestoga for ten years before Ephrata was built, and it was spread abroad in different parts of the land. And that God first practices his saints in a separate and solitary life ere he hires them for his vineyard, is shown by the example of John the Baptist, as well as by that Moses in the wilderness where he tended sheep for forty years. The Superintendent was able to adapt himself pretty well to these peculiar conditions, thought it cost him a thousand tears to renounce his angelic way of life and again to plunge into the ocean of humanity; for he clearly saw that the hermit life, however innocent it be, could yet contribute nothing to the fruitfulness of the house of God, because, as he says in his discourses, no hermit enters the kingdom of God. Therefore when afterwards every spring the cry arose that the Brethren in Zion would go forth into the wilderness, it did not move him, since he foresaw that the sons of Ephraim, who clad in armor were bearing the bow, would yet fall away in the time of battle, which the Eckerlins ventured to do when the wanted to revive the hermit-life on New River, where the storm of the Almighty Lord then overthrew their structure, erected in selfishness, so that several lost their lives, and others fell away and afterwards multiplied in the flesh" (109-110).
Topics: Abraham
Author: Mordecai M. Noah, translator
Title of Book: The Book of Jasher; referred to in Joshua and Second Samuel
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: M. M. Noah & A. S. Gould
Date of Publication: 1840
Library Location: HBLL Special Collections BS 1830 J2 A3 1840
Nature of Source: Noah's translation from the Hebrew of the apocryphal work. Cyrus Eddy donated a copy to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute. Joseph Smith referred to it as one of the lost biblical books as early as 1833, and after its publication by Noah in 1840, references to it appeared in early Church periodicals. For more information, see Edward J. Brandt, "The History, Content, and Latter-day Saint Use of the Book of Jasher" (Dissertation, BYU, 1976).
Comment: The Book of Jasher originally portrays Terah as righteous, as he saved Abraham from death as an infant. However, Terah soon became involved in idolatry, similar to the account in the Book of Abraham; Abraham eventually destroyed his idols and was imprisoned by the king for his actions. The king then cast Abraham and his brother Haran into a fire, but the Lord protected Abraham during the ordeal, which lasted three days. The Book of Jasher also contains several other aprochryphal Abraham stories.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "6 And Abram was in Noah's house thirty-nine years, and Abram knew the Lord from three years old, and he went in the ways of the Lord until the day of his death, as Noah and his son Shem had taught him; and all the sons of the dearth in those days greatly transgressed against the Lord, and they rebelled against him and they served other gods, and they forgot the Lord who had created them in the earth; and the inhabitants of the earth made unto themselves, at that time, every man his god; gods of wood and stone which could neither speak, hear, nor deliver, and the sons of men served them and they became their gods.

7 And the king and all his servants, and Terah with all his household were then the first of those that served gods of wood and stone.

8 And Terah had twelve gods of large size, made of wood and stone, after the twelve months of the year, and he served each one monthly, and every month Terah would bring his meat offering and drink offering to his gods; thus did Terah all the days." (19-20)

"16 And Abram came to his father's house and saw twelve gods standing there in their temples, and the anger of Abram was kindled when he saw these images in his father's house.

17 And Abram said, As the Lord liveth these images shall not remain in my father's house; so shall the Lord who created me do unto me if in three days' time I do not break them all . . .

33 And when Abram saw all these things his anger was kindled against his father, and he hastened and took a hatchet in his hand, and came unto the chamber of the gods, and he broke all his father's gods.

34 And when he had done breaking the images, he placed the hatchet in the hand of the great god which was there before them, and he went out." (25-26)

Length of Relevant Material: 10 pp.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Abraham

Author: Mordecai M. Noah, translator

Title of Book: The Book of Jasher; referred to in Joshua and Second Samuel

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: M. M. Noah & A. S. Gould

Date of Publication: 1840

Library Location: HBLL Special Collections BS 1830 .J2 A3 1840
Nature of Source: Noah's translation from the Hebrew of the apocryphal work. Cyrus Eddy donated a copy to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute. Joseph Smith referred to it as one of the lost biblical books as early as 1833, and after its publication by Noah in 1840, references to it appeared in early Church periodicals. For more information, see Edward J. Brandt, "The History, Content, and Latter-day Saint Use of the Book of Jasher" (Dissertation, BYU, 1976).

Comment: The Book of Jasher contains an account of the attempted sacrifice of Abraham, but with numerous differences from the Book of Abraham. According to the Book of Jasher, the birth of Abraham coincided with a sign in the heavens interpreted by the king's wise men as symbolic of the future greatness of Abraham. The king then offered Terah money for the life of Abraham; Terah tricks the king into killing one of the children of his servants, which satisfies the king. Abraham's mother then raises him in secrecy in a cave. The main similarity to the Book of Abraham is the attempted murder/sacrifice of Abraham. The differences include that in the Book of Jasher, Abraham's father works to protect his life, and is righteous; it is the king, not the priests of Elkanah, who attempt the sacrifice in the Book of Jasher; and the Book of Asher account involves Abraham as an infant.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "1 And it was in the night that Abram was born, that all the servants of Terah, and all the wise men of Nimrod, and his conjurors came and ate and drank in the house of Terah, and they rejoiced with him on that night.
2 And when all the wise men and conjurors went out from the house of Terah, they lifted up their eyes toward heaven that night to look at the stars, and they saw, and beheld one very large star came from the east and ran in the heavens, and he swallowed up the four stars from the four sides of the heavens.
3 And all the wise men of the king and his conjurors were astonished at the sight, and the sages understood this matter, and they knew its import.
4 And they said to each other, This only betokens the child that has been born to Terah this night, who will grow up and be fruitful, and multiply, and possess all the earth, he and his children for ever, and he and his seed will slay great kings, and inherit their lands . . . [The conjurors then inform the king, who demands Abraham of Terah.]
33 And Terah hastened, (as the thing was urgent from the king), and he took a child from one of his servants, which his handmaid had born to him that day, and Terah brought the child to the king and received value for him.
34 And the Lord was with Terah in this matter, that Nimrod might not cause Abram's death, and the king took the child from Terah and with all his might dashed his head to the ground, for he had thought it had been Abram; and this was concealed from him from that day, and it was forgotten by the king, as it was the will of Providence not to suffer Abram's death.
35 And Terah took Abram his son secretly, together with his mother and nurse, and he concealed them in a cave, and he brought them their provisions monthly.
36 And the Lord was with Abram in the cave and he grew up, and Abram was in the cave ten years, and the kings and his princes, soothsayers and sages, thought that the king had killed Abram." (17-19)

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Topics: Apostasy; divine mission of the United States
Author: Frederick Butler
Title of Book: Sketches of Universal History, Sacred and Profane, from the Creation of the World to the Present Time
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hartford, CT
Publisher: Roberts & Burr
Date of Publication: 1823
Library Location: HBLL D 21 .B98x 1823
Nature of Source: A world history (412 pages) which endeavours to show "that one supreme, omnipotent, eternal God created the universe, that his superintending providence preserves and governs all things" (preface). Butler's history is broad-ranging, beginning at the creation and extending through the recent American past. The Manchester Library, a lending library located within five miles of the Smith home, had a copy of an 1822 edition.
Comment: Butler strongly portrayed the hand of God in history, as he discussed the apostasy of the primitive church with the emergence of Catholicism, the necessity of the Reformation, and the divinity of the American nation.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): Apostasy of the primitive church: "This little church from its infancy has been, like the ancient church in the wilderness, under great trials, and distresses, as well as frequent displays of his presence and protection. That Roman empire which blotted out the ancient church, and paved the way in the peaceful reign of Augustus Caesar for the planting of the christian church; in the course of three hundred and fifty years, raised ten general persecutions against her; persecutions designed to drown her in her own blood . . .

The meekness, simplicity, and humility of the gospel, were soon succeeded, and swallowed up in this new order of things; which the luxury and effeminacy, of the Roman state, at this time, greatly favored . . .

The bishop of Rome laid aside his mitre, took the triple crown and sceptre; and upon this Jewish basis introduced the worship of saints and images; in imitation of the heathen mythology of the Greeks and Romans, and the Pagan religion of the barbarians. To these he added a corrupt christianity; retaining little more of it, in its purity and power, than the name." (37-38)

"Here let us pause, and admire the wisdom and goodness of the God of our fathers, in his watchful, guardian care, over this vine of the reformation, this little church in the wilderness. If they had not been harassed by the savages in their early settlements, would they have preserved their virtue? If they had not been pressed by the alarming dangers of the old French war, would they have ever united? If they had not been oppressed by Britain, would they have become a nation? If they had not been alarmed by insurrections under the old confederation, would they have delegated such powers to the new federal compact? If the new federal compact had not been framed and put into operation just at that critical time, just upon the explosion of the French revolution, who will dare to say, what would have been the fate of United America at this day? Let us adore the God of our fathers, who has done all this for us." (313)

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Arabian peninsula (land of Bountiful)
Author: Rev. J. Goldsmith [Sir Richard Phillips]
Title of Book: Manners, Customs, and Curiosities, of the People of India, Ceylon, Persia, Arabia, and Turkey; with a General View of their Religion, Marriage Ceremonies, Climate, &c. &c.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: Johnson & Warner
Date of Publication: 1810
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a 21078
Nature of Source: A geography of the Near and Far East. Another geographical book by Goldsmith, A General View of the Manners, Customs and Curiosities of Nations (1822 edition) was found at the Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home. The section on Arabia quoted below appears to be taken directly from A General View (see pages 239-243).

Comment: Goldsmith presented a fairly negative view of the people and climate of Arabia. However, he noted that not all of Arabia was inhospitable, suggesting that the climate of southern Arabia allowed the cultivation of fruit trees. In short, though most of Arabia was inhospitable desert, the existence of a region such as the Book of Mormon Bountiful seems possible in Goldsmith's portrayal.

Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): Climate of Arabia: "It consists of three grand divisions. That which lies within the tropic is excessively hot, and in many places unhealthy, particularly those parts that are situated on the coast of the Red-Sea. The winds are also hot and suffocating, and the sands extremely dangerous, being sometimes driven by the winds in such prodigious clouds, that whole caravans have been buried and lost by a single storm. . . .

The southern part of Arabia, distinguished by the name of Happy, would be considered as having little claim to that title by a stranger traversing its shores; but should such a one be placed in its middle regions, beneath the balm-dropping woods, and amidst the verdant vales, where the fruits of every climate court the taste, and the breezes of cassia refresh the senses, he would acknowledge that the ancients very justly bestowed on the country that emphatical appellation.

Sylphs! who from realms of equatorial day
To climes that shudder in the polar ray,
From zone to zone pursue on shifting wing,
The bright perennial journey of the spring;
Bring my rich balms from Mecca's hallow'd glades;
Sweet flowers, that glitter in Arabia's shades;
Fruits, whose fair forms in bright succession glow,
Gilding the banks of Arno, or of Po;
Each leaf, whose fragrant steam with ruby lip
Gay China's nymphs from pictur'd vases sip;
Each spicy rind, which sultry India boasts,
Scenting the night-air round her breezy coasts.

BOTANIC GARDEN . . .

In Stony Arabia formerly stood the magnificent city of Palmyra, in speaking of which Mr. Gibbon observes: "Amid the barren deserts of Arabia, a few cultivated spots arise, like islands, out of the sandy ocean. Even the name of Palmyra, by its signification in the Syriac as well as the Latin language, denoted the multitude of palm trees, which afford shade and verdure to that region." (34-37)

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Cain
Author: Mordecai M. Noah, translator
Title of Book: The Book of Jasher; referred to in Joshua and Second Samuel
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: M. M. Noah & A. S. Gould
Date of Publication: 1840
Library Location: Special Collections BS 1830 .J2 A3 1840
Nature of Source: Noah's translation from the Hebrew of the apocryphal work. Cyrus Eddy donated a copy to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute. Joseph Smith referred to it as one of the lost biblical books as early as 1833, and after its publication by Noah in 1840, references to it appeared in early Church periodicals. For more information, see Edward J. Brandt, "The History, Content, and Latter-day Saint Use of the Book of Jasher" (Dissertation, BYU, 1976).
Comment: Just as in the Book of Moses, the Book of Jasher expands upon the Genesis account of Cain and Abel. While generally following the Genesis story, the Jasher account does not indicate that Cain received a mark for slaying Abel.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "And the boys grew up and their father gave them a possession in the land; and Cain was a tiller of the ground, and Abel a keeper of sheep.

15 And it was at the expiration of a few years, that they brought an approximating offering to the Lord, and Cain brought from the fruit of the ground, and Abel brought from the firstlings of his flock from the fat thereof, and God turned and inclined to Abel and his offering, and a fire came down from the Lord from heaven and consumed it.

16 And unto Cain and his offering the Lord did not turn, and he did not incline to it, for he had brought from the inferior fruit of the ground before the Lord, and Cain was jealous against his brother Abel on account of this, and he sought a pretext to slay him. . .

21 And Cain said to his brother Abel, Surely if I slay thee this day, who will require thy blood from me?

22 And Abel answered Cain, saying, Surely God who has made us in the earth, he will avenge my cause, and he will require my blood from thee shouldst thou slay me, for the Lord is the judge and arbiter, and it is he who will requite man according to his evil, and the wicked man according to the wickedness that he may do upon earth.

23 And now, if thou shouldst slay me here, surely God knoweth thy secret views, and will judge thee for the evil which thou didst declare to do unto me this day. . .

31 But thou didst this thing and didst slay thy brother for naught and because he spoke rightly to thee, and now, therefore, cursed be thou from the ground which opened its mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand, and wherein thou didst bury him.

32 And it shall be when thou shalt till it, it shall no more give thee its strength as in the beginning, for thorns and thistles shall the ground produce, and thou shalt be moving and wandering in the earth until the day of thy death.

33 And at that time Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, from the place where he was, and he went moving and wandering in the land toward the east of Eden."

(2-3)
Such sinners, guilty of even one work of the flesh (as Paul writes: Gal. v. 3.) and of refusing repentance after suitable conviction not only are to be excluded from the Lord's supper, but even from the kingdom of God, and consequently from the church of the Lord!” (45)

"Thus thee may see who is the institutor of excommunication in the New Testament: namely, Jesus Christ, the true steward. It was ordered for the purpose of such sinners, whose sins may be forgiven without its being executed, provided they will listen to good admonition: on the contrary, however, are banished from the church, not for the sake of their sins, but for their pride and obstinacy." (50)

---

Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "Every particular church is provided with laws of government. The laws are enacted by the head of the church. The book where thy are to be found is the Bible, and the Bible only. They are sanctioned with rewards, and penalties. The rewards are acceptance of God; and approbation of men. The penalties are private, and public; the private are admonitions, which every member is authorized to inflict, on his own private judgment: the public penalties are of three sorts, answerable to the three degrees of transgressions; for transgressions of the lowest class the penalty is, rebuke; for greater transgressions the penalty is, suspensions, to be accompanied with a first, and second admonition; for transgressions of the highest class the penalty is, immediate excommunication: these penalties are to be inflicted in public; and by none but ministers; nor by them till the judgment of the church be first obtained. Whatever is worthy of suspension must issue in excommunication if the transgressor remain incorrigible. The judges of the above laws are the officers and brethren of the particular church concerned, excepting them who are immediately interested in the conference. The judgment is to be formed on the suffrages of all, or of the majority. Suffrages may be given by voice, balloting, lifting up the hand, standing up, silence &c. Judgment thus obtained is decissive [sic]. Nevertheless in dubious or weighty matters a church are authorized, by example, to suspend judgment till they have the advice of an association of churches." (48)

"An excommunicated person is to be restored on repentance. Requisite to his restoration is, notice of his design to the minister; he appointing him a time to be before the church; when met, the solemnity is to be opened with a prayer suitably prefaced; calling on the penitent to express his design, repentance, faith, desire of forgiveness, and restoration of love; obtaining the judgment of the church in his favour; his absolution, and restoration with the right hand of fellowship and kiss of charity; his signing the church covenant; thanksgiving and benediction. The agent in the whole affair is to be a minister." (77)

Length of Relevant Material: 23

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Descent of authority; ordination
Author: Isaac Smith
Title of Book: A Sermon Preached at the Instalment of the Rev. Ethan Smith
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Concord, NH
Publisher: George Hough
Date of Publication: 1800
Library Location: Microfiche 080 Sh64 Evans 38516
Nature of Source: Delivered March 12, 1800 at the installment of Ethan Smith (of View of the Hebrews fame) as reverend in Hopkinton, New Hampshire. Isaac Smith primarily discussed the responsibilities of ministers. The pamphlet also includes the ministerial charges given to Ethan Smith and a sermon by him the following Sabbath which reviewed the responsibilities of gospel hearers.

Comment: Smith used Matthew 24:45-46 as his theme scripture: "Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his Lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing." After a summary of the apocalyptic events described in Matthew 24,
Smith spoke of the requisite qualities for a gospel minister, emphasizing that he should be a "wise and faithful servant" and a steward over the household of Christ. Smith also argued for an orderly succession of ministers, but stated that an unbroken chain of ministerial succession from the time of Christ was unnecessary.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): Smith stated that the blood of the people would be required at the hands of the slothful minister (compare with Jacob 1:19): "We are called together this day, to witness one of the most serious transactions, which takes place in our world--to set a watchman upon this part of the walls of our Jerusalem. He is to take the charge, not of the bodies, but the souls, the precious and immortal souls, of this people: And if any of them are lost, thro' his neglect of duty, or bad conduct, their blood will God require at the watchman's hand, see Ezek. xxxiii. How awfully solemn is the idea! But if, on the other hand, he should prove faithful in the discharge of the sacred office, and the people reject his messages of love, and will take no warning; he will clear his skirts, and their blood will be upon their own heads." (3)

"The apostles gave commandment to these ordinary pastors, to ordain other qualified men in all the churches; and so in this method a successive ministry has been handed down in all ages of the church, to the present. Some have warmly contended that an uninterrupted succession of regularly ordained ministers from the apostles: But in such great changes and revolutions as the church has passed through in eighteen hundred years, there is little reason to doubt but there has been some degree of irregularity in the ordination of some of her ministers--But nevertheless, this does not mar the foundation; it still remains firm, and the gates of hell cannot prevail against it. Christ has promised to be with his ministers always, to the end of the world: Therefore he has engaged, that there shall be such an orderly succession as he shall own and bless as long as time remains." (14)

Length of Relevant Material: 33

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Library Location: E 61 .P93 1835

Nature of Source: First published in 1833, Priest's book reviewed various types of evidence, including archaeological, linguistic, and religious, to conclude that an ancient civilization distinct from the current Native Americans once inhabited America. Priest focused almost exclusively on the Native Americans of North America. A copy of a book entitled American Antiquities was donated to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute by Benjamin Winchester, but this could have referred to a book by Alexander Bradford (1841). In addition, the Manchester Library housed a copy of the 1833 edition.

Comment: Priest believed that there had been much historical contact between the Old World and the New World, and presented extensive evidence of parallels between Native Americans and various ancient civilizations. For example, he cited ancient mummies found in Kentucky as evidence that an Egyptian colony had once existed in the New World, and he also suggested parallels between Native American language and Egyptian, but more similarities with the African language Lybian. Contemporary Indians, he believed, had taken the place of what had once been a much more advanced civilization. In addition, he spoke of extensive evidence for mammoths in ancient America. The book is a great source for contemporary learned thought regarding Native American history and religion.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "We are very far from believing the Indians of the present time to be the most ancient aborigines of America; but, on the contrary, are usurpers; have, by force of bloody warfare, exterminated the original inhabitants, taking possession of their country, property, and in some few instances, retaining arts, learned of those very nations." (97)

During a discussion of mummies found, and subsequently destroyed, in Kentucky in 1775: "If the Egyptians were indeed, reckoned as the first of nations; for so are they spoken of, even in the Scriptures: if from them was derived the art of navigation, the knowledge of astronomy, in a great degree, with many other arts, of use to human society; such as architecture, agriculture, with the science of government, &c.; why not allow the authors of the antiquated works about Lexington, (together with the immense catacomb as evidence,) to have been, indeed, an Egyptian colony; seeing the art of embalming, which is peculiarly characteristic of that people, was found there in a state of perfection not exceeded by the mother country itself." (116-117)

"In this cave, it appears, there are sketched on the rock the figures of several animals, now extinct; among which, are three, much resembling the elephant, the tail and tusks excepted. It would be passing the bounds of credulity to suppose the artists who delineated the figures would represent no less than eight animals, different in their configurations, one from the other, which had in reality no being, and such as had never been seen.

We suppose the animals resembling the elephant to have been the mammoth, and those ancients were well acquainted with the creature, or they could never have engraved it on the rock." (150) Priest then presents numerous other evidences for the existence of mammoths in ancient America.

Length of Relevant Material: 400 pp.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Speaking of slavery: "11. Nevertheless, in the fullness of time, when the people of the provinces are delivered from the oppressions of the king of the island of Britain, surely they will render to every man justice and right?
12. For have not the princes of the provinces, even the great Sanhedrim of the people declared, that freedom is the birth-right of every man that cometh into the world, and that no prince, ruler nor governor, hath power to take it away?" (62)

The oppressions committed by the British army: "14. The widows and the fatherless were multiplied! and the sword devoured the young men! it was a day of deep distress! fear and dismay covered the faces of the husbandmen! and the joy of harvest was turned into mourning." (102)

After the American victory: "May it be a prelude to that peace, mentioned in the book of the Prophet Isaiah: "When the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established upon the tops of the mountains, and be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it!"
In his discussion of church government, Edwards gave fairly standard definitions for the work of ministers, ruling elders, and deacons. In discussing the role of a minister, Edwards emphasized his ritual role in ceremonies from baptism to blessing infants to burying the dead. A ruling elder is "to assist the minister in maintaining such rules of order and government as Christ hath established in his church" (32). The role of a deacon is secular as he manages the "money towards answering the church's worldly necessities" (37). In his scheme of church government, Edwards reserved two offices for women, elderess and deaconess, both of which he claimed had scriptural and ancient origins.

Excerpt (pages): "The office of elderesses hath foundation in scripture and antiquity. It is to be exercised only among the women. It consists in praying, and teaching at their separate assemblies; presiding there for maintenance of rules and government; consulting with the sisters about matters of the church which concern them, and representing their sense thereof to the elders; attending at the unction of sick sisters; and at the baptism of women, that all may be done orderly. The process by which they are put in the office may be like that of the teaching elders viz. by choice of the church &c. Their manner of performing the office is laboriously. They are to be veiled when they preach or pray, especially if men be sent to their assemblies. Their reward is honour, and maintenance."

(41)

"The office of deaconesses is of divine original and perpetual continuance in the church. It is the same in general with the office of deacons, only it is chiefly limited to the care of the sick, miserable, and distressed poor. The scripture marks of their office are, shewing mercy, succouring, &c. The way they are put in the office is by choice of the people, ordination, and other forms as in the case of deacons. Their qualifications are laid down negatively and positively by the apostle Paul. Their reward is honour, and maintenance. Their number should be proportionable to the need of the church. Their manner of performing the office is, with cheerfulness." (43)
Topics: Elijah
Author: Richard Stock and Samuel Torshell
Title of Book: A Commentary upon the Prophecy of Malachi
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Edinburgh, Scotland; also published in London, Dublin, and New York
Publisher: James Nichol
Date of Publication: 1865
Library Location: BS 1675 .S76 1865
Nature of Source: A theological treatise written by two seventeenth-century Anglican ministers, but not published until 1865. In separate sections, Stock and Torshell proceed through the book of Malachi providing commentary on its passages.
Comment: Stock and Torshell agreed that the correct interpretation of Malachi 4:5-6 concerning the return of "Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and fearful day of the Lord" referred to the preparatory ministry of John the Baptist before the first coming of Christ. They wrote in response to "papist" theologians who maintained that Elijah would physically return before the second coming of Christ. In addition, Stock and Torshell interpret verse 6 (turn the hearts of the fathers and children) to mean conversion, which would result in a "holy union of faith" and lead men to the "faith of the old patriarchs" (255, 304).
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): Stock: "The third prophecy in this chapter, touching the coming of John the Baptist, of his office, and the fruit the church should have by him, in this verse and the last . . . Not that Elijah who was taken up in a fiery chariot, but John Baptist, who is here called Elijah, for the similitude of his mind and manners, his graces, gifts, and office." (254-55)
"And he shall turn the heart of the fathers. In this verse is described the end of John's coming before Christ, his office, which is to convert the hearts of the fathers to the children, and to bring them to an holy union of faith, to work repentance in all, and to turn them from iniquity to the living God." (255)
Torshell: "The interpretation of this place hath very much divided the expositors. St Jermore took it once for all the prophets that should come; but he goes almost alone. A far greater party understand it of Elijah the Tishbite." (302) Torshell then reviewed the Latin and Greek texts and answered various objections to demonstrate that the passage refers to John the Baptist, not Elijah.
"John was sent to preach repentance, Mat. iii. 2, and to convert of all sorts from the error of their way, and to reduce them to the faith of the old patriarchs." (304)
Length of Relevant Material: 5 pp.
Hard Copy:
Topics: Enoch
Author: Mordecai M. Noah, translator
Title of Book: The Book of Jasher; referred to in Joshua and Second Samuel
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: M. M. Noah & A. S. Gould
Date of Publication: 1840
Library Location: Special Collections BS 1830 .J2 A3 1840
Nature of Source: Noah's translation from the Hebrew of the apocryphal work. Cyrus Eddy donated a copy to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute. Joseph Smith referred to it as one of the lost biblical books as early as 1833, and after its publication by Noah in 1840, references to it appeared in early Church periodicals. For more information, see Edward J. Brandt, "The History, Content, and Latter-day Saint Use of the Book of Jasher" (Dissertation, BYU, 1976).
Comment: Just as in the Book of Moses, the Book of Jasher greatly expands upon the account of Enoch in Genesis. Similarities between the two include the divine calling of Enoch (by an angel or by the voice of God); the emphasis on Enoch's preaching; statements that men greatly feared Enoch; and the belief that many others ascended to heaven with Enoch. Differences include virtually no statements on the content of Enoch's preaching in the Book of Jasher; the Book of Jasher does not connect Enoch's followers with a city of Zion; and the Book of Jasher does not contain comments on wars between the followers of Enoch and their enemies.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages):
1. And Enoch lived sixty-five years and he begat Methuselah; and Enoch walked with God after having begot Methuselah, and he served the Lord, and despised the evil ways of men.
2. And the soul of Enoch was wrapped up in the instruction of the Lord, in knowledge and in understanding; and he wisely retired from the sons of men, and secreted himself from them for many days.
3. And it was at the expiration of many years, whilst he was serving the Lord, and praying before him in his house, that an angel of the Lord called to him from Heaven, and he said, here am I.
4. And he said, rise, go forth from thy house and from the place where thou dost hide thyself, and appear to the sons of men, in order that thou mayst teach them the way in which they should go, and the work which they must accomplish to enter in the ways of God.
5. And Enoch rose up according to the word of the Lord, and went forth from his house, from his place and from the chamber in which he was concealed; and he went to the sons of men and taught them the ways of the Lord, and at that time assembled the sons of men and acquainted them with the instruction of the Lord.
6. And he ordered it to be proclaimed in all places where the sons of men dwelt, saying, where is the man who wishes to know the ways of the Lord and good works? let him come to Enoch.

7. And all the sons of men then assembled to him, for all who desired this thing went to Enoch, and Enoch reigned over the sons of men according to the word of the Lord, and they came and bowed to him and they heard his word.

8. And the spirit of God was upon Enoch, and he taught all his men the wisdom of God and his ways, and the sons of men served the Lord all the days of Enoch, and they came to hear his wisdom.

9. And all the kings of the sons of men, both first and last, together with their princes and judges, came to Enoch when they heard of his wisdom, and they bowed down to him, and they also required of Enoch to reign over them, to which he consented.

10. And they assembled in all, one hundred and thirty kings and princes, and they made Enoch king over them, and they were all under his power and command.

11. And Enoch taught them wisdom, knowledge, and the ways of the Lord; and he made peace amongst them, and peace was throughout the earth during the life of Enoch.

12. And Enoch reigned over the sons of men two hundred and forty-three years, and he did justice and righteousness with all his people, and he led them in the ways of the Lord."

Adam then dies and Enoch assists with his burial.

"17. And it was in the year of Adam's death which was the two hundred and forty-third year of the reign of Enoch, in that time Enoch resolved to separate himself from the sons of men and to secrete himself as at first in order to serve the Lord.

18. And Enoch did so, but did not entirely secrete himself from them, but kept away from the sons of men three days and then went to them for one day.

19. And during the three days that he was in his chamber, he prayed to, and praised the Lord his God, and the day on which he went and appeared to his subjects he taught them the ways of the Lord, and all they asked him about the Lord he told them.

20. And he did in this manner for many years, and he afterward concealed himself for six days, and appeared to his people one day in seven; and after that once in a month, and then once in a year, until all the kings, princes and sons of men sought for him, and desired again to see the face of Enoch, and to hear his word; but they could not, as all the sons of men were greatly afraid of Enoch, and they feared to approach him on account of the Godlike awe that was seated upon his countenance; therefore no man could look at him, fearing he might be punished and die."

Enoch continues to preach until an angel "wished to bring him up to heaven to make him reign there over the sons of God." Before his ascension, Enoch gathers his people to give them final instructions. A horse then descends from heaven.

"31. And all the sons of men assembled and came to Enoch that day; and all the kings of the earth with their princes and counsellors remained with him that day; and Enoch then taught the sons of men wisdom and knowledge, and gave them divine instruction; and he bade them serve the Lord and walk in his ways all the days of their lives, and he continued to make peace amongst them.
32. And it was after this that he rose up and rode upon the horse; and he went forth and all the sons of men went after him, about eight hundred thousand men; and they went with him one day's journey.
33. And the second day he said to them, return home to your tents, why will you go? perhaps you may die; and some of them went from him, and those that remained went with him six day's journey; and Enoch said to them every day, return to your tents, lest you may die; but they were not willing to return, and they went with him.
36. And when the kings returned they caused a census to be taken, in order to know the number of remaining men that went with Enoch; and it was upon the seventh day that Enoch ascended into heaven in a whirlwind, with horses and chariots of fire.
37. And on the eighth day all the kings that had been with Enoch went to bring back the number of men that were with Enoch, in that place from which he ascended into heaven.
38. And all those kings went to the place and they found the earth there filled with snow, and upon the snow were large stones of snow, and one said to the other, come, let us break through this snow and see, perhaps the men that remained with Enoch are dead, and are now under the stones of snow, and they searched but could not find him, for he had ascended into heaven."

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Happiness as God's purpose for man

Author: Richard Baxter

Title of Book: A Call to the Unconverted, to Turn and Live, and Accept of Mercy, While Mercy May be Had, As Ever They Will Find Mercy in the Day of Their Extremity, From the Living God

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Hartford, CT

Publisher: Peter B. Gleason and Co

Date of Publication: 1816

Library Location: Special Collections BV 4920 .B8 1816 Amer-Rare

Nature of Source: A series of sermons by an Anglican minister, Baxter (1615-1691). The Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home, had an 1818 edition printed in Canandaigua, NY.

Comment: Baxter continually emphasized the happiness which results from a true conversion and that God desires our conversion and happiness, somewhat reminiscent of Joseph Smith's teaching that happiness is the object of our existence.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "We are commanded by the Lord our master to offer you a pardon for all that's past, if you will but now at last return and live: We are commanded to beseech and intreat you to accept the offer and return; to tell you what preparation is made by Christ, what mercy stays for you, what patience waiteth on you, what thoughts of to kindness God hath towards you."

Natural man is enemy to God: "Lastly, you may hence learn, that the greatest enemy to man is himself; and the greatest judgment in this life that can befall him, is to be left to himself; and that the great work that grace hath to do, is to save us from ourselves; and the greatest accusations and complaints of men should be against themselves; and that the greatest work that we have to do ourselves, is to resist ourselves; and the greatest enemy that we should daily pray, and watch, and strive against, is our own carnal hearts and wills." (176)

---

Topics: Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost
Author: David Jones
Title of Book: A True History of Laying on of Hands upon Baptized Believers as Such:
In Answer to a Hand-Bill, Intitled, A Brief History of the Imposition of Hands on Baptized Persons; Published by Samuel Jones, D. D. Wherein his Mistakes are Attempted to be Corrected
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Burlington, NY
Publisher: S. C. Ustick
Date of Publication: 1805
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a Shaw 8709
Nature of Source: David Jones (1736-1820), a Baptist minister, wrote this pamphlet in response to another Baptist minister, Samuel Jones, who had denied that the laying on of hands was a proper church ritual. David Jones strongly defended the necessity of the laying on of hands by appeal to the scriptures, the church fathers, and theologian Benjamin Keach. For background material on this debate, see Janet Moore Lindman, "'Know How Thou Oughtest to Behave Thyself in the House of God': The Creation of Comment: Jones argued that laying on of hands served two functions: ordination and to receive the Holy Ghost after baptism. In particular, he responded at length to Samuel Jones' suggestion that the biblical laying on of hands referred to the bestowal of spiritual gifts by the apostles on believers, not so that they would receive the Holy Ghost.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "Paul knew that all read christians were to receive the Holy-Ghost after believing; and he knew also, that after baptism, christians were, by laying on of hands, set apart as the temples of the Holy-Ghost, but what gifts the Spirit would confer, he left that to the Holy-Ghost himself, for any attempt to convey the gifts would be a usurpation of the office of the Holy-Ghost." (13)
"Surely there is as good authority to lay hands on baptized believers as such, as there is for ordination, and in my opinion much better authority; as will appear by reading this history." (72)

Length of Relevant Material: 72

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost; infant baptism

Author: Morgan Edwards

Title of Book: Customs of Primitive Churches; or a set of Propositions Relative to the Name, Matterials [sic], Constitution, Power, Officers, Ordinances, Rites, Business, Worship, Discipline, Government &c. of a Church; to which are Added Their Proofs from Scripture; and Historical Narratives of the Manner in which Most of them Have Been Reduced to Practice

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: [Philadelphia]

Publisher:

Date of Publication: [1768]

Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64 Evans 10891

Nature of Source: Edwards (1722-1795), a Baptist minister, wrote a wide-ranging treatise on the practices of the primitive church which he advocated should be practiced by contemporary Baptists. Much of the book has the tone of a practical commentary on church regulations.

Comment: In his discussion of rituals practiced by the primitive church (including baptism, Lord's supper, imposition of hands, right hand of fellowship, love feast, washing of feet, kiss of charity, anointing the sick, collecting for the saints, fasts, and feasts), Edwards expressed his support for laying on of hands to give newly-baptized individuals the Holy Ghost as well as to ordain church officials. In addition, with the Baptist opposition to infant baptism, he advocated blessing infants (with the laying on of hands) a name and dedicate them to God. Obvious Mormon parallels include similar views of laying on of hands and blessing infants.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "Laying-on-of-hands is a rite of divine original, and perpetual continuance. The occasions on which it may be used are, when a person is baptized, to signify to him a consequent receiving of the holy ghost; when persons are made church officers, to perfect their ordinations, and encourage their expectations of increase of gifts; when infants are brought or dedicated to God. The constant attendants of the rite are, prayer; words expressive of the action; and, sometimes, fasting. The parties may kneel to have hands laid on them, except infants, who are to be taken up in arms. The performer of the rite is, a minister." (90)

"The scripture favours that practice of christian parents which dedicate their children to God by means of their ministers; who are to take them up in their arms, bless, and pray, with laying on them their hands. At which time they may be named." (96)
Priest argued that Melchezidek was Shem, the son of Noah. In addition, he speculated upon the site of the Garden of Eden, concluding that it was either located at Jerusalem or in present-day Turkey. However, he believed it quite probable that Noah built the ark in America.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages):

"Supposed identity and real name of Melchisedec, of the Scriptures. This is indeed an interesting problem, the solution of which has perplexed its thousands; most of whom suppose him to have been the Son of God, some angelic or mysterious supernatural personage, rather than a mere man. This general opinion proceeds on the ground of the Scripture account of him, as commonly understood, being expressed as follows:--'Without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God, abideth a priest continually.'--(Hebrews vii. 3.)

But, without further circumlocution, we will at once disclose our opinion, by stating that we believe him to have been Shem, the eldest son of Noah, the progenitor of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the Jews, and none other than Shem." (26)

"It appears that Shem, or Melchesidec, had gotten great possessons [sic] and influence among men, as he had become king of Salem, of ancient Jebus, where Jerusalem was afterward built, and were [sic] mount Zion reared her towers, and was the only temple, in which the true God was understandingly worshipped, then on the earth. It is not impossible but the mountainous region about Mount Horeb, and the mountains round about Jerusalem, were, before the flood, the base or foundation of the country, and exact location of the garden called Eden, the place where Adam was created. But when the waters of the deluge came, they tore away all the earthy matter, and left standing those tremendous pinnacles and overhanging mountains of the region of Jerusalem and Mount Horeb.

By examining the map on an artificial globe, it will be seen, the region of country situated between the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea, the Black and Caspian seas, and the Persian gulf, the country now called Turkey, there are many rivers running into these several waters, all heading toward each other; among which is the Euphrates, one of the rivers mentioned by Moses, as deriving its origin in the garden, or country of Eden. Mountainous countries are the natural sources of rivers. From which we argue that Eden must have been a high region of country, as intimated in Genesis, entirely inaccessible on all sides, but the east; at which point the sword of the Cherubim was placed to guard the way of the tree of life. Some have imagined the Persian gulf to be the spot where the garden was situated. But this is impossible, as that the river Euphrates runs into that gulf, from toward Jerusalem, or from north of Jerusalem. And as the region [sic] of Eden was the source of four large rivers, running in different directions, so also, now the region round about the present head waters of the Euphrates, is the source of many rivers, as said before; on which account, there can be but little doubt, but here the Paradise of Adam was situated, before the deluge. If the Euphrates is one of the rivers having its source in the garden or country of Eden, as Moses has recorded, it is then proved, to a demonstration, that the region as above described, is the ancient and primeval site of the literal Paradise of Adam." (32-33)

"So that if America have not the honor of being the country where Adam was created, as is believed by some, it has, nevertheless the honor, as we suppose, of being the country where the ark was erected." (137)

---

Topics: Millennial conditions

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical: The Literary and Philosophical Repertory

Place of Publication: Middlebury, VT

Publisher: For S. Swift, by T. G. Strong

Date of Publication: April 1812

Library Location: HBLL Microfilm 051.B #125

Nature of Source: A journal "embracing discoveries and improvements in the physical sciences; the liberal and fine arts; essays moral and religious; occasional notices and reviews of new publications; and articles of miscellaneous intelligence," edited by a "number of gentlemen." The following article is from volume 1; a copy of volume 7 was at the Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home. The article is a review of Miscellaneous Works, by Eliphalet Nott, President of Union College.

Comment: The reviewer describes Nott's postmillennialism, as he believed that man's work, particularly missionary work among the heathen nations, would bring about the Millennium. Nott also had a unique view regarding the time of the Millennium, as he stated that it would last a thousand years for every day in the prophesied thousand years, or, basically forever.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "Dr. Nott next passes to the perpetuity of Messiah's reign. Of the duration of Christ's kingdom on earth he entertains very enlarged expectations. The thousand years of peace and prosperity, which are promised to the church, he considers prophetick years. It is his opinion, therefore, that the reign of Christ will continue as many years as there are days in a thousand years, or a vast and indefinite period. Every benevolent mind must exult in contemplating so bright and glorious a prospect, and would rejoice to find Dr. Nott's views confirmed by the testimony of scripture." (31)

Length of Relevant Material: 2

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Missionary work; afterlife

Author: Leonard Woods

Title of Book: Sermon Preached at Haverhill (Mass.) in Remembrance of Mrs. Harriet Newell

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Boston, MA

Publisher: Samuel T. Armstrong

Date of Publication: 1817 (7th edition)

Library Location: Microfiche 080 Sh64a 42947

Nature of Source: Woods, the Abbot Professor of Christian Theology in the Seminary at Andover, preached the sermon to honor Harriet Newell, who had accompanied her husband, Rev. Samuel Newell, on a mission to India. Harriet "died at the Isle of France, Nov. 30, 1810, aged 19 years." Following the sermon are almost 200 pages of Harriet's letters and journal. A copy of an 1818 edition, published at Utica, NY, was at the Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home.

Comment: Woods emphasized the nature of missionary work, stating that it consisted of teaching the heathens about Christ; he conceived of missions as occurring in far-off lands among non-Christians. He also discussed the eternal rewards of missionary work and described his idea of the afterlife as living in the presence of angels and God.

Researcher: Matt Grow
The Christian Missionary, whose motives are as sublime as his office, forsakes all for Christ in a remarkable sense. The proof which he gives of devotion to Christ is indeed of the same nature with that, which other Christians give, but it is higher in degree. Others forsake the world in affection, but enjoy it still. He renounces the enjoyment, as well as the attachment. Other Christians esteem Christ above friends and possessions, and yet retain them far enough for the gratification of their natural affections. The Missionary, who has a right spirit, counteracts and modifies natural affection, by actually abandoning its dearest objects. The distinction in short is this; other Christians have a willingness to forsake all for Christ; the Missionary actually forsakes all. The cause of Christ among the heathen possesses attractions above all other objects. It has the absolute control of his heart. He forsakes father and mother, house and land, not because he is wanting in affection for them, but because he loves Christ more. He forsakes them, because his heart burns with the holy desire, that Christ may have the heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession."

"But all the enjoyment of Christians in this life is only the beginning of their blessedness. The consummation of it is the everlasting life, which they will inherit in the world to come. It will be a life of perfect holiness, and perfect, endless joy. They will live in the society of holy angels, and dwell in the presence of their blessed Lord, who loved them and gave himself for them. While they behold his glory, and enjoy his love, they will perfectly possess the object of all their desires. They wish for no higher happiness, than to enjoy God for ever. This is everlasting life. Give them this, and they ask no more."
The Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home, had a copy of this edition.

Comment: The entry for "Dunkers," a German sect also known as the Church of the Brethren founded in the eighteenth century and concentrated primarily in Pennsylvania, contains several parallels with Mormonism: baptism by immersion (though the Dunkers practiced triune baptism), laying on of hands after baptism (presumably to give the Holy Ghost), the denial of eternal (endless) punishment, and the belief in a type of spirit world, where the "souls of the just are employed to preach the gospel to those who have had no revelation in this life." Adams also describes the Dunkers as communal, vegetarians, and advocates of celibacy, though she may be mistaken on these points.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "They are said to derive their name from baptizing by immersion, which they perform thrice. And as they presented themselves to the ordinance in a peculiar manner, bowing forward (perhaps kneeling in the water, as an act of worship,) they were in ridicule called Tumblers. This is the more probable, as it appears their baptism was accompanied with the laying on of hands and prayer while in the water. . .

The principal tenet of the Dunkers appears to be this: That future happiness is only to be attained by penance and outward mortifications in this life; and that as Jesus Christ by his meritorious sufferings became the redeemer of mankind in general, so,--each individual of the human race, by a life of abstinence and restraint, should work out his own salvation. They are charged with holding the doctrine of supererogation: they deny the eternity of future punishments, and believe that the souls of the just are employed to preach the gospel to those who have had no revelation in this life. They suppose the Jewish sabbath, sabbatical year, and year of jubilee, are typical of certain periods after the general judgment, in which the souls of those who are so far humbled as to acknowledge God and Christ, are received to felicity; while those who continue obstinate are reserved in torment until the grand period typified by the jubilee arrives, in which all shall be made eventually happy. They also deny the imputation of Adam's sin to his posterity." (70-71)

Length of Relevant Material: 2

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Mode of baptism; infant baptism

Author: Alexander Mack

Title of Book: A Short and Plain View of the Outward, Yet Sacred Rights and Ordinances of the House of God

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: John Binns

Date of Publication: 1810

Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a no. 20619
Nature of Source: Originally written in Germany by Mack (b. 1712), a German immigrant who was a leader in America of the Church of the Brethren (Dunkers). The book takes the form of a dialogue between a father and a son discussing central Brethren doctrines.

Comment: Mack emphasizes that baptism by immersion (preferably in a river) is an ordinance essential for salvation. He particularly concentrates on infant baptism, arguing at length that it is unnecessary and that little children are saved through Christ.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "Thus if a child dies without its having been baptized it can sustain no injury, because it did not live to the time when it could have repented and believed in the Lord Jesus upon the faith of whom it could have been baptized . . . Baptism of course is ordered alone for believers, adults and not children. Children are and will be saved by grace through the merits of Jesus Christ." (27) Mack continues to explain that infant baptism first began in the second century.

Length of Relevant Material: 20 pp.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Mode of baptism; washings

Author: Stephen Palmer

Title of Book: Christ's Washing His Disciples Feet, Intended for a Sacramental Washing

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Dedham, MA

Publisher: H. Mann

Date of Publication: February 1808

Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a 15837

Nature of Source: A sermon preached at Needham, Massachusetts, on January 24, 1808. Palmer used as his text John 13:3-5 (the washing of the apostles' feet by Christ) and argued that this act constituted a sacramental baptism for the apostles.

Comment: Palmer stated that the traditional interpretation of the washing of the feet in John 13 as representative of humility was only partially correct; in addition, he believed that Christ baptized his disciples by washing their feet in preparation for them to enter his church. Extending his logic, Palmer denied that the mode of baptism was of any significance, as long as it involved the application of some amount of water.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): On washing of the feet as baptism: "The sentiment, therefore, which we advance is, that Christian Baptism, in substance, if not in form, was here instituted [at the washing of the feet]. We do not say, that the performance of this ceremony was intended to represent this ordinance, under all its outward circumstances; but to constitute the sacramental, in its essence and efficacy. The efficacy of this ordinance the disciples needed at this time, to qualify them to become members of the christian Church, into which they were about to enter. Hence we are led to believe, that when Christ washed their feet, it was not barely an ordinary ceremony, which was performed, but that baptism was substantially instituted and administered." (13-14)

"If nothing but a common ceremony was here performed, why were Christ's feet unwashed? The inference is natural, that a sacrament was intended, which the Saviour needed not. Upon the same principle, there is reason to believe, that Christ did not partake of the gospel Supper." (17)

On the mode of baptism: "The same will apply to baptism. It is the sacramental design, which is here also to be specially regarded. It is true that the application of water is necessary; but the mode, in which it is applied, is not essential. It is of no consequence, what part of the body is wet, or what quantity of water is applied. Hence the various modes of sprinkling, of pouring, and of plunging, which have been adopted in the christian Church. It is wrong to represent the mode as a matter of essential consequence, when the scripture has given no direction about it; but has left it option and unexplained. If our Saviour, however, meant to baptize his disciples by washing their feet, as we conceive that he did, most certainly he did not baptize them by immersion. . . . Still, however, if a person chooses to be baptized by immersion, we have no further objection, than the inconvenience attending it. This mode is lawful, and such a baptism, valid. Sprinkling is equally so." (32)

Length of Relevant Material: 40 pp.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Mother in Heaven
Author:
Title of Book: A Summary View of the Millennial Church, or United Society of Believers, (Commonly Called Shakers)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Packard & Van Benthuysen
Date of Publication: 1823
Library Location: HBLL Microfilm B No. 149 No. 21
Nature of Source: A Shaker apologetic work, primarily written to answer negative charges made by other authors. The book reviews the history of the Shakers and then expounds Shaker doctrine.
Comment: Includes the Shaker belief of a Mother in Heaven, basically equating a Heavenly Mother with the "Holy Spirit of Wisdom"; the "Father and Mother in the Deity" are not personages, but "incomprehensibles" which jointly acted to create the world.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "It is certainly most reasonable and consistent with infinite Wisdom, that the image and likeness of God should be most plainly manifested in man, who was made the most noble part of the natural creation. Accordingly we read, "And God said,
Let us make man in our image, after our likeness.--So God created "man in his own image; in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Hence it must appear evident that there exists in the Deity, the likeness of male and female, forming the unity of that creative and good principle from which proceeds the work of Father and Mother, manifested in Power to create, and Wisdom to bring forth into proper order, all the works of God. If it were not so, then man, who was created male and female, as father and mother, could not, with any propriety, be said to show forth the image and likeness of God. But the manifestation of Father and Mother in the Deity, being spiritual, does not imply two Persons, but two Incomprehensibles, of one substance, from whom proceed all Divine power and life.

The Almighty is manifested as proceeding from everlasting, as the first Source of all power, and the fountain of all good, the Creator of all good beings, and is the Eternal Father; and the Holy Spirit of Wisdom, who was the Co-worker with him, from everlasting, is the Eternal Mother, the bearing Spirit of all the works of God." (91-92)

"It was absolutely necessary that the human tabernacle of Jesus should not only be created in a supernatural manner, by the immediate operation of the Eternal Father and Mother; but also in a state superior to that of the first Adam; otherwise he could never have had the pre-eminence, as to the superiority of his origin. As no stream can rise higher than its fountain; so no being could proceed from the loins of Adam with a life superior to that which he possessed; for he was formed of the elements of temporal life, and not of the elements of eternal life. . . . But Jesus being created in a state superior to that of the first Adam, he was the first who received the elements of eternal life from his Eternal Parents." (217-18)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Name of Church
Author: John Winebrenner

Title of Book: An Original History of the Religious Denominations at Present Existing in the United States (compiled by I. Daniel Rupp)

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: J. Y. Humphreys
Date of Publication: 1844
Library Location: HBLL BR 515 .R9 1849
Nature of Source: A book containing articles on numerous American religions, generally written by their leaders (the section on Mormonism was written by Joseph Smith). Winebrenner, a former German Reformed minister, founded the Churches of God in 1830 in Pennsylvania; he claimed some 10,000 followers by 1844. Winebrenner seems to have been most influenced by the radical German sects (Mennonites and Dunkers) as well as American primitivists (such as Baptists and Campbellites).

Comment: Winebrenner argues that the only proper name for the true church is the Church of God.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "The name or title, Church of God, is undeniably the true and proper appellation by which the New Testament church ought to be designated. This is her scriptural and appropriate name. This, and no other title, is given her by divine authority (Isa 62:2 Ac 20:28 Ga 1:13 1Ti 3:15). This name or title, therefore, ought to be adopted and worn to the exclusion of all others.

There are those, who have pleaded for the use, and for the exclusive use, of some other appellations: such as the name of Christian; others for that of Disciples; and others, again, for the name Brethren, &c. But it ought to be recollected, that not one of these is a proper noun, or a patronymic, and, therefore, none of them is ever used in Scripture as an appellation for the church. The individual members of the church are, and may be, very properly so called; but not so with regard to the church herself. We nowhere read of the "Christian Church," or of the "Disciples' Church," nor of the "Brethren's Church," &c.

If, then, it is unscriptural to assume and wear any one of these, or any other Bible name, as a church appellation, how much more improper, unscriptural, and God-dishonouring is it, to lay aside all Bible names, even the divinely appointed name, Church of God, and assume a human name: such as Roman Catholic, Episcopalian, Lutheran, Presbyterian, German Reformed, Baptist, Methodist, Menonist, Unitarian, Universalist, or something else, equally inappropriate, unscriptural, or even unmeaning?

As a religious community, therefore, we claim to stand identified with, and to be a part of, the true Church of God. As such we claim brotherhood with all the saints of God, wherever they may be found, and wish to extend the hand of fellowship to all, without exception, whose "fellowship is with the Father and His Son the Lord Jesus." (171-72)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Name of Church

Author: Alexander Campbell

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Our Name"

Title of Periodical: Millennial Harbinger

Place of Publication: Bethany, VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: September 1839

Library Location: HBLL Special Collections 286.605 M61

Nature of Source: A religious periodical edited by Campbell.

Comment: Campbell justifies the use of the term "Disciples of Christ" for his followers.
Excerpt (pages): "Into what, or into whom have we been immersed? Into Calvin, Luther, Wesley, Campbell, or Reformation? If not, then why nickname us, or we nickname ourselves, when we assume or choose such designations? Shall we be called Disciples of Christ, or Christians? Why not call ourselves Christians? Not because we have another leader than Christ; for he is our teacher. We believe in him--were immersed into his death--and have thus put on Christ. But we have been anticipated. The term Christian in New England, and in some other sections of this land, is a name chosen and appropriated by a party who boast that they are Unitarians--disbelieve in baptism for the remission of sins--and refuse to celebrate the Lord's death as often as they celebrate his resurrection, &c., &c.

Were I or any brother to traverse much of New York, New England, and some other sections, and call ourselves Christians, as a party name, we should be admitted by all Unitarians and rejected by all of a different belief. Our party would fraternize with us, while others would repudiate us, and unchurch us, because of our Unitarianism, Arianism, &c. For this reason we prefer an unappropriated name, which is indeed neither more nor less than the scriptural equivalent of Christian; for who were called Christians first at Antioch? They had a prior--a more ancient name. They were called Disciples. Disciples of whom? Of Christ. Disciples of Christ is, then, a more ancient title than Christian, while it fully includes the whole idea. It is, then, as divine, as authoritative as the name Christian, and more ancient. Besides it is more descriptive; and better still, it is unappropriated. It claims our preference for four reasons:--

1st. It is more ancient.
2d. It is more descriptive.
3d. It is more scriptural.
4th. It is more unappropriated." (400-401)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Name of Church; salvation through knowledge
Author: Matthew Mead
Title of Book: The Almost Christian Discovered: Or, the False Professor Tried and Cast
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Poughkeepsie, NY
Publisher: Paraclete Potter
Date of Publication: 1815
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a 35235
Nature of Source: A compilation of a series of sermons given by Mead (1603?-1699) in London in 1661. Mead emphasized that many who professed to be Christians were merely "almost Christians," as they lacked the essential internal changes and the grace of God. A copy was at the Manchester Library. The 1815 printing was the first American edition.

Comment: Though not explicitly discussing the proper name of a church, Mead used similar logic to 3 Nephi 27, stating that the true followers of Christ would be known by his name. In addition, Mead spoke of the role of knowledge in salvation, seemingly giving knowledge a lesser role than did Joseph Smith. Mead insisted that knowledge combined with zeal led to salvation, but then repeatedly warned that many who had knowledge of God and Christ were but "almost Christians."

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "A christian is a disciple of Jesus Christ, one that believes in, and follows Christ. As one that embraces the doctrine of Arminius, is called an Arminian; and as he that owns the doctrine and way of Luther, is called a Lutheran; so he that embraces, and owns, and follows, the Doctrine of Jesus Christ, he is called a Christian."

(22)

"Some have zeal and no knowledge; that is blind devotion; some have knowledge and no zeal; that is fruitless speculation; but where knowledge is joined with zeal, that make a true Christian. . . .

Knowledge may fill the head, but it will never better the heart, if there be not somewhat else. The Pharisees had much knowledge . . . Alas! how many have gone loaded with knowledge to hell.

Though it is true, that it is life eternal to know God and Jesus Christ; yet it is as true that many do know God and Jesus Christ, that shall never see life eternal.

There is, you must know, a two fold knowledge: the one is common, but not saving; the other is not common but saving: common knowledge is that which floats in the head, but doth not influence the heart. . . .

And this is that knowledge which leads to life eternal: now whatever that measure of knowledge is, which a man may have of God, and of Jesus Christ, yet if it be not this saving knowledge, knowledge joined with affection and application, he is but almost a Christian." (38-40)

Length of Relevant Material: 2

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Native American history and religion

Author: Alexander W. Bradford

Title of Book: American Antiquities and Researches into the Origin and History of the Red Race

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, NY and Boston, MA

Publisher: Dayton and Saxton

Date of Publication: 1841

Library Location: E 61 .B78
Nature of Source: A scholarly review of the ancient civilizations of North, Central, and South America, with particular emphasis on the North American Indians, the Aztecs, the Mayas, and the Incas. A copy of a book entitled American Antiquities was donated to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute by Benjamin Winchester, but this could have referred to a book authored by Josiah Priest.

Comment: After extensively discussing the indigenous civilizations of the Americas, Bradford concluded that they all had a common origin and that a formerly enlightened civilization had disintegrated into numerous degraded groups. Bradford also rejected the Bering Strait theory of Indian origins, asserting that the original inhabitants of the Americas came by water; he speculated that they were related to a variety of Old World peoples, including Egyptians, Madagascarians, Chinese, and Hindoostanians, but not Israelites.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): The indigenous inhabitants of the Americas descended from a more advanced civilization: "The assertion that mankind 'always' advance and never recede, is equally untrue in philosophy and experience.' . . . With these views, on turning to the uncivilized aboriginal tribes of both Americas, we shall be able to discern much that favors the idea of their descent from more enlightened progenitors,--faint traces of an ancient civilization not wholly obliterated by the lapse of time." (177-179)

The religious beliefs of the indigenous peoples, many of which reflect Christian tenets, are remnants of an ancient system of belief: "It is no despicable proof of the antiquity and sanctity of those great truths, to find among our aborigines a belief in the existence of a Supreme Being, a firm faith in the immortality of the soul, in a state of future retribution, in the doctrine of atonement as emblazoned in sacrifices and expiatory self-punishments, in a deluge, and in the final destruction of the world with all its inhabitants. The early missionaries failed not to perceive these analogies to many of the principles of our own religion, and sought to explain them upon the supposition that the Gospel had once been preached in America by some of the primitive fathers; but in view of the proofs of the antiquity of the race upon this continent, it seems just to suppose that the aborigines, in common with some of the ancient nations in the old world, had preserved feeble vestiges of those great truths which were known to man in primeval ages, and which have been purely preserved only in the sacred writings." (363-364)

Concluding descriptions of the common origin: "The facts adduced in the course of the preceding investigation tend, it is conceived, to support the following conclusions:

I. That the three great groups of monumental antiquities in the United States, New Spain, and South America, in their style and character present indications of having proceeded from branches of the same human family.

II. That these nations were a rich, populous, civilized and agricultural people; constructed extensive cities, roads, aqueducts, fortifications, and temples; were skilled in the arts of pottery, metallurgy, and sculpture; had attained an accurate knowledge of the science of astronomy; were possessed of a national religion, subjected to the salutary control of a definite system of laws, and were associated under regular forms of government. . . .

IV. That two distinct ages may be pointed out in the history of the civilized nations--the first and most ancient, subsisting for a long and indeterminate period in unbroken tranquillity, and marked towards its close by the signs of social decadence; the Second, distinguished by national changes, the inroads of barbarous or semi-civilized tribes, the extinction or subjugation of the old and the foundation of new and more extensive empires." (430-431)

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Native American history and religion; destruction of an ancient people
Author: Samuel R. Brown
Title of Book: The First American Frontier: The Western Gazeteer (originally published as The Western Gazeteer)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York (originally Auburn, NY)
Publisher: Arno Press (originally H. C. Southwick)
Date of Publication: 1971 (originally 1817)
Library Location: HBLL F 353 .B87 1971
Nature of Source: Originally published in 1817, the Gazeteer provided practical and geographical information on the American frontier (Alabama, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Mississippi, and Ohio). The Manchester Library, a lending library located within five miles of the Smith home, had a copy.

Comment: Brown's description of each state included a section on "antiquities;" he suggested that the ruins were the work of a more advanced civilization than the contemporary American Indians. He also spoke of a battle of extermination somewhat similar in principle to the last battle of the Jaredites, and recorded evidences of human sacrifice and mumification among the ancient Indians.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): After describing several Indian mounds in Indiana: "In the progress of our researches, we obtained ample testimony, that these masses of earth were formed by a savage people. Yet, doubtless possessing a greater degree of civilization than the present race of Indians." Brown also discerned evidence of human sacrifice: "From the quantity of ashes and bones, and the appearance of the earth underneath, it is evident that large fires must have been kept burning for several days previous to commencing the mound, and that a considerable number of human victims must have been sacrifice, by burning, on the spot! Prisoners of war were no doubt selected for this horrid purpose. Perhaps the custom of the age rendered it a signal honor, for the chieftains and most active warriors to be interred, by way of triumph, on the ashes of their enemies, whom they had vanquished in war. If this was not the case, the mystery can only be solved by supposing that the fanaticism of the priests and prophets excited their bespotted followers to voluntary self-devotion." (57-58)

A battle of extermination, somewhat reminiscent of the last Jaredite battle: "The French have a tradition, that an exterminating battle was fought in the beginning of the last century, on the ground where fort Harrison now stands, between the Indians living on the Mississippi, and those of the Wabash. The bone of contention was the lands lying between those rivers, which both parties claimed. There were about 1000 warriors on each side. The condition of the fight was, that the victor should possess the lands in dispute. The grandeur of the prize was peculiarly calculated to inflame the ardor of savage minds. The contest commenced about sunrise. Both parties fought desperately. The Wabash warriors came off conquerors, having seven men left alive at sunset, and their adversaries but five. The mounds are still to be seen where it is said the slain were buried." (69)

Mummies in Kentucky: "Travellers assert that several hundred mummies were discovered near Lexington in a cave, but which have been wholly despoiled by the first settlers. Dr. Cutler, who has accurately examined the trees on some old forts near the mouth of Kentucky river, thinks from their appearances that they are the second growth, and the fortifications must have been built upwards of one thousand years. One fact is also clear; they must have been the efforts of a people acquainted with some science, and capable of infinite labor; and it is difficult to conceive how they could be constructed without the use of iron tools and the instruments we are compelled to employ in works of much less magnitude and character." (108-9)

Length of Relevant Material: 4
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Native Americans as Israel
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Lost Tribes of Israel"
Title of Periodical: The Telescope
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher:
Date of Publication: January 14, 1824
Library Location: HBLL Microfilm 051 B #1254
Nature of Source: A non-sectarian Christian newspaper, published between 1824 and 1830, which often denounced priestcraft and the power of the clergy and advocated a return to a simpler Christianity.
Comment: The paper contains a short report of a speech given by Mordecai Manuel Noah (1785-1851), a Jewish leader, at Buffalo, in which he argued that Native Americans were descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes. Noah argued that certain features of Native American culture--everything from their tribal system of government to their burial practices--reflected Israelite customs. He also compared Native American holy places to the "holy of holies" of the ancient Jewish temple.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "Lost Tribes of Israel--In Mr. Noah's late address at Buffalo, a new and very curious hypothesis started concerning the origin of the American Aborigines. He asserts that they are the descendants of the Israelites, who were carried into captivity by Psalmanazar, king of Assyria, in the reign of Hezekiah, king of Judah. It has been supposed that they were spread over the East, and lost their national character by intermarriage with other nations. Mr. Noah, however, thinks they bent their course in a north-east direction, and finally reached the American continent. This opinion is founded in some resemblances between the Indians and the Jews, in appearance, habits, and religion. The Indians worship one Supreme Being; they are divided into tribes, having a chief and distinctive symbols, some of which are said to be named after the figures of the Cherubim, that were carried on the four principal standards of Israel; they consider themselves as the beloved people of God; they compute time after the manner of the Hebrews; they have their prophets, high priests and holy of holies, which none may approach but the High Priest; they have their cities of refuge, sacrifices, fasts, abstain from unclean things; and their marriages, divorces, punishment of adultery, burial of the dead, are said to bear a striking analogy to the customs of the Jews; and their features and language are Hebrew."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Native Americans as Israel
Author: Josiah Priest
Title of Book: American Antiquities and Discoveries in the West: Being an Exhibition of the Evidence that an Ancient Population of Partially Civilized Nations Differing Entirely From Those of the Present Indians Peopled America Many Centuries Before its Discovery by Columbus, and Inquiries into their Origin, with a Copious Description of Many of their Stupendous Works, Now in Ruins, With Conjectures Concerning What May Have Become of Them
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Hoffman and White
Date of Publication: 1835
Library Location: E 61 .P93 1835
Nature of Source: First published in 1833, Priest's book reviewed various types of evidence, including archaeological, linguistic, and religious, to conclude that an ancient civilization distinct from the current Native Americans once inhabited America. A copy of a book entitled American Antiquities was donated to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute by Benjamin Winchester, but this could have referred to a book by Alexander Bradford (1841). In addition, the Manchester Library housed a copy of the 1833 edition.
Comment: Priest reviewed the evidence suggesting the Israelite origin of the Native Americans, relying heavily on Ethan Smith's View of the Hebrews for the position that the Indians were descendants of the Lost Ten Tribes and on writings by Constantine S. Rafinesque for the opposite position. Priest quoted extensively from both authors and refused to take a definitive stand himself, though he seemed to believe the Native Americans were quite possibly Israelites.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "This view by no mean invalidates the opinion that some tribes of the Indians of North America are descendants of the Israelites, because the Scythians, under this particular name, existed long before that branch of the family of Shem, called Israelites; who, after they had been carried away by Salmanasser, the Assyrian king, about 700 years B.C., went northward, as stated by Esdras (see his second book, thirteenth chapter, from verse 40 to verse 45, inclusive,) through a part of Independent Tartary. During this journey, which carried them among the Tartars, now so called, but were ancietly the Scythians, and probably became amalgamated with them. This was the more easily effected, on account of the agreement of complexion and common origin. If this may be supposed, we perceive at once, how the North Americans Indians are in possession of both Scythian and Jewish practices." (58) Priest then hypothesized that the Ten Tribes proceeded north through present-day Norway and then over a land-bridge to America.

"But although the opinion that the American Indians are the descendants of the lost Ten Tribes, is now a popular one, and generally believed, yet there are some who totally discard this opinion. And among such, as chief, is Professor Rafinesque... This gentleman is decidedly, and we may say severely, opposed to this doctrine, and alleges that the Ten Tribes were never lost, but are still in the countries of the east about the region of ancient Syria, in Asia. He ridicules all those authors who have attempted to find in the customs of the Indians, traits of the Jews, and stamps them with being egregiously ignorant of the origin of things pertaining to this subject. This is taking a high stand, indeed, and if he can maintain it, he has a right to the honor thereof. Upon this notion, he says, a new sect of religion has arisen, namely, the Mormonites, who pretend to have discovered a book with golden leaves, in which is the history of the American Jews, and their leader, Mormon, who came hither more than 2,000 years ago. This work is ridiculous enough, it is true; as the whole book of Mormon bears the stamp of folly, and is a poor attempt at an imitation of the Old Testament Scriptures, and is without connection, object, or aim; shewing every where language and phrases of too late construction to accord with the Asiatic manner of composition, which highly characterises the style of the Bible, and how can it be otherwise as it was written in Ontario county, New York." (75-76)

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: New Jerusalem, Heaven, Spirit world, Three degrees of glory, Afterlife, Opposition in all things
Author: Hannah Adams
Title of Book: A Dictionary of all Religions and Religious Denominations, Jewish, Heathen, Mahometan, and Christian, Ancient and Modern
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: Cummings and Hilliard
Nature of Source: Adams (1755-1831), a Massachusetts Congregationalist, first published her dictionary in 1784; it subsequently went through numerous American and British editions. She gave disproportionate attention to Christianity, but she also discussed some Asian and Muslim sects. (For more information on Adams and her dictionary, see Thomas A. Tweed, "Introduction," to a 1992 reprint of the dictionary.) The Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home, had a copy of this edition.

Comment: The entry on the New Jerusalem Church, the followers of Emanuel Swedenborg, highlights numerous similarities between the doctrines of Swedenborg and those of Joseph Smith: the theophany and continuing revelation of both, the emphasis on a New Jerusalem, the idea of three heavens, the notion of opposition in all things, the existence of a spirit world, and the idea of sociality in heaven. Differences highlighted in the entry include Swedenborg's denial of the atonement, Swedenborg's notion of correspondences, and the purpose of the spirit world.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "New Jerusalem Church, a society founded by Emanuel Swedenborg.

. . . All these, however, he considered of small importance, compared with the distinguished privilege of having, as he declared, his spiritual sight opened, to converse with spirits and angels in the spiritual world. He first began to receive his revelations in London. He asserts that on a certain night, a man appeared to him in the midst of a strong shining light, and said, 'I am God the Lord, the Creator and Redeemer; I have chosen thee to explain to men the interior and spiritual sense of the sacred writings. I will dictate to thee what thou oughtest to write.' He affirms that after this period, his spiritual sight was so opened, that he could see in the most clear and distinct manner, what passed in the spiritual world, and converse with angels and spirits in the same manner as with men . . .

Swedenborg called the principles which he delivered, 'The Heavenly Doctrines of the New Jerusalem;' for, according to his system, the New Jerusalem signifies the new church upon earth, which is now about to be established by the Lord, and which is particularly described, as to its glory and excellency, in Rev. xxi. and many other parts of the sacred word. The holy city, or New Jerusalem, he interprets as descriptive of a new dispensation of heavenly truth, breaking through, and dissipating the darkness, which at this day prevails on the earth. . .

1. That the sacred scripture contains three distinct senses, called celestial, spiritual, and natural; and that in each sense it is divine truth, accommodated respectively to the angels of the three heavens, and also to men on earth.

2. That there is a correspondence or analogy between all things in heaven and all things in man . . .

4. That redemption consisteth not in the vicarious sacrifice of the Redeemer, and an atonement to appease the divine wrath; but in a real subjugation of the powers of darkness. . .

6. That we are placed in this world, subject to the influences of two most opposite principles, of good from the Lord and his holy angels, of evil from hell or evil spirits. While we live in this world our spirits have their abode in the spiritual world, where we are kept in a kind of spiritual equilibrium by the continual action of those contrary powers . . .

7. That heaven and hell are not arbitrary appointments of God. Heaven is a state arising from the good affections of the heart, and a correspondence of the words and actions, grounded on sincere love to God and man . . .

8. That there is an intermediate state for departed souls, which is called the world of spirits; and that very few pass directly to either heaven or hell. This is a state of purification to the good; but to bad spirits it is a state of separation of all the extraneous good from the radical evil which constitutes the essence of their natures.

9. That throughout heaven, such as are of like dispositions and qualities are consociated into particular fellowships, and such as differ in these respects are separated; so that every society in heaven consists of similar members." (202-6)

Length of Relevant Material: 6
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Ordination
Author: Charles Buck
Title of Book: Theological Dictionary, Containing Definitions of all Religious Terms: A Comprehensive View of Every Article in the System of Divinity: An Impartial Account of All the Principal Denominations which have Subsisted in the Religious World, from the Birth of Christ to the Present Day: Together with an Accurate Statement of the Most Remarkable Transactions and Events Recorded in Ecclesiastical History
Title of Article: Ordination
Title of Periodical: Philadelphia
Publisher: W. W. Woodward
Date of Publication: 1818
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a Shaw 43475
Nature of Source: A good source on contemporary Protestant thought, Buck's dictionary went through numerous editions in England and America. Buck (1771-1815) claimed that his intent was not to "serve a party, to encourage bigotry, or strengthen prejudice, but 'for the service of Truth,'" and his dictionary appears to be fair. Early Latter-day Saints often used his theological dictionary (for example, see Lectures on Faith), and the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute housed a copy.
Comment: Buck discussed the differing opinions regarding the necessity of imposition of hands at the ordination of individuals to the ministry. He seemed to favor such an act, criticizing dissenters from the Church of England for their belief that the ritual was unnecessary.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "ORDINATION, the act of conferring holy orders, or by initiating a person into the priesthood by prayer and the laying on of hands. Among the Dissenters, ordination is the public setting apart of a minister to his work, or over the people whose call he has accepted. In the church of England ordination has always been esteemed the principal prerogative of bishops, and they still retain the function as a mark of their spiritual sovereignty in their diocese. Without ordination no person can receive any benefice, parsonage, vicarage, &c. A person must be twenty-three years of age, or near it, before he can be ordained deacon, or have any share in the ministry; and full twenty-four before he can be ordained priest, and by that means be permitted to administer the holy communion. A bishop, on the ordination of clergymen, is to examine them in the presence of the ministers, who, in the ordination of priests, but not of deacons, assist him at the imposition of hands; but this is only done as a mark of assent, not because it is thought necessary. (361)

"IMPOSITION OF HANDS, an ecclesiastical action by which a bishop lays his hand on the head of a person in ordination, confirmation, or in uttering a blessing. This practice is also frequently observed by the Dissenters at the ordination of their preachers;
when the ministers present place their hands on the head of him whom they are ordaining, while one of them prays for a blessing on him and on his future labours. They are not agreed, however, as to the propriety of this ceremony. Some suppose it to be confined to those who received extraordinary gifts in the primitive times; others think it ought to be retained, as it was an ancient practice used where no extraordinary gifts were conveyed Gen. xlviii. 14. Matt. xix. 15. They do not suppose it to be of such an important and essential nature, that the validity and usefulness of a man's future ministry depend upon it in any degree. Imposition of hands was a Jewish ceremony, introduced not by any divine authority, but by custom; it being the practice among those people, whenever they prayed to God for any person, to lay their hands on his head. Our Saviour observed the same custom, both when he conferred his blessing on children, and when he healed the sick, adding prayer to the ceremony. The apostles, likewise, laid hands on those upon whom they bestowed the Holy Ghost. The priests observed the same custom when any one was received in their body. And the Apostles themselves underwent the imposition of hands afresh every time they entered upon any new design. In the ancient church, imposition of hands was even practised on persons when they married, which custom the Abyssinians still observe." (216-17)

Length of Relevant Material: 4

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Plural marriage

Author: Charles Buck

Title of Book: Theological Dictionary, Containing Definitions of all Religious Terms: A Comprehensive View of Every Article in the System of Divinity: An Impartial Account of All the Principal Denominations which have Subsisted in the Religious World, from the Birth of Christ to the Present Day: Together with an Accurate Statement of the Most Remarkable Transactions and Events Recorded in Ecclesiastical History

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: W. W. Woodward
POLYGAMY, the state of having more wives than one at once. Though this article, (like some other we have inserted,) cannot be considered as strictly theological, yet, as it is a subject of importance to society, we shall here introduce it. The circumstances of the patriarchs living in polygamy, and their not being reproved for it, has given occasion for some modern writers to suppose that it is not unlawful; but it is answered that the equality in the number of males and females born into the world intimates the intention of God that one woman should be assigned to one man; for (says Mr. Paley) if to one man be allowed an exclusive right to five or more women, four or more men must be deprived of the exclusive possession of any; which could never be the order intended. . . . It seems also a significant indication of the Divine will, that he at first created only one woman to one man. Had God intended polygamy for the species, it is probable he would have begun with it. . . Polygamy not only violates the constitution of nature, and the apparent design of the Deity, but produces to the parties themselves, and to the public, the following bad effects: contests and jealousies among the wives of the same husband; distracted affections, or the loss of all affection in the husband himself; a voluptuousness in the rich which dissolves the vigour of their intellectual as well as active faculties, producing that indolence and imbecility, both of mind and body, which have long characterized the nations of the East; the abasement of one half of the human species, who, in countries where polygamy obtains, are degraded into instruments of physical pleasure to the other half; neglect of children; and the manifold and sometimes unnatural mischiefs which arise from the scarcity of women. To compensate for these evils, polygamy does not offer a single advantage. In the article of population, which it has been thought to promote, the community gain nothing . . . but whether permitted or not, it was certainly practised by the Jewish patriarchs both before that law and under it. The permission, if there were any, might be like that of divorce, 'for the hardness of their heart,' in condescension to their established indulgences, rather than from the general rectitude or propriety of the thing itself. . . .

Less polished and more luxurious nations have either not perceived the bad effects of polygamy, or, if they did perceive them, they who in such countries possessed the power of reforming the laws have been unwilling to resign their own gratifications. Polygamy is retained at this day among the Turks, and throughout every part of Asia in which Christianity is not professed. In Christian countries it is universally prohibited.
Sweden it is punished with death. In England, besides the nullity of the second marriage, it subjects the offender to transportation or imprisonment and branding for the first offence, and to capital punishment for the second. And whatever may be said in behalf of polygamy, when it is authorised by the law of the land, the marriage of the second wife, during the lifetime of the first, in countries where such a second marriage is void, must be ranked with the most dangerous and cruel of those frauds by which a woman is cheated out of her fortune, her person, and her happiness." (394-95)

Length of Relevant Material: 2
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Premortal existence
Author: Hannah Adams
Title of Book: A Dictionary of all Religions and Religious Denominations, Jewish, Heathen, Mahometan, and Christian, Ancient and Modern
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: Cummings and Hilliard
Date of Publication: 1817
Library Location: HBLL BL 31 .A3 1817
Nature of Source: Adams (1755-1831), a Massachusetts Congregationalist, first published her dictionary in 1784; it subsequently went through numerous American and British editions. She gave disproportionate attention to Christianity, but she also discussed some Asian and Muslim sects. (For more information on Adams and her dictionary, see Thomas A. Tweed, "Introduction," to a 1992 reprint of the dictionary.) The Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home, had a copy of this edition.
Comment: The dictionary contains two entries regarding premortal existence. The followers of Origen in the third century argued for a "pre-existent state of human souls;" contrary to LDS doctrine, they viewed mortality as a punishment for pre-mortal sins, not as an opportunity for progression. Origenists also believed that Christ was the God of the Old Testament, and that there would be an end to the punishment of the damned. In addition, the entry on "pre-existents" refers to others who argue for Christ's pre-existence (227-28).
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "ORIGENISTS, a denomination in the third century, who derived their opinions from Origen, a very learned presbyter of Alexandria, and a man of uncommon abilities, who interpreted the divine truths of religion according to the tenour of the Platonic philosophy. He pretended that all evils arise from adhering to the literal and external part of scripture; and that the true meaning of the sacred writers was to be sought in a mysterious and hidden sense.

The peculiar tenets ascribed to Origen, are the following:
1. A pre-existent state of human souls, prior to the Mosaic creation, and perhaps from eternity; which souls were clothed with ethereal bodies suited to their original dignity. See Platonists.

II. That souls were condemned to animate mortal bodies, in order to expiate faults they had committed in a pre-existent state; for no other supposition appeared to him sufficient to account for their residence in these gross material bodies.

III. That the soul of Christ was created before the beginning off the world, and united to the divine word in a state of pristine glory . . . It was this Messiah, who conversed with the patriarchs under a human form: it was he, who appeared to Moses upon the holy mount: it was he, who spoke to the prophets under a visible appearance: and it was he, who will at last come in triumph upon the clouds, to restore the universe to its primitive splendour and felicity. See Pre-existents.

IV. That at the resurrection mankind will be again clothed with ethereal bodies.

V. That after long periods of time, the damned shall be released from their torments, and restored to a new state of probation . . .

VI. That the earth after its conflagration shall become habitable again, and be the mansion of men and other animals, and that in eternal vicissitudes." (211-12)

Length of Relevant Material: 4

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

_______________________________________________________

Topics: Priestcraft

Author:

Title of Book: "Priestcraft. Ancient and Modern--Compared."

Title of Periodical: The Telescope

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher:

Date of Publication: October 8, 1825

Library Location: HBLL Microfilm 051 B #1254

Nature of Source: A non-sectarian Christian newspaper, published between 1824 and 1830, which often denounced priestcraft and the power of the clergy and advocated a return to a simpler Christianity.

Comment: The Telescope reprinted an article from the Berea entitled, "Priestcraft. Ancient and Modern--Compared." The article defined priestcraft as monetary gain through the use of priestly influence, similar to the Book of Mormon definitions in 2 Nephi 26:29 and Alma 1:16. Unlike the Book of Mormon, however, the article did not expand its definition of priestcraft to include engaging in the work of God to gain the "praise of the world" or "honor."

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "The sayings and doings of priests, and professors, which we find recorded in ecclesiastical history during the darkest times of the Church, have a striking sameness with those of our age. 'The people,' says the Abbe de Malby, in reference to the first, 'seem to have believe that avarice was the first attribute of the Divinity, and that the saints made a traffic of their influence and protection.' . . .

"In our own times, the collection that is made by 'Mite Societies,' and other combinations, from the mouth of labour--from widows, and orphans, and negro slaves, to go into the pockets of churchmen, is familiarly styled, 'The Lord's Treasury;' and the language held forth by the clergy to extort it, is not less extravagant, and impious, than that formerly used by the bishops of Noyon." (73-74) The article subsequently quotes three Presbyterian ministers, including Lyman Beecher, asking for monetary donations, as evidence of contemporary priestcraft.

Length of Relevant Material: 2 p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Priestcraft

Author: Henry Tuke

Title of Book: Memoirs of the Life of George Fox

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia

Publisher: Emmor Kimber

Date of Publication: 1815

Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a Shaw 36133

Nature of Source: Tuke's admiring biography of the seventeenth-century Quaker leader George Fox details his constant persecutions at the hands of the Anglican clergy. The Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home, had a copy.

Comment: Tuke recorded Fox's repudiation of the learning of the ministry; Fox's assertion that the professional clergy were motivated by "ambition and avarice," seems to resonate with Joseph Smith's views.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "Other subjects, connected with the spirituality of the gospel dispensation, were, about this time, presented to his understanding; particularly that human learning was not only insufficient, but unnecessary for making a minister of Christ; and that there was no extraordinary holiness in those places of religious worship, called churches, which were superstitiously regarded as 'dreadful places, holy ground and the temples of God.' The great importance which was then, and has since been attached to human learning, he justly considered to be a means of preventing the free ministry of the gospel of Christ. The maintenance of the priests, which was forced from the people, whether hearers or not, appeared, to his understanding, not only inconsistent with the nature of gospel ministry, and the direction of its Author, who said to his disciples, 'freely ye have received, freely give,' but he also considered it injurious to the cause of religion, by exciting in its ministers those feelings of ambition and avarice, by which their ministerial labours are often rendered fruitless, if not contemptible." (16)

Length of Relevant Material: 2

Hard Copy:
Nature of Source: Using Hebrews 5:4-6 as his scriptural text in an attempt to persuade the Puritan dissenters, Brett, an Anglican minister, argued that "all Christian Priests must derive their Call to the Priesthood by a Spiritual Generation or Succession from Christ and his Apostles." Joseph Bates donated a copy to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute.

Comment: Brett distinguished between the Legal Priesthood, or the lineal Priesthood of Aaron practiced in the Old Testament, and the Evangelical Priesthood established by Christ in the New Testament. He primarily argued that men must be properly ordained to receive the priesthood; special talents or an inward call from God are not sufficient, but ordination (dating back to the time of Christ) is necessary.

Excerpt (pages): "We have succeeded to them by a successive Ordination, which appears by the Scriptures to have been the Method which God appointed, for the perpetual continuance of the Christian Priesthood, and which the Apostles and their Successors practis'd: Wherefore if the Apostles had a sufficient legal Call to the Christian Priesthood, we must have it also, because we have derived our Priesthood from them, by a Spiritual Generation, as Aaron's Sons did from him by a natural Generation. So that our Priesthood is indisputable. But no Sect or Party of the Dissenters (not to mention many foreign Protestant Churches) can or do pretend to this undoubted Priesthood, derived from Christ and his Apostles, according to God's own Institution." (21)

"Christ and his Apostles as well as Aaron and his Sons, had all an outward Call to the Priesthood; And they who pretend to execute that Office by an Inward Call, confirmed by the Approbation of the People, without any Ordination by those who derive their Succession from Apostles, have such a Call to their Office, as is by no means warrantable by the Word of God. They are Usurpers of the Priesthood, and take that Honour to themselves, which no Man ought to take till he is called of God, according to the Method of Succession appointed in his Holy Word." (22)

Length of Relevant Material: 30 pp.

Hard Copy:
After his ascension, a church was formed and established according to the genuine operations of his divine Spirit. This was accomplished by the agency of the Holy Spirit, through the ministry of the apostles, and was a pattern of the true order of the church of Christ, and "a kind of first-fruits" of the Kingdom of Heaven upon earth. But that order was of short duration. By a declension of the true spirit of christianity it gradually fell away, until the spirit of Antichrist, through the influence of false teachers, under the christian name, gained the ascendancy, and began his dark and deplorable reign, which continued for the space of twelve hundred and sixty years.

During this long and gloomy period, "darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people:" so that there was not found upon earth a church which stood in the true order and power of the primitive church of Christ. For altho there were many bright and powerful witnesses of the truth, during the whole of that period, who testified against the growing corruptions of the times; yet in consequences of the tyrannical dominion assumed over the consciences of men, these witnesses were not suffered to build in the true order of the church of Christ. This dominion, which originated in the spirit of Antichrist, was strengthened and supported by the combination of the civil and ecclesiastical powers which were concentrated in their own established churches. Hence these churches became the churches of Antichrist, and under the name of Christ, assumed the authority of persecuting the true witnesses of God." (1)
Author: Morgan Edwards

Title of Book: Customs of Primitive Churches; or a set of Propositions Relative to the Name, Matterials [sic], Constitution, Power, Officers, Ordinances, Rites, Business, Worship, Discipline, Government &c. of a Church; to which are Added Their Proofs from Scripture; and Historical Narratives of the Manner in which Most of them Have Been Reduced to Practice

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: [Philadelphia]

Publisher:

Date of Publication: [1768]

Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64 Evans 10891

Nature of Source: Edwards (1722-1795), a Baptist minister, wrote a wide-ranging treatise on the practices of the primitive church which he advocated should be practiced by contemporary Baptists. Much of the book has the tone of a practical commentary on church regulations.

Comment: Edwards described numerous necessary rituals, including baptism, Lord's supper, imposition of hands, right hand of fellowship, love feast, washing of feet, kiss of charity, anointing the sick, collecting for the saints, fasts, and feasts (79). He argued that washing of feet had been divinely instituted of Christ for two distinct purposes (which are somewhat similar to early Latter-day Saint rationale): the inculcation of humility and the forgiveness of after-baptism sins. In addition, he described the rite of anointing the sick with oil.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "Washing feet is a rite of divine original and perpetual obligation. The ends of it are, to oblige christians to be beneficently condescending one to another; and to signify to them a cleaning from the sins they are liable to after baptism. The performer of the rite is any christian. The place is, at home. The time, once a year, at least. The attendants of the rite are, supper or love feast &c. The requisites are, water, bason, towel, and a form of words expressive of the ends of the rite.

1. That washing feet, considered as a christian rite, is of divine original [sic], appears from John xiii . . .

2. That it is of perpetual obligation appears (1) From the command which Christ grounds on his own example; and the blessedness he pronounceth to the observes John xiii. 15, 17. (2) From the practice of the first christians 1 Tim v. 17. (3) From the ends proposed by it, which always abide.

3. The ends of the rite are, (1) To inculcate to christians a beneficent humility, condescension and love and to condemn the contrary. So Christ explains the matter. John xiii. 10, 16. (2) To be a sign to the party washed of his cleansing from sin. It signifies a washing, without which we can have no part in Christ Jesus, v. 8, and a washing consequent upon some other of like signification viz, baptism. Act. xxiii. 16; baptism signifies a washing from sins committed before it. 2 Pet. 1, 9. Some of those sins may be repeated; or if they are not, there is no man that liveth and sinneth not; yet baptism is not to be repeated; opportunely therefore does this rite frequently come in to encourage hope of a cleansing from sins committed after baptism.

4. The performer of the rite is, any christian, even a female. 1 Tim v. 10.
5. For the time allotted for this rite we have no rule, except we take either example, or convenience for rule. If the former, we have the example of Christ; who celebrated it two daies [sic] before he suffered, compare Joh. xiii, 1. with Mat xxvi. 2. which day was the first of April, for he died the third. This rule will make it an annual thing only. But expediency requires it should be observed oftener, as the first christians most probably did. 1 Tim. v. 10." (93)

Anointing the Sick: "Anointing the sick is a rite of divine original and perpetual obligation. The end is, the recovery of the sick. The administrators are, ministers. The manner is, the sick to send for them; make confession to them; they to pray over him; anoint; and absolve him. The unction to be as universal as is seemly.

A citation of the following passage is a proof of the chief parts of the above proposition. We presume the oil was olive, because we read of none other. The german baptists anoint only the head, except one part of the body be specially afflicted, then they anoint both. We prefer a more universal unction." [Edwards then quotes James 5:14-16.]

Edwards described an example of an anointing, which included the following prayer by the minister: "We anoint thee with oil in the name of the Lord Jesus that thou mayest be healed! By that name be thou made whole every whit! He woundeth and he healeth! He flayeth and he maketh alive! In the name of the same Lord Jesus and by the power of the keys committed to us, we declare unto thee, being penitent, the remission of thy sin, and loosing from this bond. Even to Lord Jesus. Amen." [A second Elder then prayed that the anointing would work and the sick man be healed.] (94-95)

Length of Relevant Material: 3
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Prophets
Author: Hannah Adams
Title of Book: A Dictionary of all Religions and Religious Denominations, Jewish, Heathen, Mahometan, and Christian, Ancient and Modern
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: Cummings and Hilliard
Date of Publication: 1817
Library Location: HBLL BL 31 .A3 1817
Nature of Source: Adams (1755-1831), a Massachusetts Congregationalist, first published her dictionary in 1784; it subsequently went through numerous American and British editions. She gave disproportionate attention to Christianity, but she also discussed some Asian and Muslim sects. (For more information on Adams and her dictionary, see Thomas A. Tweed, "Introduction," to a 1992 reprint of the dictionary.) The Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home, had a copy of this edition.
Comment: The entry on "French Prophets," discusses a charismatic movement in late seventeenth-century France and England that perhaps helped define what people viewed as a prophet. Among other things, the French Prophets prophesied, saw visions, proclaimed repentance, emphasized the Millennium, railed against popery, claimed the gift of languages and healed by the laying on of hands.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "FRENCH PROPHETS, They first appeared in Dauphiny and Vivaraís. In the year 1688, five or six hundred protestants, of both sexes, gave themselves out to be prophets, and inspired of the Holy Ghost, and they soon amounted to many thousands. They had strange fits, which came upon them with tremblings and faintings, as in a swoon, which made them reel and stagger till they dropped. They beat themselves, fell on their backs, shut their eyes, and heaved their breasts, as in fits; and when they came out of these trances said, they saw the heavens open, the angels, paradise, and hell; and then began to prophesy.

The burden of their discourse was, Repent, amend your lives: the end of all things draweth nigh! The walls of their assemblies, and, when in the open air, the hills rebounded with their loud cries for mercy: and with imprecations against the priests, the church, and the pope, with predictions of the approaching fall of popery.

In the year 1706, three or four hundred of these prophets came over into England, and brought their prophetic spirit with them, which discovered itself by extacies [sic], agitations, and inspirations under them, as it had done in France. . .

The great thing they pretended by their spirit was, to give warning of the near approach of the kingdom of God, the happy times of the church, the millenium-state. . .

These prophets also pretended to the gift of languages, of discerning the secrets of the heart; the power of conferring the same spirit on others, and the gift of healing by the laying on of hands. To prove that they were really inspired by the Holy Ghost, they alleged the complete joy and satisfaction they experienced, the spirit of prayer which was poured forth upon them, and the answer of their prayers by the Most High." (84-85)

Length of Relevant Material: 2

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; Primitive Church

Author: Barton W. Stone

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The Lord's Supper"

Title of Periodical: Christian Messenger

Place of Publication:

Publisher:

Date of Publication: 1834

Library Location: HBLL Microfilm C4625. Also available online at http://www.mun.ca/rels/restmov/texts/bstone/stone7.html

Nature of Source: Stone was a preacher who became a New Testament primitivist and later aligned his followers with those of Alexander Campbell.
Comment: The article demonstrates the biblical literalism of many New Testament primitivists. Stone argues that the form of the Lord's Supper should be taken exactly from the New Testament, which meant that only one loaf of unleavened bread should be used in order to retain the proper symbolism.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "1. In the Lord's supper there should be but one loaf, to represent the Lord's body that suffered on the Cross; Two or more loaves destroy the very idea of the ordinance, as not representing the one body of Christ suffering and dying. The word artos is translated loaf in the text very properly; and this is the translation very commonly given by King James' translators. See Matt. 14, 17, 19 Mark. 6; 33, 44, 52, Luke 9, 13. Matt. 15. 24 36. 16, 19 Luke, 11, 5, John, 6, 8, Mark 8, 14 &c.

2ly. This one loaf should be unleavened. This was the very kind of bread first used by Christ when he instituted the supper; for he used the bread of the passover which, must, by law, be unleavened. As the passover was to be kept without leaven; and as Christ our passover is sacrificed for us, therefore, says Paul, let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice, and wickedness, but with unleavened sincerity and truth." 1 Cor. 5. 8.-Leaven is the scriptural emblem of sincerity and truth. How preposterous then, to have the one loaf, which is to represent the body of Christ, leavened, as if he were malicious and insincere! Let it be unleavened, to represent his benevolence, truth, and sincerity.

3rd. 'We the many, are one body; for we all participate of that one loaf.' None but christians who are united in the one body, are permitted to participate of the one loaf. They are joint partakers of the blood and body of Christ, and they alone; for they alone can keep the feast with unleavened sincerity and truth. Alas! for the world of professors, who, divide into factions, are quarreling at the feast, endeavoring to monopolise [sic] it to their several parties-and woe to those, who presume to keep it, not being in the one body!

4th. Why is it more important that a person be immersed, than sprinkled! Because the latter action does not represent the burial and resurrection of Jesus, and because it is not justified by scripture.-And why is it more important to have one unleavened loaf in the Lord's supper; than to have four or five loaves, or leavened bread? Because the latter do not represent the one body of the sincere, true, suffering Savior, and are not justified by the word of God. Let us cleave to the truth, and never substitute our opinions." (176-77)

Length of Relevant Material: 2
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Spirit and matter
Author: Hannah Adams
Title of Book: A Dictionary of all Religions and Religious Denominations, Jewish, Heathen, Mahometan, and Christian, Ancient and Modern
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Nature of Source: Adams (1755-1831), a Massachusetts Congregationalist, first published her dictionary in 1784; it subsequently went through numerous American and British editions. She gave disproportionate attention to Christianity, but she also discussed some Asian and Muslim sects. (For more information on Adams and her dictionary, see Thomas A. Tweed, "Introduction," to a 1992 reprint of the dictionary.) The Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home, had a copy of this edition.

Comment: The dictionary contains an entry on "Materialists," a group of Christian philosophers who denied the existence of spirit, proclaiming that everything, including the soul of man, is material. Some of the materialists also seemed to deny ex nihilo creation.

Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "MATERIALISTS, or Physical Necessarians, certain philosophers in the christian church, who admitting the maxim, Ex nihilo nihil fit (from nothing can arise nothing) had recourse to a supposed internal matter, as a kind of substratum for the creation of material beings. In modern language, Materialists are those who, denying the existence of spirit, conceive the soul of man to be material; or that thought is the result of corporeal organization. Of this class was the late Dr. Joseph Priestley, who considers man as consisting only of matter, disposed in a certain manner." (169)

Length of Relevant Material: 4

Topics: Spiritual Gifts
Author: Matthew Mead
Title of Book: The Almost Christian Discovered: Or, the False Professor Tried and Cast

Comment: Mead believed that spiritual gifts did not necessarily indicate that one was a true Christian; indeed, he emphasized that spiritual gifts could often be used by false Christians. Grace, not spiritual gifts, demonstrated that someone was a true believer.
Gifts are from a common work of the spirit, now a man may partake of all the common gifts of the spirit, and yet be a reprobate; for therefore they are called common, because they are indifferently dispensed by the spirit to good and bad; to them that are believers, and to them that are not.

They that have grace, have gifts; and they that have no grace, may have the same gifts; for the spirit works in both; nay in this sense, he that hath no grace, may be under a greater work of the spirit (quod hoc) as to this thing, than he that hath most grace; a graceless professor may have greater gifts than the most holy believer; he may out-pray and out-preach and out-do them; but they in sincerity and integrity out-go him." (41)

"It is beyond the power of the greatest gifts to change the heart; a man may preach like an apostle, pray like an angel, and yet may have the heart of a devil. It is grace only that can change the heart; the greatest gifts cannot change it, but the least grace can; gifts may make a man a scholar, but grace makes a man a believer.

Now if gifts cannot change the heart, then a man may have the greatest gifts, and yet be but almost a christian.

Many have gone loaded with gifts to hell." (43)
26 And at the death of Methuselah, Noah took them and brought them to the ark, and they were with him until he went out of the ark.
27 And in their going out, Ham stole those garments from Noah his father, and he took them and hid them from his brothers.
28 And when Ham begat his first born Cush, he gave him the garments in secret, and they were with Cush many days.
29 And Cush also concealed them from his sons and brothers, and when Cush had begotten Nimrod, he gave him those garments through his love for him, and Nimrod grew up, and when he was twenty years old he put on those garments." (14-15)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Unpardonable sin
Author: Matthew Mead
Title of Book: The Almost Christian Discovered: Or, the False Professor Tried and Cast
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Poughkeepsie, NY
Publisher: Paraclete Potter
Date of Publication: 1815
Library Location: HBLL Microfiche 080 Sh64a 35235
Nature of Source: A compilation of a series of sermons given by Mead (1603?-1699) in London in 1661. Mead emphasized that many who professed to be Christians were merely "almost Christians," as they lacked the essential internal changes and the grace of God. A copy was at the Manchester Library, a lending library within five miles of the Smith home. The 1815 printing was the first American edition.
Comment: Mead discussed the "unpardonable sin," a phrase found in the Book of Mormon, but not the Bible, though clearly the concept is biblical (Matthew 12:31, Jacob 7:19, Alma 39:6). Mead stated that a man must have a portion of the Holy Ghost in order to sin against it, though his standard fails short of that advocated by Joseph Smith in the King Follett discourse, namely that a man must have knowledge analogous to seeing the sun shine and denying its existence.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): "A man may have the Spirit, and yet sin that unpardonable sin; He may have the Holy Ghost, and yet sin the sin against the Holy Ghost; nay, no man can sin this sin against it, but he that hath some degree of it.

The true believer hath so much of the Spirit, such a work of it in him, that he cannot sin that sin: 'He that is born of God sins not;' to wit, 'that sin unto death,' for that is meant. The carnal professing sinner, he cannot sin that sin, because he is carnal and sensual, having not the Spirit. A man must have some measure of the Spirit that sins this so hath the hypocrite; he is said to be partaker of the Holy Ghost, and he only is capable of sinning the sin against the Holy Ghost.

Now then, if a man may have the Spirit transiently only, not abidingly; if a man may have the Spirit, and yet not be born of the Spirit; if he may have the Spirit only as a Spirit of bondage; if a man may have the Spirit working in him, and yet it may be resisted by him; if a man may have the Spirit, and yet sin that unpardonable sin against it; then surely a man may have the Spirit of God, and yet he be but almost a christian." (104-5)

Length of Relevant Material: 2
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: visions
Author:
Title of Book: A Summary View of the Millennial Church, or United Society of Believers, (Commonly Called Shakers)
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Packard & Van Benthuyysen
Date of Publication: 1823
Library Location: HBLL Microfilm B No. 149 No. 21
Nature of Source: A Shaker apologetic work, primarily written to answer negative charges made by other authors. The book reviews the history of the Shakers and then expounds Shaker doctrine.
Comment: The authors describe the visionary experiences of Ann Lee. Similar to Joseph Smith, her visionary experience occurred following a period of "travail and tribulation," though hers was apparently of much longer duration; she saw Jesus Christ "in his glory"; and she experienced intense persecution after her experience, though she expressed the belief, like Joseph, that her enemies "could not kill me, because my work was not done" (11). Differences from Joseph's vision include her physical pains before the vision, which included sweating blood; a much longer period of prayer before the vision; and the message she received, which focused on human depravity.
Researcher: Matt Grow
Excerpt (pages): Vision of Ann Lee, in her own words: "Soon after I set out to travail in the way of God, I labored nights in the works of God. Sometimes I labored all night, continually crying to God for my own redemption; sometimes I went to bed and slept; but in the morning I could not feel that sense of the work of God which I did before I slept. This brought me into great tribulation. Then I cried to God, and promised him, that if he would give me the same sense that I had before I slept, I would labor all night. This I did many nights; and in the day time I put my hands to work and my heart to God; and when I felt weary and need of rest, I laboured for the power of God, and the refreshing operations of the power of God would release me, so that I would feel able to go to my work again.
"Many times when I was about my work, I felt my soul overwhelmed with sorrow; and I used to work as long as I could keep it concealed, and then run to get out of sight, lest some one should pity me with that pity which God did not. In my travail and tribulation, my sufferings were so great, that my flesh consumed upon my bones, and bloody sweat pressed through the pores of my skin, and I became as helpless as an infant. And when I was brought through, and born into the spiritual kingdom, I was like an infant just born into the world. They see colors and objects; but they know not what they see; and so it was with me when I was born into the spiritual world. But before I was twenty-four hours old, I saw, and I knew what I saw."

The authors described her later visions: "In the midst of her sufferings and earnest cries to God, her soul was filled with divine light, and the mysteries of the spiritual world were brought clearly to her understanding. She saw the Lord Jesus Christ in his glory, who revealed to her the great object of her prayers, and fully satisfied the desires of her soul. The most astonishing visions and divine manifestations were presented to her view in so clear and striking a manner, that the whole spiritual world seemed displayed before her. In these extraordinary manifestations, she had a full and clear view of the mystery of iniquity, of the root and foundation of human depravity, and of the very act of transgression, committed by the first man and woman, in the garden of Eden." (7-9)

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pp.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Washings (Washing of feet)
Author: Iveson L. Brookes
Title of Book: A Discourse, Investigating the Doctrine of Washing the Saints Feet, Delivered at Monticello
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Macon, GA
Publisher: Rose & Slade
Date of Publication: 1830
Library Location: HBLL Special Collections 204 P19s #25 Rare Book
Nature of Source: A sermon preached at Monticello, Georgia by a Baptist preacher who described the "contention, in some instances unpleasant, among the Baptists in Georgia," over the doctrine of washing of feet as reason for his sermon (1).
Comment: Brookes reviews the scriptural setting for the washing of the disciples' feet and concludes that it did not take place immediately preceding the Last Supper, but during the preceding week "at a common evening repast in Bethany." Furthermore, he asserts that Christ washed the apostles' feet to demonstrate humility and perform a necessary task; physical cleansing, not spiritual purity, was the aim. Brookes states that contemporary Christians can engage in foot washing, but only in private homes and as an act of service, particularly to traveling ministers and missionaries, not as a religious ordinance. Practiced as an ordinance, foot washing diminishes the importance of the true ordinances, baptism and communion; creates divisions within the church; "makes feeling the test of religious truth"; and becomes an act of outward, public display rather than inward piety.

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages): "Those who place the highest estimate upon the act of Jesus, in washing his disciples' feet, generally assume the position that the supper at which the transaction occurred, was the sacrament of the communion. They thus connect that act of Christ with his administration of that most sacred institution, and probably attach, unconsciously, equal, if not paramount sanctity to it. On the other hand, the greater portion of the Baptist denomination, and the entire mass of other orthodox sects look upon the practice of washing the saints' feet, as having been a private duty enjoined upon the primitive disciples, but not to be considered obligatory upon Christians in the present day." (3)

"And as the act which Jesus performed for the disciples, and enjoined on them to perform for one another, was needed, so under some of the most prominent of similar circumstances in connexion with the same act being needed, let Christians in the present day perform it for one another. As when ministers of the gospel are travelling together on their great Master's business, and especially in the diligent discharge of missionary duties, whenever it may become necessary to their cleanliness and comfort to have their feet bathed, let them on retiring to rest, instead of each washing his own, wash one another's feet; and when brethren meet together for the purpose of transacting business for the promotion of the Lord's cause, particularly at the sessions of missionary and benevolent associations, after having gotten thro' the fatigues of the day, and retired to some friend's house to spend the night, as Jesus and his disciples did, after supper, let as many as wish their feet washed, mutually join and wash one another's feet. . . And if the pious sisters, who are generally most prompt in the discharge of religious duties would desire to have some privilege in the imitation of their blessed Master on this subject, let them whenever they meet together to transact business for their Redeemer, under circumstances which make it necessary for their feet to be washed, cordially unite in washing each other's feet." (11-12)

"Another serious evil resulting from this erroneous view of feet washing is, that it makes feeling the test of religious truth.

"It is quite common to hear the advocates of this practice as performed among us appeal to the ecstatic excitement produced by it during its performance as being indisputable evidence of its divine authority and important usefulness. Many even boast that the effect generally seen amongst the brethren in the act of washing one another's feet, is greater than is produced by the performance of any religious ordinance. . .

"Whereas, the testimony of God's word must always be the criterion by which religious duty is to be decided and not the effervescence of human feeling which is most certain to be wrong." (15)

"But modern feet washers, who profess to perform that act in obedience to the command of Christ, and in imitation of his example, choose not a private house and an evening hour to wash feet, when the act is needed, but they select the house of worship, and the most public occasions to wash feet which have previously been well cleansed. We are willing to risk the decision on this point with the candid part of the advocates for this practice, to say whether it does or does not greatly resemble that leaven of the scribes and of Pharisees, against which the Saviour particularly cautioned his disciples to be carefully guarded." (16)

Length of Relevant Material: 16 pp.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Word of Wisdom

Author:

Title of Book: Sixth Report of the American Temperance Society

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Boston. Also published in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, D.C., and Cincinnati.

Publisher: Seth Bliss et al.

Date of Publication: 1833

Library Location: HBLL Special Collections HV 5287 .A43x Americana

Nature of Source: The annual report of the American Temperance Society, 112 pages, contains several articles and speeches condemning the vices associated with alcohol.

Comment: The report included a resolution calling for meetings of local temperance societies on February 26, 1833 (the day before the revelation on the Word of Wisdom), which emphasized that local organizations should encourage others through "sound argument and kind persuasion" to voluntarily abstain from alcohol (6). The article also paraphrases Isaiah 40:31, which is included in D&C 89:20: "they run and are not weary, they walk and are not faint."

Researcher: Matt Grow

Excerpt (pages):

"In the last two Reports of this Society, the following truths were established, viz. ardent spirits, as a drink, is not needful, or useful. It is a poison, which injures the body and the soul. It deranges healthy action, and disturbs the functions of life. It blinds the understanding, sears the conscience, pollutes the affections, and hardens the heart. It leads men into temptation, and gives to evil peculiar power over their minds. It impairs and often destroys reason. It tends to bring those who use it to a premature grave; and to usher all who understand, or have the means of understanding its nature and effects, and yet continue to drink it, or to furnish it to be drunk by others, into a miserable eternity."

"The weapon of their warfare being not carnal, and operating, not by force, but by light and love, on the conscience, and the heart, are mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds. Trusting in him, they mount up on wings as eagles, they run and are not weary, they walk and are not faint. By effort they renew their strength and they move on with increasing energy from conquering to conquer. And if faithful, their efforts will not cease or be diminished till the last vestige of open iniquity shall have vanished from the globe." (5)

Length of Relevant Material: 112 pages.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
Comment: Campbell offers a number of ways that help the "divine government" advance in the world. Among other things, he identifies the means of natural elements, animals and insects, "concurrence of circumstance, the agency of man, and the ministry of angels. Here he discusses the way accomplishes his purposes through the agency of righteous and evil men.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "Good men, although they have sometimes been made to execute divine judgments, are more frequently made instruments to effect the kind and benevolent purposes of Heaven. They are taught to be "a peculiar people, zealous of good works," and are induced to engage in many undertakings which result in the most beneficial consequences to society. By them it is that the knowledge of the true God is spread abroad through all lands, and the gospel of salvation presented to those who are dead in trespasses and sins. . . .--And by means of Lucifer, the dark ages of bigotry and superstition are given place to the light of divine truth, and the improvements of science and civilization. Wicked men, on the other hand, are usually the instruments of vengeance. It is their delight to do evil; and though God never prompts them to evil, yet when they have determined upon any bad action, it concerns him either to hinder it, or direct where the stroke shall fall, and perhaps cause it, as we have already remarked, to descend upon the wicked person himself. In this way one wicked person is permitted to punish another, and sometimes even to inflict chatisement upon children of God who are disobedient" (445-46).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Author: Chloe Willey
Title of Book: A Short Account of the Life and Remarkable View
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: John C. Totten
Date of Publication: 1810
Nature of Source: In a short pamphlet, Willey relates significant life and religious experiences, several of which center on the Millennium and the Last Days.
Comment: Willey's visionary experiences parallel Mormon doctrine, history, and scripture in some striking ways. See, for instance, 1 Nephi 8 and 11.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "I soon perceived at my left hand a black river, which ran back (not the way we were going.) I asked my guide, what river that was. He said, Pride. On the other side of this river I observed a great city, which was filled with people, who appeared to be in the greatest confusion, and running in every direction; many of them came from the city on to this river, which was very rapid. I asked my guide, what was the name of that city. He said, it was the city of destruction, and that it represented this world.--I now had a most striking sense of the vanity of pride. The vast multitudes, which were drowned in this river (the representation of Pride) fully evinced its destructive consequences. Some of those, whom I beheld, were clothed in the most gorgeous apparel, which only served to hasten their destruction. I thought for myself that I must ever abhor this road to misery" (11-12).
Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Apostles
Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Apostles"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: May 2, 1832
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell [d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the development, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."
Comment: Campbell answers a query about references to apostles in the New Testament, specifically passages which speak of Sylvanus and Paul as Timotheus as apostles (Thess. 2:6). Campbell explains that there are three types of apostles in the Christian Church.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "There are three orders of Apostles spoken of in the New Testament.
1st. Jesus Christ is called the Apostle of God, or the Apostle of the christian religion, (Heb. iii.3.) in the same sense as Moses was the Apostle of the Jews' religion. . . . Of this order there were but two Apostles--Moses and Jesus; Apostles of God, persons called and sent by God, with authority to call, organize, and preside over his family.  The second order are the Apostles of Jesus Christ, called and sent by and from him, with authority to call, organize, and preside over his family, or that family which God has given him. Hence the christian assembly is the congregation of God as well as the congregation of the Lord Jesus Christ.  Such were the twelve Apostles of the Lamb.  The third order are the Apostles of the congregations.  These were persons chosen and sent by the congregations on special errands, and therefore are called in the original apostolai ecclesiou, (Apostles of the churches.) 2 Cor. viii. 23.  Paul himself surnames them the Apostles of the churches, and calls Epaphroditus the Apostle of the Philippians ch. ii.25.
The three orders in contradistinction are appropriately styled the Apostles of God, the Apostles of Jesus Christ, and Apostles of the congregations" (196).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):

---

Topics: Baptismal covenant
Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Baptismal Vow"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 4, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice.  It shall have for its object the development, and introduction of that political and religious order called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian Scriptures.
Comment: Campbell posits the implied vow made at the time of baptism by immersion.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "Thou [Jesus] camest to seek and save the lost, and thou hast invited sinners to come to thee.  I am a sinner, Lord; and as such, I now present myself before thee.  Hadst thou not invited and commanded me to come to thee, I dared not to have approached thee, vile and polluted as I am.  A covenant which thou hast stipulated I approve. . . . Into thy family I wish to come, and amongst thy sons and daughters I long to be extolled.  I have heard that thou, the Faithful and True Witness, hast commanded" immersion into thy death, as a pledge, and as the means of a sinner's forgiveness and adoption into thy family. Therefore, Lord, at thy command I come, relying upon thy word, and am willing to make thee my Prophet, my Priest, and my King, by a covenant never to be forgotten. I do accede to thy own gracious constitution in all its provisions, and do renounce every other prophet, priest, and king, but thee alone. I vow to thee, that whither thou goest, or requirest me to go, I will follow; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. . . . I take thee, Lord, upon thy own word; receive me now upon this my vow; and as I give myself up to thee in the obedience of faith, so may I live to thee while life endures. 'Now may the God of peace, who brought back from the dead my Lord Jesus the great Shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting institution, make me fit for every good work to do his will, producing in me what is acceptable in his sight, through Jesus Christ--to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen.'

The above in in extenso, or in detail, what in implied in putting christian immersion.

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Bible, revelation

Library Source: BX 7301.M5x

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "The Bible"

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger--Extra

Place of Publication: Bethany, VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Aug. 6, 1832

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the development, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: In a series of questions and answers on various subjects, Campbell summarizes views previously expounded in the pages of The Millennial Harbinger. His object, he explains, is not to enter into lengthy discussions but to provide succinct responses to common questions. Campbell rather boldly dismisses the possibility of error in his doctrines, as he appeals to "reason, common sense, and the holy Scriptures. Thus "[t]he answers here given are the only answers which . . . can be given."

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages):

Q. 10. But can God speak?

A. Most certainly, if any of his creatures can speak. To say that God could not speak to man, or that he never did speak to him, is, of all propositions, the most irreconcilable to all the principles from which we reason in reference to our rank and standing in the universe, and the character of the moral Governor of the world. . .
Q. 12. In what language has God spoken?
A. In the language of man--not in the language of angels.
Q. 13. Was it his design to be understood in our language?
A. Most assuredly it was his design to communicate ideas to man: and as there is no way of teaching things unknown but by things known, and of speaking intelligibly to man but by using his own words; so God, in speaking to man, has not only clothed his ideas in human speech, but has used our words in their common acceptation of them.
Q. 14. Could any thing in our language of man be esteemed a revelation from God, if the words chosen by God were not used in their common signification?
A. No: for if God annexed to our words, or the speech which he had given to man, a secret meaning, a private and peculiar sense, such a communication would rather delude and confound, than illuminate the human understanding.
Q. 15. If, then, God speaks in human language, must not his communications be submitted to the same rules of interpretation as all other verbal communications?
A. Yes: for were it otherwise, who could understand them? To what other laws of interpretation could they be submitted? (338-9)

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Bishop, evangelists, deacons, missionary work, Christian Church
Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Order"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 1835
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."
Comment: Campbell, in a lengthy article about the meanings of the word "order" as it pertains to the church and the gospel, stresses the vital role of evangelists in promulgating the Christian message. As he notes, the Christian religion is one that must be carried throughout the world, and evangelists did so in the ancient. This precedent demands the same pattern today.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "A community with its bishops and deacons at home, and its evangelists abroad, every one faithfully at his post, performing his duties to the Lord and to the people, fully displayed the active and salutary spirit of the Christian institution. . . . Is not, let me ask, (and it is all that our present subject demands,) the following inference clearly deduced from our premises:--That the primitive church did out and patronize messengers on all errands connected with the peace and prosperity of all the churches, and with the conversion of the world? If this be answered in the affirmative, are we not under obligation to go and do likewise, as exigencies and occasions require?" (520, 22).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: bishops, church offices
Library Source: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Bishops"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Sept. 6, 1830
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: Campbell criticizes the misuse and overuse of both secular and religious titles, and discusses the merits and disadvantages of using the title of "bishop" within the Christian church. He disdains the use of any titles as they are applied personally.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "To lower the haughty pretensions of those who claim to themselves a politically patented episcopacy, as well as to put out of countenance the arrogant title of Reverend and to call things by their proper names, we recommended the term "bishop" as the common scriptural designation of all persons having the oversight of a christian community. The Presbyterians and Baptists had long ago assumed in their creeds this name or title as a proper designation of the person or persons who had the oversight of a congregation; but from a peculiar fastidiousness of taste permitted the Methodists and Episcopalians to appropriate it to an officer which the Lord Jesus never instituted. In our tongue the term overseer is that corresponding to the obsolete Saxon piscop, or bishop, and the Greek episcopus. But we discover the same abuse of the term is likely to prevail among us, as that which we opposed to others, viz. the application of it in an appropriated sense to persons not sustaining the office of a christian overseer in a christian congregation... . A congregation of christians may have, and, as soon as it can, ought to have, its presidents and servants, or overseers and public servants, in the common version called bishops anddeacons; but that we should call every leader, preacher, or teacher a president or overseer, is to abuse the scripture style and to flatter the vanity of those who love fine titles as young Misses love fine clothes... . Some of our acquaintance would, methinks, look very much abashed to be saluted in the great day with the title Reverend, Elder, Bishop, or Deacon, by him who will render to every man according to his works! And how the Doctors of Divinity will hang their heads in the presence of that Paul whom they have so often misquoted, and of that Saviour, whose command, "Be not called Rabbi," they have so often contemned; imagination cannot paint, nor ink and paper describe."

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Bishops, order, church discipline

Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Order"

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger

Place of Publication: Bethany, VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Oct. 1835

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the development, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: In a lengthy article, Campbell treats the multiple meanings and senses of the word "order." Here he treats the duties of the bishop: teaching, presiding, ruling, etc. He pays special attention to the role of the bishop in disciplining the members of his congregation.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "They have no legislative power, and therefore lawgiving is no function of theirs. . . 1. As they are required to be apt or fit to teach, it is their duty to teach 'the whole counsel of God.' . . . As to the manner of this teaching, they are to have the Scriptures read in the congregation, applied to all contingencies, and diligently examined and considered by all the disciples. They are to call forth all the gifts and talents of the congregation, and to give directions concerning reading, exhortation, and prayer. . . . They are to preside over all, to give directions to all, as far as public edification is concerned. . . . But no one is to read, speak, teach, or exhort in the congregation without a special call or leave of the bishop presiding for the day. . . . 2. They are "to rule well." . . . [which] has respect more immediately to the disorders which are incident to every earthly community--from which the church of Jesus Christ never has yet been fully exempt. The discipline of the church is as essential as its doctrine: for no church can be prosperous or happy, however zealous for the doctrine according to godliness, if there be in it lax discipline, or if transgressors of the law of Christ are suffered to pass with impunity" (504-505).
Q. 93. What is the church of Christ?
A. The congregation of saints on the earth and in heaven.
Q. 94. What is meant by a church of Christ?
A. An assembly of persons meeting statedly in one place; built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus himself the chief corner stone.
Q. 95. Who are the members of a church of Christ?
A. Those only who voluntarily and joyfully submit to him as lawgiver, prophet, priest, and king: who assume him as their Saviour, die to sin, are buried with him, and rise to walk in a new life.
Q. 96. What is the constitution of a christian congregation?
A. The New Constitution detailed by Paul, Hebrews, 8th chapter.
Q. 97. Are no other articles of confederation necessary?
A. None for a christian congregation. Jesus is king and lawgiver.
Q. 98. How are the articles of the christian constitution to be acceded to and adopted?
A. The articles of the christian constitution are all adopted by every individual, in his immersion into the death and resurrection of the Lord.
Q. 99. Are christians born into Christ's kingdom by being born of water and the Spirit?
A. Yes. Thus they become citizens of the kingdom of Jesus.
Q. 100. But does this make them members of every christian community.
A. Nn: their particular membership in any one community is an after act. Their being members in Jerusalem, Rome, or Corinth, depends upon their location, personal application, and reception.
Q. 101. Can any Christian congregation, by any order from the King, refuse to receive any citizens of his kingdom?
A. No: unless he act in a manner unworthy of a citizen.
Q. 102. But must he not always prove his citizenship before he can be received as a citizen?
A. The congregation which receives him, must have evidence that he is a citizen.
Q. 103. Of what nature is this evidence?
A. The community must either have seen him naturalized [baptized], or have testimony from such members of it has have seen him regenerated; but if he have not been born in that place, he must produce letters of recommendation, or written testimony of his naturalization and demeanor as a citizen, before he is worthy of the confidence of any community. (351-2).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Church discipline
Library Source: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "The Church"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger--Extra
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Aug. 6, 1832
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."
Comment: In a series of questions and answers on various subjects, Campbell summarizes views previously expounded in the pages of The Millennial Harbinger. His object, he explains, is not to enter into lengthy discussions but to provide succint responses to common questions. Campbell rather boldly dismisses the possibility of error in his doctrines, as he appeals to "reason, common sense, and the holy Scriptures. Thus
"[t]he answers here given are the only answers which . . . can be given."
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages):
Q. 115. What is meant by the discipline of a congregation?
A. The application of the laws of the Christian King to the behavior of the citizens.
Q. 116. Are there general laws from the King [Christ] for the exercise of discipline in the Christian assemblies?
A. There are general rules and special examples found in the apostolic epistles to the congregations; and Saviour himself for private offences propounded rules of universal acceptance, adapted to all ages and all conditions of men. But experience and prudence will, in reference to all specialities, guide in the application of these laws and precedents, for the preservation of the purity and unity of the congregation.

Q. 117. When the members of any community sin against one another, or commit offences of a private and personal character; and when they are not adjusted in private, but brought into the congregation, are they not to be managed in the public assembly as public misdemeanors or offences against the Christian profession.
A. Yes, so far as this:—that the congregation, or those appointed by the congregation to judge such grievances, must act upon good and valid testimony.

Q. 118. Are Christian congregations to have any matter decided by a committee?
A. Not ultimately. The whole congregation must finally act in all cases which come before it. But as the whole congregation could not in all cases be judges of many matters, they are to appoint what Paul calls "judges," or "secular sects of judicature," for the arbitrament or adjustment of such matters as could not be correctly examined by female and minors.

Q. 119. But are not the presidents of a congregation appointed, not only to preside in the meeting on the Lord's day, but also to see that the laws of the King be executed in reference to those who offend?
A. They are indeed called rulers, presidents, overseers and elders, in the New Testament; which terms, in the then current acceptation of them, implied as much as that they had in charge the discipline of the congregation, but not in such a sense as to preclude the necessity of all cases of discipline being ultimately decided by the whole community whose organs they are. (353)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Church discipline
Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Order"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 1835
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: Campbell, in a lengthy article that treats the meanings and usages of the word "order," outlines the proper procedure for church discipline as it pertains to public and private transgressions. In his opinion, private transgressions are to be worked out privately. Public transgression--a transgression "that puts the congregation to shame"--should be brought before the congregation.

The role of the elders in the disciple process is stressed.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "To the actual discipline of the church, in its social and public capacity, belong only the offences which are committed against the whole community. Private trespasses between two or more individuals are not to be laid before the congregation until they become public offences. the commandments of the Saviour found on this subject in the 18th chapter of Matthew (and they are in accordance with our very best conceptions of propriety and expediency) go to prevent, if possible, private trespasses on the rights of individuals from becoming public offences. When these directions are faithfully regarded, it is but seldom that a private trespass comes before the congregation, or terminates in a public offence. By a public offence, we mean every transgression that puts the congregation to shame--every transgression which brings a reproach upon the Lord or his people. . . . When a church has ordained to itself elders, no case of discipline can be laid before the community but through its presbytery. It is the province of the eldership to prepare the case and to choose the time for its consideration, should it be one that requires the action of the whole church" ((515)

Length of Relevant Material: 6 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Common consent

Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Order"

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger

Place of Publication: Bethany, VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Oct. 1835

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: Campbell, in a lengthy article on the senses and meanings of the word "order," discusses the propriety of voting in the Church. He feels that in matters not pertaining to "faith, piety, or morality" a vote from the church is appropriate.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages):

"[Christians] are not to vote on questions of faith, piety, or morality. Truth is not to be settled by a vote, nor is any divine institution, respecting the worship or morality of the Christian church, to be decided by a majority. These are matters of revelation, of divine authority, and to be regulated by a "thus saith the Lord," and not by a thus saith the majority! But in all matters of expediency, and sometimes in questions of fact pertaining to cases of discipline, there is no other way of deciding but by vote of the brotherhood. There is no revelation that A, B, or C shall be chosen elders or deacons; that D, E, or F shall be sent on any special message; that the church shall meet in any given place at any given hour, or that this or that measure is to be adopted in reference to any particular duty arising out of the internal or external relations of the church. Such matters are to be decided by the vote of the whole community, or not at all. . . . Still, however, neither reason, nor experience, nor revelation itself suggests any other method of procedure in all questions of expediency respecting men or measures, than that the voice of the majority, when clearly and fully expressed, should be cordially and conscientiously acquiesced in by the minority" (511-13).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Deacons, priesthood offices
Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Order"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 1835
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: In a lengthy article, Campbell treats the multiple uses and senses of the word "order" as it pertains to the church and the gospel. In this excerpt, he outlines briefly the duties of a deacon within the church.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "The deacon, as the name imports, is the minister or servant of the congregation. He is the steward, the treasurer, the almoner of the church. . . . It was anciently the custom to commit to the deacon's care the Lord's table, the bishop's table, and the tables of the poor. From all that is said of their office in the Epistles, and of their qualifications, they must be regarded as were the deacons in the synagogues--the public servants of the church in all things pertaining to its internal and external relations--in all matters of temporal concern. There ought to be a plurality of deacons in every church. As keepers of the treasury of the church, it is most satisfactory to him that officiates to have a companion or companions in office; and on many occasions the duties are too oppressive for a single individual" (507).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Great and abominable church, apostasy, true church

Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Present Division of Christendom"

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger

Place of Publication: Bethany, VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Aug. 6, 1832

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: In a series of questions and answers, Campbell outlines what he sees as fundamental Christian doctrine. Here he discusses the division between normative Christianity and apostate Christianity. His understanding of the division is somewhat apocalyptic, i.e., he sees only two churches: Christian and apostate. However, Campbell asserts that some belong to neither, expanding simple apocalypticism as it existed in the early Mormon Church and in the Book of Mormon.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "Q. 161. How do you distinguish these prominent departments [of Christianity]?

A. There are those who take the scriptures alone for their faith and practice, believe the original gospel, and keep the original institutions; these are called the disciples of Christ, or Christians. There are those who stand off from the foundation, and who build upon human traditions and on the scriptures: these are the different sects which are called the Apostacy. And there are those who belong to neither, are mere spectators, and may be called the world" (360-61).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Infant baptism
Campbell answers a question about the origin of infant baptism (sprinkling). Campbell reasons that because no figure in the whole of the Bible ever practiced, or directed the practice of, infant sprinkling, it cannot be a divine practice. Furthermore, because the Lord "commanded it to be done," we should not.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "Q. 131. Do you call infant sprinkling a human institution, founded upon human opinion? A. What else can it be called! Inasmuch as there is no testimony that any prophet, priest, king, apostle or lawgiver, in the thirty-nine canonical books of the Old Testament, in the twenty-seven canonical books of the New, in the fourteen apocryphal books of the Old Testament, and in the twenty-five pieces of the New Testament--I say, not one instance, in all these, of any prophet, priest, king, apostle, seer, or religious teacher, either sprinkling, or causing to be sprinkling, an infant. As, then, we have no testimony that it is a divine institution, we can have no divine faith in it; and as we never saw it practised by any divine messenger, apostle, or prophet, we have no divine knowledge of it. It is certainly a human institution, and founded wholly upon human opinion" (356).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Jerusalem, New Jerusalem

Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x

Author: Editor

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Prophetic Iconisms.--No. II."

Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger

Place of Publication: Bethany, VA

Publisher:

Date of Publication: Oct. 1, 1832

Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: Campbell, in a series of definitions for prophetic, eschatological, and millennial terms in the Bible, offers an allegorical definition of Jerusalem as the Church of Christ. He also make brief mention of New Jerusalem.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "In symbolic or figurative language, the church of Jesus Christ--the Christian Economy. "Jerusalem which is above is free; the mother of us all." "The holy city" is contrasted with "the great city," the true church of Christ with the apostate church. Babylon and Jerusalem--the former represents every professing christian society which submits not wholly and unconditionally to Jesus as sole lawgiver, prophet, priest and king; the latter the society which unreservedly submits to him in all his official power and glory. Jerusalem, New, contrasted with the earthly and literal city, capital of Judea" (493).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________

Topics: Jews, restoration, role of the Gentiles, temple
Library Holding: 080 Sh64a no. 2345
Author: Benjamin Gorton
Title of Book: A Scriptural Account of the Millennium
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Troy, NY
Publisher: Moffitt and Lyon
Date of Publication: 1802
Nature of Source: In a small pamphlet, Gorton intersperses biblical passages relating to the Millennium with his own interpretation of the same.

Comment: In all respects, Gorton is a millenarian--he reads scripture literally, he forecasts the literal restoration of the Jews and the literal resurrection of the just, and expects the redemption of the earth.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "I believe also that the Jews, after their restoration to God's favour again, will be a people in whom he will particularly delight, and will prefer; and that all nations shall bow before them, as God's peculiar people; and that the Gentiles will bring their offerings unto the Lord at Jerusalem, from all nations and kingdoms, to assist in building the sanctuary, or house of God."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________
Comment: Campbell, in a series of definitions of prophetic, eschatological, and millennial symbolism, sees passages which mention mountain as referring to government or kingdom. He sees favorite Mormon prooftexts such as Daniel 2 (stone cut of the mountain) and Isaiah 2 (mountain of the Lord's House) as referring to the Lord's kingdom.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "A great and powerful government. "The Mountain of the Lord's House," the kingdom of the people of God: "In all my holy mountain," in all the kingdom of the Messiah. Babylon is called a mountain: Jer. li.25. . . . The stone cut out of the kingdoms of this world became a great mountain (kingdom) and filled the whole earth.

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Topics: Millennial conditions
Library Holding: 080 Sh64a no. 2345
Author: Benjamin Gorton
Title of Book: A Scriptural Account of the Millennium
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Troy, NY
Publisher: Moffitt and Lyon
Date of Publication: 1802
Nature of Source: In a small pamphlet, Gorton intersperses biblical passages relating to the Millennium with his own interpretation of the same.
Comment: In all respects, Gorton is a millenarian--he reads scripture literally, he forecasts the literal restoration of the Jews and the literal resurrection of the just, and expects the redemption of the earth.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "I verily believe, that at the time Christ shall come upon the earth, the curse will be taken off: that the earth will bring forth in its full strength, and that there will be no more venomous or voracious animals, or poisonous reptiles or insects; but all will be harmless on the face of the earth, and none to hurt or destroy in all God's holy mountain; and that man will be as free from sin during the Millennium, as Adam was before the fall, and have as immediate communion with God."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Date of Publication: 1828
Nature of Source: A popularizer, Priest herein presents common millennial doctrines. He disagrees strongly with literal readings of biblical passages, reading many millenarian prooftexts allegorically.
Comment: Priest introduces his postmillennial, allegorical treatise by responding to common millenarian doctrines related to Jerusalem, the gathering of the Jews, etc.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "[T]hat Christ will personally dwell on the earth with his saints, who are to remain after the first resurrection a thousand years, is not promised; therefore in that expectation [millenarians] were not correct" (v-vi).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Millennium, apostasy
Library Holding: W367
Author: Asa Wild
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Prognostication!!"
Title of Periodical: Wayne Sentinel
Place of Publication: Palmyra, NY
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 22, 1823
Nature of Source: Small-town newspaper of Palmyra, NY. It typically printed an eclectic mixture of political news, local happenings, and news items reprinted from other newspapers. Joseph Smith's family subscribed.
Comment: Asa Wild, a visionary hailing from Amsterdam, NY, reports a millenarian vision, claiming that God told him that the Millennium would begin in seven years, that destruction was imminent, and "greater and more glorious light is about to burst upon the world." He cites Revelation 14:6-7 as a passage soon to be fulfilled.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "[The Great Jehovah] also told me, that every denomination of professing christians had become extremely corrupt; many of which had never had any true faith at all; but are guided only by depraved reason, refusing the teaching of that Spirit which indited the scriptures, and which alone can teach us the true meaning of the same; even as the diamond alone can cut its fellow."
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Millennium, destruction, dispensations
Library Holding: W367
Author: Asa Wild
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Prognostication!!"
Title of Periodical: Wayne Sentinel
Place of Publication: Palmyra, NY
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 22, 1823
Nature of Source: Small-town newspaper of Palmyra, NY. It typically printed an eclectic mixture of political news, local happenings, and news items reprinted from other newspapers. Joseph Smith's family subscribed.
Comment: Asa Wild, a visionary hailing from Amsterdam, NY, reports a millenarian vision, claiming that God told him that the Millennium would begin in seven years, that destruction was imminent, and "greater and more glorious light is about to burst upon the world." He cites Revelation 14:6-7 as a passage soon to be fulfilled.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "[The Great Jehovah] told me that the Millenium state of the world is about to take place; that in seven years literally, there would scarce a sinner be found on earth: that the earth itself, as well as the souls and bodies of its inhabitants, should be redeemed, as before the fall, and become as the garden of Eden. He told me that all the most dreadful and terrible judgments spoken of in the blessed scriptures, were to be executed within that time; that more than two thirds of the inhabitants of the world would be destroyed by these judgments: some of which are the following--wars; massacres; famine; pestilence; earthquakes; civil, politic[a]l, and ecclesiastical commotions: and above all, various and dreadful judgments executed immediately by God, through the instrumentality of the Ministers of the Millenial dispensation."
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________

Topics: Millennium, Jews, dispensations
Library Holding: BT 890.p7
Author: Josiah Priest
Title of Book: A View of the Expected Christian Millennium
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Loomis' Press
Date of Publication: 1828
Nature of Source: A popularizer, Priest herein presents common millennial doctrines. He disagrees strongly with literal readings of biblical passages, reading many millenarian prooftexts allegorically.
Comment: Priest introduces his postmillennial, allegorical treatise by responding to common millenarian doctrines related to Jerusalem, the gathering of the Jews, etc.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "[T]he whole description given by Ezekiel [building of temple] should be understood as signifying the most glorious state of the Christian church over the inferior glory and darker dispensation of the Old Testament times" (vii).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Millennium, Jews, restoration
Library Holding: BT 890.p7
Author: Josiah Priest
Title of Book: A View of the Expected Christian Millennium
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Loomis' Press
Date of Publication: 1828
Nature of Source: A popularizer, Priest herein presents common millennial doctrines. He disagrees strongly with literal readings of biblical passages, reading many millenarian prooftexts allegorically.
Comment: Priest introduces his postmillennial, allegorical treatise by responding to common millenarian doctrines related to Jerusalem, the gathering of the Jews, etc.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "If the Jews are to be brought in with the fullness of the Gentiles, what, therefore, can a Jew promise himself by returning to Jerusalem? I confess I cannot see any ostensible reason for their return; but it is a well known fact, that Jesus Christ has made an end of all that first system of worship, which related wholly to the higher revelation of the gospel. This the Jews will understand--why, then, return to Jerusalem? They will at once perceive [sic], that to be a true Jew, or Israelite, is to possess faith in Christ. . . . At once they will perceive, that in this faith they have found Him of whom Moses and the prophets did write, which will answer every purpose far better than to go on a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. It is, indeed true, that the Jews shall be brought in with the fulness of the Gentiles; but where, or into what, shall they be brought? Why into the faith of the gospel, and nothing else?" (vii).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Millennium, Last Days
Library Holding: BS 830.s65x
Author: Ethan Smith
Title of Book: Dissertation on the Prophecies
Title of Article:
Smith, pastor and author, writes a long examination of esoteric biblical passages and the manner in which they relate to the happenings of the day. Smith is a postmillennialist, who views the events in Europe as pivotal in the years before the Millennium. Here he outlines the conditions of that day.

Excerpt (pages): "1. God will then be glorified on earth. . . . Jesus Christ will then be honored. . . . 2. That will be a day of salvation. . . . 3. The influence of Satan among men will be utterly restrained. . . . 4. Pure religion will then everywhere prevail. . . . 5. It will be a season of civil peace. . . . 6. That will be a season of great health, longevity, and outward prosperity. . . . 7. Civil government will then be perfectly subordinate to the interests of Zion. . . . 8. It will be a time of great knowledge. . . . 9. That day will be a season of eminent holiness; of intense benevolence. . . . 10. That will be a season of great religious and spiritual enjoyment. . . . 11. The systems of cavilling, error, schism and heresy, which now infest and disfigure the Church, will then be no more. . . . 12. That millennial Kingdom will be a time when the characters and conduct of men, in the times preceding that kingdom will be duly estimated; and the wicked will be held in their merited abhorrence. . . . In a word. That will be a season of great blessedness" (539-47).

Length of Relevant Material: 9 pp.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "In one of the prophets we learn that three signal overturnings, were to precede and introduce the Kingdom of Christ. . . . One great overturnings we have seen;--that of the Papal Beast. Two overturnings are still future;--that of the Turks; and of a subsequent coalition against the Jews. Christ will then come, and take the Kingdom; and fill the earth with his salvation" (xiii).
Topics: Millennium, Last Days, restoration of the Jews
Library Holding: BS 830.s65x
Author: Ethan Smith
Title of Book: Dissertation on the Prophecies
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: Samuel T. Armstrong
Date of Publication: 1814 (orig. pub. 1810)
Nature of Source: Smith, pastor and author, writes a long examination of esoteric biblical passages and the manner in which they relate to the happenings of the day.
Comment: Smith is a postmillennialist, who views the events in Europe as pivotal in the years before the Millennium.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "The agency of the naval power in this coalition, in the return of the Jews to the land of their fathers, we find predicted in Isa. xviii, as well as in other passages. . ."
Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Millennium, ministry
Library Holding: BS 830.s65x
Author: Ethan Smith
Title of Book: Dissertation on the Prophecies
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston
Publisher: Samuel T. Armstrong
Date of Publication: 1814 (orig. pub. 1810)
Nature of Source: Smith, pastor and author, writes a long examination of esoteric biblical passages and the manner in which they relate to the happenings of the day.
Comment: Smith is a postmillennialist, who views the events in Europe as pivotal in the years before the Millennium.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "While a pious and learned ministry are to hold the first rank among the means of withstanding the Infidelity of the last days; unconverted and ignorant ministers are among the most fatal means of betraying the cause of Christ into the hands of Infidels. . . . Surely none but men of grace, of abilities, and of good education, as well as of known and approved character, are adequate to this work. And none but such should be admitted to ordination, nor as candidates" (562)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Millennium, restoration
Library Holding: 080 Sh64a no. 22058
Author: Chloe Willey
Title of Book: A Short Account of the Life and Remarkable View
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: John C. Totten
Date of Publication: 1810
Nature of Source: In a short pamphlet, Willey relates significant life and religious experiences, several of which center on the Millennium and the Last Days.
Comment: Willey's visionary experiences parallel Mormon doctrine, history, and scripture in some striking ways.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "[The angel] said, the time will shortly come, when the stone, cut out of the mountain, without hands, which we read of in Daniel ii. 34 and 35, should become great, and fill the whole earth; that there would be glorious days in America; and that Christ should be their king, and reign from the rising sun to the setting sun: but in those days we must watch and pray, and make God's word the rule of our conduct" (21-22).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Millennium, restoration
Library Holding: 080 Sh64a no. 22058
Author: Chloe Willey
Title of Book: A Short Account of the Life and Remarkable View
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: John C. Totten
Date of Publication: 1810
Nature of Source: In a short pamphlet, Willey relates significant life and religious experiences, several of which center on the Millennium and the Last Days.
Comment: Willey's visionary experiences parallel Mormon doctrine, history, and scripture in some striking ways.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "At night, when I retired to sleep, I saw my [angelic] guide, who told me, that in the glorious day, which was shortly to take place, the purity of Christ's church should be established; that miracles should be wrought by his faithful servants; that cripples with those possessed with diseases, might be restored, which this angel told me, must be done by anointing them with oil in the name of the Lord, and the prayers of two godly persons, or ministers; and that they must have faith, and in that day the Lord would do great things for Zion, and her watchmen should be of one mind" (13)

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Millennium, restoration
Library Holding: 080 Sh64a no. 22058
Author: Chloe Willey
Title of Book: A Short Account of the Life and Remarkable View
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: John C. Totten
Date of Publication: 1810
Nature of Source: In a short pamphlet, Willey relates significant life and religious experiences, several of which center on the Millennium and the Last Days.

Comment: Willey's visionary experiences parallel Mormon doctrine, history, and scripture in some striking ways.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "The Lord would shortly visit the Jews with salvation, and that his anger is in a measure appeased toward them. . . . He said, that shortly the cause of Christ should rise more glorious, and Jews and Gentiles join to praise and adore the once crucified Saviour, who is precious to all saints" (22).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Millennium, restoration
Library Holding: 080 Sh64a no. 22058
Author: Chloe Willey
Title of Book: A Short Account of the Life and Remarkable View
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: John C. Totten
Date of Publication: 1810
Nature of Source: In a short pamphlet, Willey relates significant life and religious experiences, several of which center on the Millennium and the Last Days.
Comment: Willey's visionary experiences parallel Mormon doctrine, history, and scripture in some striking ways.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "[The angel] said, the time will shortly come, when the stone, cut out of the mountain, without hands, which we read of in Daniel ii. 34 and 35, should become great, and fill the whole earth; that there would be glorious days in America; and that Christ should be their king, and reign from the rising sun to the setting sun: but in those days we must watch and pray, and make God's word the rule of our conduct" (21-22).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: Millennium, restoration, spiritual gifts
Library Holding: W367
Author: Asa Wild
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Prognostication!!"
Title of Periodical: Wayne Sentinel
Place of Publication: Palmyra, NY
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 22, 1823
Nature of Source: Small-town newspaper of Palmyra, NY. It typically printed an eclectic mixture of political news, local happenings, and news items reprinted from other newspapers. Joseph Smith's family subscribed.
Comment: Asa Wild, a visionary hailing from Amsterdam, NY, reports a millenarian vision, claiming that God told him that the Millennium would begin in seven years, that destruction was imminent, and "greater and more glorious light is about to burst upon the world." He cites Revelation 14:6-7 as a passage soon to be fulfilled.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "[The Great Jehovah] told me further, that he had raised up, and was now raising up, that class of persons signified by the Angel mentioned by the Revelator, xiv. 6, 7, which flew in the midst of heaven; having the everlasting gospel to preach: that these persons are of an inferior class, and small learning: that they will be rejected by every denomination as a body; but soon, God will open their way, by miracles, judgments, &c.: that they will have higher authority, greater power, superior inspiration, and a greater degree of holiness, than was ever experienced before: inasmuch as this is [by] far the most glorious dispensation of divine grace and glory."
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Topics: Millennium, restoration of the Jews
Library Holding: BT 890.p7
Author: Josiah Priest
Title of Book: A View of the Expected Christian Millennium
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: Loomis' Press
Date of Publication: 1828
Nature of Source: A popularizer, Priest herein presents common millennial doctrines.
He disagrees strongly with literal readings of biblical passages, reading many millenarian prooftexts allegorically.
Comment: Priest introduces his postmillennial, allegorical treatise by responding to common millenarian doctrines related to Jerusalem, the gathering of the Jews, etc.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Excerpt (pages): "The opinion of the fathers, both Jewish and Christian, and others, that Jerusalem is again to be rebuilt in the time of the Millennium, for the comfort and glory of the saints, is founded doubtlessly on the 48th chapter of Ezekiel's prophecy, to which the reader can refer. But this opinion will not bear the test of the most inferior criticism; because the saints, during the Millennium, will have corporeal bodies as well as now, and therefore must occupy space. From which it is evident that if the whole land of Palestine shall become one continued city for the accommodation of the saints, it will be found insufficient to contain them" (vi).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
The Ecclesiastical Offices in the thought of Martin Bucer by William Van 'T Spijker Translated by John Vriend and Lyle D. Biema E.J. Brill, Leiden, New York, Kolin, 1996 Ordination prayer from the council of Florence reads "Receive the power to offer the sacrifice in the church on behalf of both the living and the dead." "Thomas Aquinas already put the priesthood in the closest possible relation to the sacrifice of the mass." (16) "By this relation, especially with the sacrament of the altar, the power of the priest was vastly increased . . . [resulted in] a growing dichotomy between clergy and laity." "Further strengthening this tendency was the view of sacramental grace received by consecration to the priesthood. This particular grace elevates priests to a position from which they can never fall" resulting from what Thomas Aquinas called "a certain excellence of power in divine services."(Summa Theologiae, 3, q.84, art.4.
"The practice of the office failed in a way to match the loftiness of the concept." (18).
Bucer refers to the cathohile priest with the derisional "God-maker." (19) (30) begins to point out that Christ himself was not of the priestly caste. Ma Martin Bucers Deutsche Schriften ed. Stupperich vol. 1 Fruhschriften 1520-1524, Gutersloh 1960. 32
"By wearing such sacred vestments they used to regard themselves as holier and better than others."

See also "Priest" Revd. James Gardner, The Faiths of the World (London and Edinburough: A. Fullarton and Co, 1858), v0l. II 713-714
Nature of Source: In a small pamphlet, Gorton intersperses biblical passages relating to the Millennium with his own interpretation of the same.

Comment: In all respects, Gorton is a millenarian—he reads scripture literally, he forecasts the literal restoration of the Jews and the literal resurrection of the just, and the redemption of the earth.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "The precise time of his coming it would be presumption in man to undertake to determine; since Christ himself declares, that not the angels in heaven, but the Father only, knows: Yet has directed us to watch, that that day do not come upon us unawares and unprepared. This is done, undoubtedly, as a general stimulus to the preparation and patient waiting for that day. I am of opinion, that the way for the Jews' return will soon be prepared, in such a manner that they will be collected from all nations under heaven, where they now are, and assembled at Jerusalem."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Second coming, millennium, temple

Library Holding: 080 Sh64a no. 2345

Author: Benjamin Gorton

Title of Book: A Scriptural Account of the Millennium

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Troy, NY

Publisher: Moffitt and Lyon

Date of Publication: 1802

Nature of Source: In a small pamphlet, Gorton intersperses biblical passages relating to the Millennium with his own interpretation of the same.

Comment: In all respects, Gorton is a millenarian—he reads scripture literally, he forecasts the literal restoration of the Jews and the literal resurrection of the just, and the redemption of the earth.

Gorton's comment about the restoration of sacrifice is interesting in light of similar remarks made by Joseph Smith (TPJS 172-73).

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "Soon after Christ's coming, I believe, the temple or sanctuary, spoken of by Ezekiel, will be built, and that Christ will make it the place of his residence—see Ezek. xliii.7; and that all (or some of all) nations, shall go up, from year to year, to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and keep the feast of tabernacles: and that sacrifices will be restored, of various kinds, not for atonement, but for purification of sin, or for keeping in remembrance the necessity of guarding against it, as the most destructive of all things, as well as shewing the sincerity of their worship, and that of all nations, who are to go and worship before the Lord."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Temples, Church
Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Prophetic Iconisms.--No. II"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: Oct. 1, 1832
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."
Comment: Campbell, in a series of definitions of prophetic, eschatological, and millennial symbolism, equates the temple with the Christian Church, thus blurring the line of demarcation drawn by Joseph Smith.
Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Word of Wisdom
Library Holding: BX 7301.M5x
Author: Editor
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Tobacco"
Title of Periodical: The Millennial Harbinger
Place of Publication: Bethany, VA
Publisher:
Date of Publication:
Nature of Source: Religious periodical edited by Alexander Campbell "[d]evoted to the destruction of Sectarianism, Infidelity, and Antichristian doctrine and practice. It shall have for its object the developement, and introduction of that political and religious order of society called THE MILLENNIUM, which will be the consummation of that ultimate amelioration of society proposed in the Christian scriptures."

Comment: Campbell lectures about the evils of tobacco, though he only speaks about physical dangers. From his prefatory note, it is clear that Campbell also supports temperance movements.

Researcher: Ryan Higginbotham

Excerpt (pages): "It is really surprising that a single individual could be found, who, after experiencing the distressing sensations almost invariably produced by the first use of tobacco, would be willing to risk their recurrence a second time: still more so, that any one should again and again resort to the "noxious weed," until, its immediate effects being lessened by habit, it becomes an article of luxury, from the use of which is found difficult to refrain. . . . Tobacco is, in fact, an absolute poison. A very moderate quantity introduced into the system--even applying the moistened leaves over the stomach--has been known very suddenly to extinguish life" (281).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Nature of Source: As explained in the title, the tract is designed as a model catechism for Sunday-school-aged children. The author, Reverend Perkins, was pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church.

Comment: The tract is composed in the form of questions and answers, which provide the researcher an excellent opportunity to consider the principal theological questions of the day. In the process of outlining the encompassing and basic principles of Presbyterian theology, Reverend Perkins answers a number of questions on the nature of man. The concept of original sin and the depravity of man figure prominently in the discussion.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Q.16. Are all his posterity involved in the consequences of his conduct, as their federal head?"
"A.16. All his posterity descending from him, by natural generation, are involved in the consequences of his apostacy; and hence all the sins, miseries, and evils of the whole world."

"Q.18. Is man born into the world, in a state of moral pollution and guilt?"
"A.18. Man is, as born into the world, in a state of moral pollution and guilt. He is destitute of the moral image of God, has a deprived nature, and deserves only misery" (28).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________

Topics: Adam; soul; spirit child of God; God's body; spirit and matter; creation
Author:
Title of Book: Sabbath School Catechism; Containing All the Chief Doctrines of Religion
Title of Article: Sabbath School Catechism; Containing All the Chief Doctrines of Religion
Title of Periodical: Columbian Star
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: Martin and Boden
Date of Publication: July 11, 1829
Nature of the source: The Columbian Star and Christian Index is a Philadelphia-based periodical created by a Baptist organization for an audience of Baptist adherents. Edited by W.T. Brantly, its content is of both general and theological interest. The periodical became known as Christian Index after 1830.

Comment: Excerpted from a lecture by William Ballantine, Bible Class is a list of certain doctrinal questions and answers regarding the nature of man and God. While the discussion is void of any scriptural references, it states its case very authoritatively. It establishes man's body as a temporary habitation for an "intelligent mind;" it asserts that man's spirit is "not matter;" it asserts that "an intelligent spirit brought into being shall forever exist;" and that reason is the power of an "immortal being."

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt: "Question. Does man's corporeal form appear constituted as a habitation for his intelligent mind? Answer. No better reason can be given for the corporeal form which his maker has bestowed upon him. Q. When you read that God created man in his own image, after his likeness, do you understand anything corporeal? A. The words must refer to man's soul, God is a Spirit and has no bodily parts. Q. Is man's soul-spirit--pure spirit? A. It is not matter, but a spiritual existence distinct from his body, although connected with it. . . Q. Was the knowledge of Adam limited? A. The tree of knowledge of good and evil, continually reminded him of his limited understanding. Q. Was the soul of man created immortal? A. It appears on the whole face of revelation that an intelligent spirit brought into being shall exist forever" (19).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: adolescence and religion

Author: Nathaniel Willis

Title of Book: Account of the Happy Deaths of Two Young Christians

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Boston, MA

Nature of Source: The tract is apparently self-published. It is composed in the form of lengthy obituaries and carries an obviously didactic purpose.

Comment: The tract is an excellent example of the seriousness with which the conversion and salvation of the youth was taken. For example, in referring to the past impieties of one of the deceased, who died at age 17, the author clearly makes no allowance for her age or lack of experience. The author also characterizes these converted youth as a vital source of missionary zeal and energy. The tract contains direct passages from a admonitory speech which one of the deceased had delivered at her funeral. The nature of this piece suggests that a higher mortality rate for youth in the nineteenth century may have contributed to this intense concern for early, experiential salvation. It is also clear that for this author the fervent and personal prayer of the youth was the only (or principal) source of such conversion experiences.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "But God who is infinite in mercy and full of compassion, saw fit to awaken her mind to the dangerous state she was in by nature—her lost condition as a sinner whilst out of Christ and her need of immediate reconciliation to the terms of the Gospel" (4-5).

. . . . .

"She would frequently speak with wonder and astonishment, of her past blindness and folly, in neglecting so long that religion of which she now began to feel the value. She was anxiously desirous of having others feel the worth of religion; and their need of becoming experimentally acquainted with its divine pleasures. It was her solicitous concern to do all in her power to promote the honour and glory of her Maker, the short time of her continuance on earth. For this purpose she improved every opportunity of conversing with those who came to see her, on the importance of time, and the worth of their immortal souls. The young, particularly her associates lay with peculiar weight one her mind. She lost no opportunity of counselling and warning them to be in readiness to meet death in peace, whenever they should be summoned to leave this world, and appear before the dread Majesty of heaven and earth" (6-7).

. . . . .

"She had been taught to pray. It was whilst engaged in this exercise, with great ardor, that the love of God was shed abroad in her heart, and she obtained deliverance from every fear." (20)

Hard Copy (pages): 1-22
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: adolescence and religion
Author: John Hooper, M.A.
Title of Book: The Advantages of Early Piety Displayed, In a Memoir of Mr. John Clement, Surgeon, Late of Weymouth, Who Died in the Twentieth Year of his Age; Compiled from his Letters and Diary, and interspersed with Occasional Reflections
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher: Samuel T. Armstrong
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: A lengthy obituary, written by a friend and colleague, which carries an obvious didactic objective. It appears to be written for the medical community and enjoins greater piety among physicians.
Comment: The significance of this document is two-fold. First, it is an indication of the influence the conversion experience of a young man (in this case, age twenty) might have on associates many years his elder and is an excellent example of the sobriety and solemnity with which such young converts were to conduct themselves (compare with JS-H 1:28). Second, its very existence and publication in both England and America convey the importance which nineteenth-century culture placed on the experiential conversion of the adolescent.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "His acquaintance with the power of religion on the mind, and on the heart, rendered our young friend more extensively useful in the discharge of professional duties: it enabled him to prescribe for the soul as well as for the body; and whilst applying suitable remedies to soften the anguish of corporeal suffering, he could also be instrumental in binding up the broken heart, and assuaging the anguish of an accusing conscience, by directing the attention to the Great Physician. In this he rejoiced, and he embraced every suitable opportunity of doing good to the immortal soul" (185).

Length of Relevant Material: 100 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 185

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: adolescence and religion

Author: Richard Hunt

Title of Book: An Address, Delivered Before the Female Juvenile Benevolent Society, In the West Precinct In Attleborough, At Their Annual Meeting, July 31, 1818

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Providence, RI

Publisher:

Date of Publication:

Nature of Source: Published by request of the society, the tract contains the text of the given address, as well as the society's constitution. The tract was printed by Miller & Hutchens.

Comment: The tract itself, as well as the general existence of the society, evidence the potential religious influence that pious youth were perceived to have. The speaker reminds them of their ability to reprove unbelievers of all ages and also enjoins their search for a conversion experience.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Numerous pious youth, endued by God with shining talents, whose hearts glowed with love to their Savior and the souls of men, have been called from that oblivion, in which, in consequence of their poverty, they were compelled to remain, and are in the course of instruction, which affords fair ground for hope, that they will soon become burning and shining lights in the Church; that they will go forth to reap the fields which are already white for harvest, and break the bread and pour out the water of life, to them that are perishing for lack of vision" (4).

"Let me seriously remind you of one donation, which if you have not made, you ought to make this very day. Without you do this, whatever else you give, you will, in the sight of God, be but as sounding brass, or tinkling cymbals. Do you wish to know what it is? It is something which, young as you are, you are fully able to bestow. . .it is to give your hearts immediately to God. Do this and you will be brought into possession of that, which alone can satisfy the desires of the immortal mind. May you do this without delay” (8).

Length of Relevant Material: 12 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 1-12
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: adolescence and religion
Author: George Hendley
Title of Book: A Memorial for Sunday School Girls, Being the Second Part of an Authentic Account of the Conversion, Experience, and Happy Death of Twenty-Five Children
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher: Samuel T. Armstrong
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract, was published five times in Britain before its first appearance in 1819 in the United States.

Comment: The tract describes the experiential conversion of thirteen children (although the title names twenty-five) just prior to their respective deaths. It is another clear example of the relationship between a prevalence of child mortality and a preoccupation with childhood conversion. The ages of the girls here considered range from six to fourteen years (2). Authored by a minister, the tract was apparently intended to inspire both children and parents to seek these early conversions. Again, personal and private prayer was the principal medium through which this conversion experience was sought and obtained. The tract also indicates that the converted child will cease to associate with "jovial" company (see third excerpt), and frequently commends the seriousness and sobriety of these young converts (compare with JS-H 1:28). The tract also contains examples of childhood conversions leading to the greater piety of the entire family.

Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "They would frequently tell her that the Lord heard the prayers of children--that it was never too soon to begin to pray--that she had a wicked heart, which must be made better--that the Lord had promised her a new heart, and that this he would do in answer to prayer" (12).

"Often in the day she would get by herself in a private room, and weep, and pour her heart out to God in secret prayer" (13).
"When she was among children who told lies, or said bad words, she would reprove them, and tell them very seriously, that if they did so they would go to a bad place" (13). . . . .
"When one day at the house of a neighbor, who was very fond of her, she heard him say some very bad words; she went up to him, called him by name, and told him if he did not leave off such evil ways, God would not love him. The reproof had a good effect upon him, and he afterwards told her mother, that he was much ashamed of himself, to be spoken to in such a manner by a child" (26).

"Anne taught her mother to read: she repeated to her the instructions she received at school, and by her simple artless persuasions, brought her to attend on the preaching of the word" (46).

Hard Copy (pages): 1-48
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: adolescence and religion
Author: Directors of the American Society for Educating Pious Youth for the Gospel Ministry
Title of Book: Fourth Report of the Directors of the American Society for Educating Pious Youth for the Gospel Ministry September 29, 1819
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Andover, MD
Date of Publication: 1819
Publisher: Flagg and Gould
Nature of Source: The annual report covers both the accomplishments and objectives of the Society. It includes financial tables, lists of benefactors and general requests for donations and involvement.
Comment: The report is an example of the interest generated by young men of ministerial promise during this period. The report encourages the discovery and encouragement of such budding theologians.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "In their exertions to effect this, they should search out every young man in our country, to whom God has given promising talents and pious disposition, and by charitable aid, encourage him to qualify himself for the work of the ministry. Not one should be left. While great care is taken to guard against imposition, and to withhold patronage from those who do not deserve it; still greater care should be taken, that no young man, in any part of our country, who possesses suitable qualifications, should be overlooked, and waste his talents in obscurity, for want of patronage" (20).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages): 20
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: __________

Topics: adolescence and religion
Author: Anna Letitia (Aiken) Barbauld
Title of Book: Hymns in Prose for Children
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New Haven, CT
Publisher: J. Babcock & Son
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The publication is a basic prose hymnal for children.
Comment: While the hymnal has limited direct bearing on the doctrine or phenomena of the restoration, it does provide a better understanding of a period in which childhood experiences with deity were accepted and encouraged. Five editions of the hymnal were published within the same year.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "May we that are so young speak to him that always was? May we, that can hardly speak plain, speak to God?
"We that are so young and but lately made alive; therefore we should not forget his forming hand who hath made us alive. We that cannot speak plain, should lisp our praises to him who teacheth us how to speak and hath opened our dumb lips" (19).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages): 19
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: adolescence and religion

Author:

Title of Book: Juvenile Piety; or, the Happiness of Religion, Exemplified in the Joyful Deaths of Pious Children

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Boston, MA

Publisher: Lincoln and Edmands

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: Extracted from the Evangelical Magazine, this tract is quite similar to others of the same year. In addition to the accounts of adolescent "conversion, experience and death," the tract includes children's hymns and poetry.

Comment: In the describing the pre-death conversions and piety of young Christians, this tract is quite similar to other published the same year. In this particular tract, the ages of the youth here considered range from eight to twenty years. Often, the adolescent conversion experience was similar to Joseph Smith's in that it was stimulated by personal scripture study and private prayer. Also, the deaths of these newly converted were often seen as a blessing in that they were thereby prohibited from ruining their current state of justification and righteousness. As with others of this genre, the tract also enjoins childhood sobriety and the keeping of serious company (comapare with JS-H 1:28).

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Perhaps it may not be amiss to observe, that the person on whose account the sermon was preached was, in her last moments, very earnest in prayer, that some souls might receive good from it; and it should be mentioned, to the honour of God, as the hearer of prayer, that one young lad besides this child appears to have been awakened by it. The text was John v. 39. "Search the Scriptures." When the reasons were assigned why we should search the Scriptures, Master T.'s mind was impressed with a determination to read the word of God" (8).

Length of Relevant Material: 25 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Nature of Source: It is difficult to determine whether this tract is the text of a sermon which was given orally, or if it was composed to appear in print only.

Comment: It is interesting to note that the two principal injunctions of the piece are for the youth to engage in personal scripture study and prayer. The piece also warns against the youthful sin of "easiness of temper"—perhaps the same sin which Joseph Smith refers to as "levity"—and therefore deserves a comparison to Joseph Smith's lamentation in JS-H 1:28. Similarly, the tract warns against the keeping of what might be called "jovial company."

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "We think it necessary, however, to caution you against sinful easiness of temper. We have seen the baneful effects of this disposition in some, of whose sincerity we were fully persuaded" (6).

"And lest worldly interests, or a remaining love for the witty, enlivened conversation of profane people, should bribe us to believe we may sometimes associate with them, and yet receive no harm; the salutary advice is, Be not deceived; evil communications corrupt good manners. Your society, therefore, must be with real, not nominal Christians, for he that walketh with the wise men shall be wise" (7).

"Young and inexperienced, you indeed stand on slippery places, exposed to many temptations. But the Lord has promised to sustain you. Let all your affairs be entered on with prayer, and with laying yourselves open to the direction of God in his word" (8).

Length of Relevant Material: 8 pp.

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________
The tract contains the text of a sermon delivered in December of 1818. It also contains a Prayer for Children and the text of a hymn. Though no author is given on the title page, a handwritten note attributes the sermon to a Mr. J. Vinton, jr.

The author here pays particular attention to the tendencies of youth to succumb the trappings of the day; such as "sports and plays, dress and fashion, and the vanities of the world" (4). The tract is an example of the very stringent restrictions some denominations of the day were placing upon the social activities of the youth. The author also plays on the high mortality rate of the period and uses the threat of imminent death as an emphasis to his admonitions. Compare this litany of youthful sins with Joseph Smith's lamentations in JS-H 1:28.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "God has spared and preserved your lives. Death is the wages of sin; and for your sins, God might justly have cut you down. He has cut down many in the year past, who were as young as you are, and not greater sinners. They have been called, in the morning of life out, of time into eternity; their final sentence has been passed at the dreadful bar of God. They are gone beyond the reach of mercy and of hope--but you are among the living, of whom there is hope. God has not only spared your lives another year, but though you have so often provoked him to anger by your sins, he has preserved your health, and afforded you a thousand blessings, of which you were unworthy, while he has delivered you from a thousand distresses which you deserved" (6-7).

"Remember time is short, life uncertain, death approaching, God is calling and eternity hastening" (11).

Hard Copy (pages): 1-12
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: adolescence and religion; fate of those without gospel
Author: Benjamin Morgan Palmer
Title of Book: A Sermon Delivered at the Anniversary of the Sabbath School Association
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: Charleston, SC
Place of Publication: Charleston, SC
Publisher: Sabbath School Association
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Printed by G. Hoff, the tract is the text of a sermon given on the importance on adolescent religious instruction.

Comment: Taking Mark 10:4 as his text, the author considers the possible meanings of the Savior's statement "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." In so doing, he considers the possibility (he does not state it as doctrine) that children who die before an age of accountability are automatically cleansed from Adam's transgressions by the power of the atonement. A specific age of accountability, however, is not determined.
There is ground for cherishing the belief of the future blessedness of such of them as die in infancy; and since many of the children of the wicked die before thee commit actual transaction, the thought is not presumptuous, that the atonement of the second Adam takes away the pollution entailed by the Apostacy [sic] of the first, and that all who die at this early period go to increase the population of the celestial world" (10).

"Now if the thousand years be reckoned from this fall, anno 500, they will end in the year fifteen hundred. And we are sensible what tragedies in religion have been acted since. If Gog and Magog, are Luther and Calvin, who knows how far their reformations may be yet pushed, before the coming of the Anti-Christ at the end of the world" (91).
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a sermon given in Winchester at the opening of the synod of Virginia, on October, 21, 1819. Reverend Hill was the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Winchester. The tract also includes some prefatory remarks which indicate that the sermon engendered some opposition among the Episcopalian denominations.

Comment: The author endeavors to prove, in a somewhat ambiguous manner, that there should be no distinction or rank among the ministers of the gospel. He appears to direct his comments toward the Episcopalian denominations of his day, which would have been noted for the diversity of ranks among their clergy. The author does make allowance for the different offices of Bishop, Deacon and Presbyter--but claims that only one class of minister existed and that other offices entail completely different properties and position. As with most of his Presbyterian colleagues, the author is careful to differentiate between "extraordinary" ministers (apostles and prophets) which existed in the primitive church but are no longer needed, and "permanent" ministers (Bishops, Elders) who currently govern the church. In so doing, the author vindicates the absence of apostles in the modern church by means of the arguments common to his day (e.g., that apostles necessarily had to be eye-witnesses to Christ's resurrection.)

Excerpt (pages): "That the office of Apostle, was extraordinary and temporary, and not designed for succession, can easily be proved, both from the nature of the case, from scripture, and from concessions from prelatists themselves.

"When Peter moved to fill the vacancy, caused by the defection of Judas, he stated this as an essential qualification, that the person chosen, should be one, who among the rest, had been an eye witness of the resurrection. Again, Acts 2, 32, 'This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are his witnesses,' and other passages to the same purpose. From all which we assuredly gather that the office of an Apostle could not admit of succession beyond that generation." (27).

Length of Relevant Material: 71 pp.

Topics: apostles, high priests, seventies, elders, bishop; primitive church; order;
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: As explained in the title, the tract is designed as a model catechism for Sunday-school-aged children. The author, Reverend Perkins, was pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church.
Comment: The tract is composed in the form of questions and answers, which provide the researcher an excellent opportunity to consider the principal theological questions of the day. In the process of outlining the encompassing and basic principles of Presbyterian theology, Reverend Perkins answers a number of questions on the nature of church organization. Using the primitive church as model, he indicates that bishops and deacons are the only offices in a proper church organization. He proceeds to argue that the various offices named in the New Testament are synonymous. Drawing from Hebrews (3:1, 5:10, 6:20, 7:26, 8:1, 9:11, 10:21) the author implies that the ordination of priests is blasphemous, because Christ is the only High Priest.
Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Q.6. When is a particular Gospel Church, completely organized?"
"A.6. A Gospel Church, is rightly and fully organized, where it has, besides private professors, a Bishop or Pastor, and Deacons or a Deacon, as their number may require."
"Q.7 How many kinds of officers are there in Christ's Church?"
"A.7 There are only two kinds of officers, Bishops or Pastors, and Deacons or ruling elders."
"Q.8 Does the Gospel ministry, in the New Testament Church, consist of only one order?"
"A.8 There is but one order of Gospel ministers, called indifferently, Elders, Pastors, Teachers, Bishops, Evangelists, but never Priests.  Christ is the only High Priest of our confession" (64).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages): 64
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: apostles; ordination; call to preach; descent of authority Author: Z. A.
Title of Book: Presbyterian Ordination Doubtful. . .
primitive church, the presbyters had no power of ordination and therefore the entire creation and progression of the Presbyterian church has been invalid. In this process the pamphlet also specifies the differences and importance of apostles, seventies, presbyters and deacons. The pamphlet proceeds to establish an ecclesiastical hierarchy in which only apostles can ordain church officers of any rank or station. The author conveys the distinct impression that a Christian church cannot exist without the presence of apostolic authority. There is some evidence to suggest that the author was an Episcopalian.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "If then the apostolic office terminated, and to organize churches was an extraordinary character of that office, this character, call it what you will, has ceased." (36)

"You observe, that the office expired with themselves. By the office, I suppose you would be understood, the apostolic office in its appropriate sense, as mentioned by St. Paul, God hath set some in the church, first apostles. To this I reply, that what God hath set, he hath established, and if what he hath established in his church has expired, I see no reason that the church has not expired with it." (38)

Length of Relevant Material: 1-44 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 1-44

---

Topics: atonement

Author: John Brown

Title of Book: A compendious view of natural and revealed religion

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: David Hogan

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: This publication is the first American printing of a late London edition. John Brown (1722-1787) was deceased at the time of this printing.

Comment: The theology of this tract appears to be orthodox Protestant—and is most likely Presbyterian—though there is some ambiguity. The most relevant portions for Latter-day Saint scholars are those which discuss the nature of the Atonement. In language that would be relatively familiar for Latter-day Saints, Brown refers to a covenant of works and a covenant of grace—the covenant of works was made between God and man and subsequently broken by Adam; the covenant of grace was made between God and Christ and subsequently kept by the atonement. Though the content of Brown's doctrine differs from the nature of Joseph Smith's (in that it reaffirms original sin, total depravity and proclaims the current covenant of works dead by virtue of the new covenant of grace) the similarities of the terminology used (e.g. covenant, spiritual death, etc.) warrant a comparison.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "In the making of this covenant of grace, 1. The Son of God was constituted the second Adam, and agreed to assume our nature, and become a true man; and hence a substantial mediator between God and men,—and suffering for sin in that very nature which had sinned, . ." (233).

Length of Relevant Material: 187 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: basis of authority
Author: Joseph Tuckerman
Title of Book: A Sermon, Delivered at the Ordination of The Rev. Samuel Gilman.
Title of Article:
Place of Publication: Charleston, SC
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of an ordination sermon given by the pastor of the Chelsea, MA, pastor, at the induction of the pastor of the Second Independent Church in Charleston. The sermon was offered on December 1st, 1819. The denomination of the author is not given.
Comment: For most orthodox preachers of this period, the doctrine of authority was one of importance and interest. Myriad ordination speeches condemn those who preach without being called. The sermon at hand, however, is particularly specific regarding the nature of that call. Unlike his ambiguous contemporaries, Tuckerman makes explicit what his colleagues leave implicit; that is, that the authority to preach comes from personal conversion, an inner decision and adherence to the dictates of the Bible.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "Our peculiar relation, both to Christ and to men, is most forcibly expressed in the text. We enter upon the ministry, not indeed as Apostles, peculiarly designated to the office, but from choice of the service; from zealous attachment to his cause; from humble and pure desires to be dispensers of his word, and labourers together with him in the salvation of man. In Christ's stead, we teach the doctrines of his religion; inculcate its duties; and attempt to give impression, and effect, to its promises and threatenings" (4).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages):

---

Topics: basis of authority
Author:
Title of Book: Report of a Committee of the General Assembly, Appointed for Revising the Form of Government, and the Forms of Process of the Presbyterian Church, In the United States of America
Title of Article:
'Ordered to be printed for the consideration of the presbyters," this report is similar to a ministerial handbook on church government. The report is only the suggestion by a committee to the General Assembly of Presbyters and may or may not have been ratified by that body.

Comment: The report establishes the will of the congregation as the only source of ecclesiastical authority; furthermore, the same passage implies that the authority is limited to the parameters of that particular congregation. Interestingly, after the congregation has elected a new minister, they are asked to promise their assistance and subjection to him. To the LDS researcher, it may be of interest to note that the candidate to the ministry is then confirmed by the raising of the right hands of the congregation and is then ordained by the laying on of hands by the Presbytery.

Excerpt (pages): "That though the character, qualifications, and authority of church officers, are laid down in the holy scriptures, as well as the proper method of their investiture and institution; yet the election of the persons to the exercise of authority, in any particular society, is in that society" (4).

. . . . .

"Do you promise to receive the word of truth from his mouth, with meekness and love; and to submit to him, with humility, in the due exercise of discipline?" (17).

. . . . .

"The people having answered these questions, in the affirmative, by holding up their right hands, the candidate shall kneel down, in the most convenient part of the church: Then the presiding bishop shall, by prayer, and with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery; according to the apostolic example, solemnly ordain him to the holy office of the gospel ministry" (17).

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 4, 14-17
Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ________________________________
Nature of Source: "Ordered to be printed for the consideration of the presbyters," this report is similar to a ministerial handbook on church government. The report is only the suggestion to the General Assembly of Presbyters and may or may not have been ratified by that body.

Comment: The report defines the basis and limits of the Presbyterian concept of authority. It clearly establishes the role of the minister as interpretive rather legislative. By so doing, it defacto rejects any claim of modern revelation.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "That all church power, whether exercised by the body in general, or, in the way of representation, by delegated authority, is only ministerial and declarative; That is to say, that the holy scriptures are the only rule of faith and manners; that no church judicatory ought to pretend to make laws, to bind the conscience, in virtue of their own authority; and that all their decisions should be founded upon the revealed word of God" (4).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages): 4

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: basis of authority; descent of authority; new scripture

Author: Nehemiah Dodge

Title of Book: A Description of Gospel Ministers, and their Internal Call

Title of Article: Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Exeter, NH

Publisher: Josiah Richardson

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: Written by the pastor of the Baptist Church in Lebanon, Connecticut, this tract was originally intended as a "circular letter" for internal church use only. However, the project was of such a size, the decision was made to publish.

Comment: The tract is intended to enable the sincere believer to distinguish between ministers "whom God never called" and those who are "called and owned of God in his cause." In so doing, the author's perspective on priesthood and authority is revealed. The author frequently refers to the need for an "inner call" to preach, but does not establish any definite means or mode by which the call is to be received or recognized. In explaining the nature of God's modern commission to preach, the author claims on the basis of the Bible's completion that there no longer exists either the necessity or possibility of spiritual power in the form of miracles, yet reaffirms the need for communion with the Holy Ghost. These passages, which pepper the entire treatise, contrast significantly with Joseph Smith's teachings on the charismatic power associated with priesthood authority. The closest association with a Latter-day Saint concept of the nature of priesthood may be the authors reference to Rom. 8:14, which compares with Doctrine and Covenants 84:33-34, though the true intent of the author in quoting that passage is difficult to determine.
Excerpt (pages): "Before the cannon of scripture was completed, it was necessary that the principal publishers of God's mind and will to mankind, should evince their heavenly mission in a miraculous way and manner. But since Bible is completed, there is no need of any thing more conclusive than the writings of Moses, the Prophets and Apostles, accompanied with the preaching of the word, and attended with the influences of the Spirit.

However, we must yet say as formerly, if any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his. Rom. 8. 9. For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the sons of God. Rom. 10. 15. How can they preach except they be sent? Rom. 10. 15. Implies something more than being sent to school, by fancy, or parents. More than being sent to a trade for the sake of a livelihood. More than ever influenced an unregenerate man in any case. It implies supernatural influence from the spirit of God, opening the scriptures to the understanding, and guiding his mind in all ministerial duties, to the glory of God" (17).

Length of Relevant Material: 17 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: basis of authority; Old Testament as context for modern doctrines
Author: Lucius Bolles
Title of Book: A Sermon, Delivered at Newburyport, In the First Presbyterian Meeting-house, December 9, 1918, at the Ordination of the Reverend Hosea Wheeler. . . .
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Newburyport
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Published by request and printed by W. & J. Gilman, the tract is the text of a sermon given orally at the ordination of Hosea Wheeler.
Comment: As was common for ordination sermons of the time, this particular oration covers a myriad of subjects. However, its principal focus is the nature of the priesthood, or authority to minister in the name of God. Though Presbyterianism is particularly noted for its scholastic requirements and the election process by which its clergy are selected, the author indicates that the right to preach can only be endowed by God. For this author, the reception and ratification of the Holy Spirit is the ultimate basis of authority. Unlike the Latter-day Saints, this author is very careful to distinguish between the priesthood and offices of the Old and New Testaments.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "Every approved minister is specially called to the office. His work is not an art and business which, like a mechanist, he may first acquire and then lawfully exercise. Even the Lord Jesus assumed not the office but by appointment of Him who said, 'Thou art a priest forever, after the order of Melchisedec.' And the labours of the priesthood continue to be the appropriate service of men, designated thereto by God. Not indeed after the manner of ancient priests, but after an order peculiar to the christian dispensation. Possessing the necessary natural and gracious qualifications, he is moved by the Holy Spirit to engage in the work of God.

. . . . .
"He ought to approve himself of God, since he cannot without the attendant influence of the Holy Spirit, accomplish the objects of his ministry" (4-5, 6).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: basis of authority; priesthood and church
Author: Joseph Tuckerman
Title of Book: A Sermon, Delivered at the Ordination of The Rev. Samuel Gilman.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Charleston, SC
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of an ordination sermon given by the pastor of the Chelsea, MA, pastor, at the induction of the pastor of the Second Independent Church in Charleston. The sermon was offered on December 1st, 1819. The denomination of the author is not given
Comment: For most orthodox preachers of this period, the doctrine of authority was one of importance and interest. Myriad ordination speeches condemn those who preach without being called. The sermon at hand, however, is particularly specific regarding the nature of that call. Unlike his ambiguous contemporaries, Tuckerman makes explicit what his colleagues leave implicit; that is, that the authority to preach comes from personal conversion, an inner decision, adherence to the dictates of the Bible, and authorization by the congregation in question. Perhaps most importantly, Tuckerman is clear in establishing that the ordination does not confer "any new powers." In essence, it establishes the ordination as a purely symbolic rite.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "I have said that, we feel ourselves to be called to this office, by our interest in the christian improvement, and in the eternal salvation of men; by our readiness and desire, forsaking all interests and pursuits inconsistent with it, to live and to die in the service of Christ. And as we attribute all good influence to God, we ascribe this also to His agency. Nor do we pretend that we confer any new powers by the acts of ordination. We do not acknowledge, and, by authority given to us by the church in whose name we act, confirm the powers, and rights, and privileges, to the acceptance and exercise of which, he who is to be ordained is invited by those, with whom he is to be immediately connected as their minister. In our united prayers we commend him to God; separate him to all the services of the sanctuary; and seek for him the succor and assistance from above, which we feel that he needs. . . . These rites of our churches are derived from Apostolic usage; and we adopt them, because they are most solemn, most appropriate, and as we believe, most conformed to the order and design of the gospel. If they do not make him whom we this ordain holy to the Lord, they make him and others, if they have the sensibility of christians, feel that his character and his labours should be holy." (29-30).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: basis of authority; priesthood and church
Author: David Thurston
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hallowell
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Printed by E. Goodale, this tract contains the text of an ordination sermon delivered by the pastor of the church in Winthrop, upon the induction of the pastor in Alna. The sermon was offered on November 25, 1818. The denomination of the author is not given.
Comment: In establishing the nature of the gospel ministry, Reverend Thurston briefly touches on the issue of authority. His comments are important for their typicality; the language and scriptural passages used are indicative of the orthodox statements made on the issue at this period. For most of the ministers of this period, authority to preach consisted of the personal reception of grace and the authorization of the community over which one presides, and although the author is not explicit on his views of this authority, his silence might be an indication of his adherence to the common ideas. It must be said, however, that Thurston is more ambiguous about the absolute need for this authority than most of his contemporaries.

Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "The text refers to false prophets, who had intruded themselves into office. 'God had not sent them, yet they ran; he had not spoken to them, yet they prophesied.' But saith Jehovah, 'If they had stood in my counsel and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from the evil of their doings.' Notwithstanding their unauthorized assumption of the sacred trust, had they obediently hearkened to the voice of God and faithfully proclaimed his truth, they would have been instrumental of the conversion of sinners" (4).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Give us ministers then who both understand and love the truth, and who are willing to make any sacrifice in its cause. These are the teachers whom God's word approves,—men who are capable of serving the church, and whose labours she now calls for, to build up her wastes and to extend her promised empire over the earth. Shall we hear her call, and set about the good work of increasing the number of such teachers?" (19).

[charge] "You, according to divine providence, are now become a minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; consecrated to the office by prayer and the laying on of the hands of the ministry" (22).
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of an ordination sermon by Ebenezer Porter, the Bartlet Professor of Sacred Rhetoric in Theological Seminary at Andover, MA.

Comment: The sermon is noted for its typicality. In contrast to the LDS concept of ordination, these ministerial ordinations do not involve the bestowal of charismatic power, but rather the bestowal of administrative authority. According to this sermon (and many others) this administrative authority to preach and shepherd is derived from an adherence to the biblical forms.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Do I depend on the Bible for my authority to preach? and shall I be ashamed or afraid to preach the religion of the Bible? Do I profess to be commissioned by the gospel of Jesus Christ?" (11).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Topics: basis of authority; priesthood and church
Author: [George Keely]
Title of Book: The Nature and Order of a Gospel Church, and the Obligations of its Members. . .

Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Haverhill, MA
Publisher: Green at the Patriot Press
Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a sermon preached at the Baptist Meetinghouse, in Haverhill, Massachusetts. It includes an appendix containing an inquiry into the standing of females in a Christian church and the obligations of Christians in contracting marriage.

Comment: In explaining the appropriate nature and function of a "gospel church" the author discusses the nature of authority. He seems to approach the concept of authority from the common Protestant perspective; that is, authority as an authorization to preach and administer rather than an endowment of charismatic power. The language and character of the discussion provide the Latter-day Saint researcher with an interesting and typical contrast to Joseph Smith's teachings on the priesthood as "power from on high."

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "For preaching, administering ordinances and ruling, Ministers derive authority from the churches by which they are called to officiate. It is the order of nature that every society should invest its president with a certain portion of power. Provided such delegated authority be abused, it is equally proper that those from whom it came, should recall it; and that the individual in whom it was placed, should surrender such power, in order for its being bestowed upon one who will act for the good of the body at large--Reject this idea, and you surrender the right of every church to rule itself, without external influence (4)."

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
The tract contains that text of a lengthy memorium of Stephen West, pastor of the Stockbridge, MA, congregation, given by Alvan Hyde, pastor of the church in Lee, MA. The unstated purpose of the tract seems to be to admonish budding young clergymen to make themselves worthy of their calling. For a Latter-day Saint researcher, the most striking aspect of the tract is probably the absence of any language concerning of authority/power [at least the Mormon concept of authority/power] in the life of a minister, and the corollary focus on the reception of grace as the principal criterion for the gospel ministry.

The speaker feels this observation to be a just and heavy reproof upon himself: and for this reason, perhaps, has had occasion to feel a deeper and more sensible conviction of the necessity of the power of religion in the heart, in order to such a discharge of the duties of the ministerial office, as will be in any measure acceptable to Christ; or, as may be expected to be beneficial to the souls of men" (9).

Length of Relevant Material: 5 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Nature of Source: The cited work contains the basic doctrines and practices of the United Brethren, a German-American denomination similar, it seems, to Presbyterianism. The work is in both English and German, with corresponding pages side-by-side.

Comment: The work contains the methods of ordaining the various clergy within the congregation. The candidate for ordination is voted on by a "general conference" and then asked a series of questions regarding his own reception of grace and his devotion to the Christian cause. If the questions are answered correctly, he is then ordained by the laying on of hands. In describing this process for bishops, the tract alludes to a conferral of spiritual power which other denominations do not address; however, it must be noted that such references to spiritual power are not as obvious in the ordinations to lower offices.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The Bishop. Will you, in ordaining, sending abroad and laying hands upon others, act faithfully and with a good conscience?
"Answer. I will so do by the help of God.
"Then the bishop shall say:
"Almighty God, our heavenly father, grant unto you strength and power to perform all these things, that you may be found to be a true and faithful minister at the day of account, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.
"The Bishop. Let us pray.
"After prayer the bishop and elders present, shall lay their hands upon the head of the elected person kneeling before them upon his knees, the bishop saying:
"Receive the Holy Ghost for the office and work of a bishop in the church of God, now committed unto thee by the imposition of our hands, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen" (72-73).

Length of Relevant Material: 40 pp. (20 pp. in English)

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
"As the nature and principles of the Christian religion are the same now as formerly, we conceive that the same divine call and influence, which qualified the early ministers and promulgators of the gospel, should be (in a degree at least) experienced by its ministers to the end of the world: especially as we have no other qualification pointed out in the holy scriptures.--This call was "not of men, neither by man; but by Jesus Christ and God the Father." We believe that the same is inwardly and immediately received by the true gospel ministers of the present day; and that, in the discharge of the duties of this sacred office, the renewed influences of divine wisdom and strength should be waited for, and experienced. Thus ministers are qualified to speak to the state of their hearers; and to baptize them into the name (or power) of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit; thereby fulfilling that true commission for the gospel ministry given by our Saviour, Mat.xxviii. 19" (66-67).

"From all these considerations, we believe that it is necessary, in the first call to the ministry, to be 'inwardly moved by the Holy Ghost;' and that, in the various performances of this sacred office, the renewings of this divine influence and ability should be waited for, and experienced, as the most likely means to fulfil the apostolic exhortation; "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ; to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen.'

From our views of this important subject, there arise a few points, in which we materially differ from most most [sic] other professors of Christianity.

"1.--In not considering human learning essential to a gospel minister.

"2.--In believing that no individual has a right to assume the exclusive exercise of this ministry, in a congregation of Christians; but that all, both male and female, who are rightly moved thereto, may exercise this gift.

"3.--That the ministry being, if rightly received, received freely, and without pecuniary expense to qualify for it, and therefore ought to be freely communicated; and no further support expected by ministers, than what is authorized by Christ, and practised by his apostles" (68-69).

"With respect to the second point, we have the practice of the primitive church so decidedly in our favor, that I am at a loss to conceive how a practice so repugnant to it, can have so generally prevailed as it has done, in almost all the Christian churches. The practice alluded to is, that of an individual assuming the exclusive exercise of the ministry; which is directly contrary to what the apostle recommends, as well as declares to be the practice of the church in early times. This appears clear from the fourteenth chapter of the first epistle to the Corinthians, where first addressing the believers in general, the Apostle thus expresses himself: 'Follow after charity, and desire spiritual gifts; but rather that ye may prophesy.' By this prophesying, he does not appear so much to mean the foretelling of future events, as the general purposes of the gospel ministry; . . 'Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the others judge. If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace: for ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and be comforted" (70-71).

Hard Copy (pages): 65-78

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: basis of authority; proselyting
Author: Joseph Harvey
Title of Book: The Banner of Christ Set Up
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Elizabethtown, NJ
Publisher: Edson Hart
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a sermon given at the inauguration of Reverend Hermon Daggett as Principal of the Foreign Mission School in Cornwall, Connecticut on May 6, 1818. Reverend Harvey was apparently the minister of a congregation in Goshen, Connecticut, but his denomination is unclear from the document.
Comment: The text of the sermon is fairly non-distinctive, and as such it becomes an excellent example of the proselyting language and mentality of the period. In particular, the author uses phrases which were common among contemporaneous discourses on preaching/missionary effort in which he implies the necessity of authority in ministerial pursuits. However, as with most of his contemporaries, the source and nature of that authority remains ambiguous.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "Other enterprizes have resulted from the mere ebullitions of fanaticism. Many have run without being sent, and by the vain projects of distempered zeal, have exposed the cause of Christ to reproach, and themselves to disaster.
"Such were the memorable crusades of the eleventh and twelfth centuries, in which the Holy Land was the idol of superstition, and the Infidels were to be driven into heaven by force of arms.
"But all these and similar attempts, could plead no authority from the word of God, and were therefore, merely the efforts of depravity under the cloak of religion" (6).
The attempt then, to instruct and christianize the heathen, is no chimera. It is no crusade nor papal mission for gold or power. It is the revealed will of God, and a prominent duty to which all Christians are bound by the express command of their Lord. "In its design, then, our enterprise bears the stamp of Divine authority" (8).

The call of Providence to any particular duty, must be learnt from a coincidence of circumstances, pointing the same way, rather than from an insulated fact" (9).

Length of Relevant Material: 9 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Christianization of the Old Testament
Author: Alvan Hyde
Title of Book: A Sermon Delivered at the Ordination of the Rev. Alvan Hyde, Junr.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Stockbridge, [MA]
Publisher: Charles Webster
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Published at the "special request of the Church and Society," the tract is the text of a sermon given by Reverend Hyde (presumably the inductee's father) at Reverend Hyde, Jr's, induction as pastor of the church in Geauga, Ohio. The senior Reverend Hyde was pastor of the church in Lee, Massachusetts.
Comment: The tract is an excellent example of the prevalent belief that some Old Testament prophets had had a foreknowledge of Christ. Isaiah is the most common and most notable example.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "The writer of the prophetic book [Isaiah], from which these words are selected, is called, by way of eminence, the evangelical prophet. He brings into view the character and work of the Saviour, and the nature of his kingdom, more frequently and more clearly than any of the prophets, mentioned in the Old Testament" (3).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Christianization of Old Testament; Jehovah
Author: Nathan Perkins
Title of Book: Sabbath School Catechism; Containing All the Chief Doctrines of Religion
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: Hartfort, CT
Publisher: Oliver D. Cooke
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: As explained in the title, the tract is designed as a model catechism for Sunday-school-aged children. The author, Reverend Perkins, was pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church.
Comment: The tract is composed in the form of questions and answers, which provide the researcher an excellent opportunity to consider the principal theological questions of the day. In the process of outlining the encompassing basic principles of Presbyterian theology, Reverend Perkins answers a question on the sanctity of the Sabbath. In so doing, he quotes a passage from the Old Testament (see excerpt) and attributes it to Christ. Though the reference is not clear, it may be an example of Christ as Jehovah in Protestant theology--at least it is an example of the contemporary ambiguity of the issue. Although the author mistakes the reference, the characterization of Christ as Jehovah remains.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "A.16. It is the indispensable duty of all people, to attend the Sabbath public worship, who are able. For Christ, as Lord of his people, has most plainly appointed it.-Deu. xii 15" (66).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages): 66
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Christianization of Old Testament; Old Testament as historical context for modern doctrines
Author: John Brown
Title of Book: A compendious view of natural and revealed religion
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: David Hogan
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: This publication is the first American printing of a late London edition. John Brown (1722-1787) was deceased at the time of this printing.
Comment: The theology of this tract appears to be orthodox Protestant--and is most likely Presbyterian--though there is some ambiguity. In a section which discusses the nature and necessity of certain sacraments, Brown indicates that all of the ordinances of both the Old and New Testaments are given of Christ and point toward him. The excerpt below is an excellent example of his belief in the continuity of the substance of the gospel throughout time. However, regarding specifics, Brown is explicit in his belief that the Old Testament ordinances have been superseded by the New Testament sacraments and that continued adherence to Old Testament forms is harmful.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "The Old and New Testament dispensations of the Covenant of Grace, agree, 1. In their Author, God in Christ, Heb. I.1. 2. In their matter; the Law and the Gospel being alway the substance of both, Psalm cxlvii. 19. Gal. iii. 8. Tit. ii. 11-14. iii. 8. Gal. v.6. 3. In the blessings offered and bestowed; --union with Christ, justification, adoption, regeneration, sanctification, spiritual comfort, and eternal glory, Job xix. 25. xxxiii. 24. Isa lxiii. 16. Ezek. xxxvi.26. 27. Psalm lxiii. 2-7. lxiii. 24--26. 1 Cor.i.30. iii.22. Rom. viii.29,30. 4. In requiring the same end, and the same exercise of faith, repentance, love, and new obedience, in attending their ordinances, Isa. lv. 1-7. Psalm xcvi. 6-8. lxxxix. 7. Matth. xi. 28, 29. Heb.x.22. 5. In their ordinances, having no spiritual efficacy of themselves to save men; and hence often least effectual when best dispensed, as by Moses, Isaiah, Christ, Paul, Deut. xxix. 4. Isa. vi. 9, 10. xlix. 45. liii.1. Acts xvii. 22-32. 6. In their being rendered effectual for salvation by the same means, viz. 1. The blessing of Christ, which includes his appointment of them for blessings to men, and his rendering them such by his almighty influence attending them, Exod. xx. 24. 2. The working of Christ's Spirit in preparing men for these ordinances, assisting them in their attendance on them, fixing the impression of their contents, inclining and enabling to a proper improvement of them, 1 Cor. iii.. 6, 7. xii. 13. The exercise of true faith correspondent with the influences of Christ and his Spirit in them,--in discerning that which God manifests,--in crediting that which God declares,--in receiving that which God offers,--and in improving God's manifestations, declarations, and gifts, to promote that holy obedience which he requires, Heb. iv.2. xi 6." (546-7 ).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Christianization of Old Testament; Old Testament as historical context for modern doctrines; ritual and ceremony

Author: John Brown

Title of Book: A compendious view of natural and revealed religion

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: David Hogan

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: This publication is the first American printing of a late London edition. John Brown (1722-1787) was deceased at the time of this printing.

Comment: The theology of this tract appears to be orthodox Protestant--and is most likely Presbyterian--though there is some ambiguity. In a section which discusses the nature and necessity of certain sacraments, Brown indicates that all of the ordinances of both the Old and New Testaments are given of Christ and point toward him. However, Brown is explicit in his belief that the Old Testament ordinances have been superseded by the New Testament sacraments and that continued adherence to Old Testament forms is harmful. The nature of his argument reveals an atmosphere in which some Christians felt these ancient ordinances (including the building of and worshiping in temples) were still valid.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The typical ceremonies of the Old Testament dispensation being more dark, carnal, confined, and representing Christ as to come, continued as it were, living and vigorous in their obligation till his incarnation;--languid and dying during his state of humiliation, and especially of his publick ministry;--dead after his death and resurrection; --deadly and hurtful after his full declaration of the gospel, and ruin of the Jewish Temple, Heb. vii.--x. Gal. ii--v.--It is evident that they are now abolished, 1. From many express declarations of Scripture, Acts xv. 18, 28. Gal. v. 2, 4, 5, 13. iv.11. Psal. cx. 4. 3. From the very nature of the many of these ceremonies. They were not good in themselves; pointed out Christ not as come, but to come; and excluded the Gentiles from the church, Heb. x.1. Col. ii. 17. Gal. iii. 24. V.1. Eph. ii. 12, 14, 15. 4. From the state of the Jewish nation, which for more than 1700 years past has rendered the observance of these ceremonies at Jerusalem, or in Canaan impossible, Luke xix. 43, 44. xxi. 20,24. Rom. xi. 7--15, 20.

"Objec. I. 'Several of these ordinances were appointed to 'continue for ever, Gen. xvii. 13. Exod. Xii. 24.' Answ. 1. For ever and everlasting often signify no more than a long time, or the whole time of a particular state of things. 2. These ceremonies continue forever in their antitypes."

"Objec. II. 'Christ's apostles marked a great regard to the 'Mosaick ceremonies.' Answ. Only for a time, and in so far as they thought necessary for the edification of the weak Jews converted to the Christian form of worship, Acts xv. Rom. xiv. 1 Cor. viii. Gal. ii. V. Heb. vii.--x.

"Objec. III. 'Priests, sacrifices, and temples, &c. are foretold 'to take place in the New Testament church, Ezek.xl.--xlviii, Mal.i.ii.' &c. Answ. These typical terms must be understood in a spiritual sense, agreeably to the nature of the gospel dispensation, 1 Pet. ii.5. Heb. xiii. 15, 16. Rom. xii.1."(547-8).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: church discipline; order

Author:

Title of Book: Report of a Committee of the General Assembly, Appointed for Revising the Form of Government, and the Forms of Process of the Presbyterian Church, In the United States of America

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: Thomas and William Bradford

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: "Ordered to be printed for the consideration of the presbyters," this report is similar to a ministerial handbook on church government. It is important to note that the report is only the suggestion of a committee to the General Assembly of Presbyters and may or may not have been ratified by that body.

Comment: The report often addresses the concept of congregational discipline. It recommends the circumspect use of excommunicatory powers, establishes guidelines for settling disputes and responding to criticism, and outlines the church judicatory system as it applies to both private and public offences.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "That our blessed Saviour, for the edification of the visible church, which is his body, hath appointed officers, not only to preach the gospel and administer the sacraments; but also to exercise discipline, for the preservation of both truth and duty:
and, that it is incumbent upon these officers, and upon the whole Church, in whose name they act, to censure, or cast out the erroneous and scandalous; observing in all cases, the rules contained the word of God" (4).

. . . .

"This is always the case, when an offence is wither so notorious and scandalous, as that no private steps would obviate it injurious effects. . .and there is obviously no way of removing the offence, but by means of a judicial process" (21-22).

. . . .

"The trial shall be fair, open and impartial. The witnesses shall be examined in the presence of the accused; or at least, after he shall have received due citation to attend; and he shall be permitted to ask any questions tending to his own exculpation. . .The person found guilty shall be admonished or rebuked, or excluded from church privileges, as the case shall appear to deserve; and this only until he give satisfactory evidence of repentance. . .Such gross offenders as will not be reclaimed by the private or public admonitions of the church, are to be cut off from its communion, agreeably to our Lord's direction, Matt., xviii. 17" (24).

Length of Relevant Material: 18 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 4, 20-37

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: covenant; covenant with Israel; Old Testament as historical context for modern doctrines; Christianization of the Old Testament; sacrament of the Lord's Supper; baptism; ritual and ceremony

Author: Lyman Beecher

Title of Book: A Sermon Delivered at the Installation of the Reverend Elias Cornelius

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Andover, MD

Publisher: Flagg and Gould

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: The pamphlet is simply the text a sermon delivered at installation of a minister. The denomination here considered is referred to as the First Church of Christ in Litchfield, Conn.
Comment: The tract commences with a survey of God's dealings with man and quickly introduces the concept of covenant. In discussing the role of the covenant that existed between God and Israel in pre-Christian time, it affirms our need to be God's covenant people today. Throughout this narrative, the author describes God's church, which has enjoyed continuity from Adamic times through the present. The groups and requirements of the different periods of the church change (e.g., circumcision to baptism, patriarchs to Israel, etc.) but that the mission of the church and the nature of its relationship to God has remained constant; therefore, the covenant that was made with Israel is the same covenant made by Christians upon partaking of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "When the church, in prospect of this judgement, was to be preserved, borne on the bosom of that deep, which swept away the ungodly, to whom was the work of preservation committed? It was committed to Noah, whom God had seen righteous before him, in that wicked generation. . . . "When the patriarchal form of the church was succeeded by the Jewish, the qualification of personal holiness was demanded. The profession, which the members of that church were required to make, is a profession of true religion. . . . "The profession which the Jewish church actually did make, is a profession of true religion. Moses is directed by the most high to say unto the people; 'If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me, above all people.' And when Moses proposed the above terms of divine favor, all the people answered together and said; "All that the Lord hath spoken will we do." In reference to a renewal of their covenant with God, Moses says to the Jewish church, 'Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people.' If this is not a profession of true religion, language is inadequate to the making of such a profession. In the time of Asa, the church covenanted again, to seek the Lord God of their fathers, with all their heart, and with all their soul. "And all Judah rejoiced at the oath; for they had sworn with all their heart, and sought him with their whole desire, and he was found of them.

. . . . .

"When the members of this same church, had, by crucifying the Lord of glory, filled up the measure of their sin, they were broken off by unbelief; and those who succeeded them in the same church, both Jews and Gentiles, stood by faith. Hence, when John the Baptist, in anticipation of the excision of the great body of the Jews from visible membership, came to prepare the way of the Lord before him; that preparation consisted, in forming subjects for the continuance of the Church, under her evangelical form.

. . . . .

"The sacrament of the Lord's Supper, is not merely a memorial of an absent friend and benefactor; but the token of a covenant, in which we avouch the Lord Jehovah to be our God; and which is renewed and sealed as often as we sit down at this table. . . . "The sacrament of baptism, as applied to infants, has the same reference to the perpetuity of the church by securing fidelity in the religious education of children, that the Lord's supper has, to the continuance and consummation of holiness, in the hearts of believers" (11-12, 14-16).

Length of Relevant Material: 16 pp.
Topics: creation
Author: Nathan Perkins
Title of Book: Sabbath School Catechism; Containing All the Chief Doctrines of Religion
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hartford, CT
Publisher: Oliver D. Cooke
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: As explained in the title, the tract is designed as a model catechism for sunday-school-aged children. The author, Reverend Perkins, was pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church.
Comment: The tract is composed in the form of questions and answers, which provide the researcher an excellent opportunity to consider the principal theological questions of the day. In the process of outlining the encompassing basic principles of Presbyterian theology, Reverend Perkins answers a question on the nature of creation. He seems to skirt the gist of the question, which regards creation ex nihilo. His attempt to avoid the difficulties of that question compares interestingly with Joseph Smith's statements on the issue.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "Q.3. Did God make all things out of nothing?"

"A.3. He made the heavens, and the earth; He made the whole universe, angels and men. By the word of His power He spake all things into existence-Neh. ix. 6. Thou even Thou art Lord alone, Thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens with all their host, the earth and all things that are therein, the seas and all things that are therein, and that preservest them all, and the host of heaven worshippeth Thee" (16-17).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages): 16-17
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: descent of authority; Apostles; priesthood and church
Author: Z. Y.
Title of Book: The Validity of Presbyterian Ordination. . .
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New Haven, CT
Publisher: A.H. Maltby
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Written in response to an Episcopalian tract which criticized Presbyterian ordinations for their lack of apostolic descent and proper hierarchy, the cited work is a brief defense of the Presbyterian practice.

Comment: The basic germ of the arguments here rehashed, is whether Bishops have an ecclesiastical power of a higher order than other ministers, by virtue of their apostolic connection. Episcopalians claim they do and are thereby rendered solely capable of performing ordinations; Presbyterians claim they do not, and that the preaching and duties of a common minister is the most valued work of the kingdom. The debate had an interesting bearing on the Mormon concept of priesthood, which seems to uniquely reconcile the two views.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "If Bishops, as you maintain, are an order of clergy superior to all other ministers, then the duties which pertain to them exclusively, must be of course the most dignified and important. But are you ready to say, that ruling a diocess [sic], administering confirmation and ordination are higher and more important duties than dispensing the word of eternal life and the seals of the everlasting covenant? What, the word and sacraments inferior to mere rites and ceremonies? Surely, no protestant will admit this; besides, where is your proof, what passage of holy writ will you summon to your aid? Can you point me to one? I am fully persuaded you cannot. 'Preaching and administering the sacraments then are the highest acts of ministerial authority, they are far above ordination and government, as the end is more excellent than the means; as the substance is more important than the form: and if presbyters be authorized, as all agree, to perform these functions, it follows that they are the highest order of gospel ministers; those who are empowered to execute the most dignified and the most useful duties pertaining to the ministerial office, can have no superiors in that office.'"

"Indeed, let any one look into the lives of the Apostles, as delineated in the Acts and their epistles, and persuade himself if he can, that they acted in the capacity of diocesan Bishops; and that this was the great business of their lives. Where was the diocess of Paul, of Peter, of Matthew, or of John? To intimate as you have done, (p. 30) that they were diocesan Bishops, without being placed over particular dioceses, is a plain contradiction; for how can a Bishop rule over a diocess to which he sustains no relation? Do you say he exercises the supreme power in the church? But what is this supreme power? Is it authority over other ministers, who preach and administer the sacraments? Then I demand his warrant (for the Apostolic commission, from which he pretends to derive his authority, gives none,) or is it the supreme power of preaching, administering sacraments and ordination? But our ministers possess this power, by virtue, as we have seen of the Apostolic commission, precisely to the same office which our ministers now hold; and if this does not establish their identity of order, I know not what can."

"The question is not, by what names they were called, but with what powers they were invested? And whether they were commissioned or constituted Apostles or Presbyters, or Prophets or Evangelists, one thing is certain, viz. They were commissioned and empowered to preach the gospel, administer the sacraments, and ordain; but nothing more" (7,8,9).

Length of Relevant Material: 16 pp.
Topics: descent of authority; Apostles; priesthood and church; revelation, spiritual gifts
Author: Z. Y.
Title of Book: The Validity of Presbyterian Ordination.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New Haven, CT
Publisher: A.H. Maltby
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Written in response to an Episcopalian tract that criticized a Presbyterian sermon, which explained the mode and nature of their ordinations, for a lack of apostolic descent and proper hierarchy, the cited work is a brief defense of the Presbyterian practice.
Comment: The basic germ of the arguments here rehashed, is wether Bishops have an ecclesiastical power of a higher order than other ministers, by virtue of their apostolic connection. The Presbyterian claim is that the office of aconitue after the demise of the original twelve. In clarifying this argument, which the author thought was misstated by his counterpart, he indicates that it was the inspiration which was temporary, not the authority.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "I think Sir, that in a number of instances you have greatly mistaken and consequently misrepresented the real sentiments of your antagonist. To prove this, let two or three examples suffice. He had said (speaking of the extraordinary character of the apostles) among other things, 'and under the guidance of inspiration to organize churches.' In remarking on these words, you leave out entirely the first clause, 'under the guidance of inspiration,' and represent him as maintaining that 'the capacity of organizing churches was extraordinary.' Now what can be more unfair? This is not the sentiment conveyed in the passage, which is abundantly evinced from a bare inspection of it" (17).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages): 17
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: divine mission of the United States
Author: Layman Junior [William Bigelow]
Title of Book: *A Letter to "A Layman" in Reply To his "Letter to Rev. Mr. Channing."
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1819?
Nature of Source: Composed in the form of a letter, the tract attempts to defend the Unitarian sermon of Reverend Channing which had been attacked by the Trinitarian views of a previous letter.
Comment: The letter to which this tract responds appears to have attacked Rev.
Channing on the issue of Unitarianism. The original letter, as excerpted in the tract in question, borrows typical Trinitarian language and reasons to accuse the Reverend of denyng the divinity of Christ by making him distinct from and subordinate to the Father. The letter in response affirms and defends Reverend Channing's position on the basis of both reason and scripture. In the process of this defense, the author proclaims that the United States had been prepared as land where such backward doctrines (e.g., Trinitarianism) can be stripped and purged from Christianity.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "This land was destined by Heaven to be the first, that should assert and obtain civil and religious liberty and is destined, I am confident, to be the place, where Christianity shall be stript of the dark mysterious attire, with which she has been clothed and deformed for centuries, and shall appear in a plain, simple apparel. . . " (7).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: divine mission of the United States
Author: Lyman Beecher
Title of Book: A Sermon Delivered at the Installation of the Reverend Elias Cornelius
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Andover, MD
Publisher: Flagg and Gould
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The pamphlet is simply the text a sermon delivered at installation of a minister. The denomination here considered is referred to as the First Church of Christ
in Litchfield, Conn.
Comment: The tract commences with a survey of God's dealings with man and quickly introduces the concept of covenant. In discussing the role of the covenant that existed between God and Israel in pre-Christian time, it affirms our need to be God's covenant people today. In the process, Rev. Beecher addresses the responsibilities of lawmakers in a democracy to allow and encourage the citizens to maintain that covenant relationship.
As part of this discussion, the author calls upon government to legislate in favor of institutional Christianity while still remaining uninvolved in the theology or practice of the various churches. Though never state explicitly, the discussion clearly deals with the United States and the idea is presented that the U.S. form of government was inspired in order to further God's work.
Researcher: David Holland
The next proof which Mr. P. alleges in support of endless misery is, that the scriptures affirm that their punishment shall be everlasting. I am surprised that a gentleman of Mr. P.’s probable learning and reading should have come forward with this old hackneyed argument. He cannot be insensible, that this word, as well as its correspondents, is equivocal in its signification; and may be taken for a limited as well as an endless duration. This is peculiarly the case with the original worlds from which the words everlasting, eternal, &c. are rendered. As this subject is generally understood by all who have ever taken an interest in this controversy, I shall dismiss it from this place” (36).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages): 36
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: endowment
Author: Charles Chauncey
Title of Book: The Validity of Presbyterian Ordination Asserted and Maintained
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher: Richard Draper, Thomas Leverett
Date of Publication: 1762
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a discourse given by Dr. Chauncey at the Dudleyian-Lecture, at the Harvard-College in Cambridge, May 12. 1762.

Comment: The discussion is very similar to defenses of Presbyterian ordination which appeared after the publication of Dr. Chauncey's lecture. In particular, sermons and tracts of this genre contend that there was a parity among minister of the primitive church, and that, therefore, Presbyters have the power to ordain, while Episcopalian bishops are usurpers. In explaining the conferral of authority, the author uses the term "endowment" to described an issue of power. Though the context differs widely from Joseph Smith's use of the term, the association of the term as associated with power warrants consideration.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "The give us abundant reason to believe, that these pastors of this one order were endowed particularly with the power of ordination, instances whereof they have left upon sacred record" (46-47).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: God's purpose in creation
Author: Nathan Perkins
Title of Book: Sabbath School Catechism; Containing All the Chief Doctrines of Religion
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hartford, CT
Publisher: Oliver D. Cooke
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: As explained in the title, the tract is designed as a model catechism for sunday-school-aged children. The author, Reverend Perkins, was pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church.
Comment: The tract is composed in the form of questions and answers, which provide the researcher an excellent opportunity to consider the principal theological questions of the day. In the process of outlining the encompassing and basic principles of Presbyterian theology, Reverend Perkins answers a question on God's purpose in creation. His answer provides interesting comparisons and contrasts with the language and content of Moses 1:39.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Q.5. What is God's last end in the creation, and government of the universe?"

"A.5. God's last end in the creation and government of the universe is His own glory. As he is infinitely the greatest of all beings, so it is infinitely fit that His own glory should be his last end, in all His purposes and works" (17).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages): 17

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: God; glory; afterlife; visions

Author: [Elias Boudinout]

Title of Book: Memoirs on the Life of the Rev. William Tennent

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: D. Dickenson

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: A narrative composed by Elias Boudinout, the book includes the details of the life of William Tennent coupled with the author's didactic commentary. Three editions of the narrative were printed during 1919.

Comment: William Tennent was a Presbyterian cleric who had a near death experience as a young man. During this experience, which lasted for three days, Reverend Tennent had a vision of heaven in which he saw the glory of God and the choirs of angels. His description provides an interesting contrast to the Latter-day Saint conception of God, heaven and glory.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "'While I was conversing with my brother,' said he, 'on the state of my soul, and the fears I had entertained for my future welfare, I found myself, in an instant, in another state of existence, under the direction of a superior Being, who ordered me to follow him. I was accordingly wafted along, I know not how, till I beheld at a distance an ineffable glory, the impression of which on my mind, it is impossible to communicate to mortal man. I immediately reflected on my happy change, and I thought--Well blessed be God! I am safe at last, notwithstanding all my fears. I saw an innumerable host of happy beings, surrounding the inexpressible glory, in acts of adoration and joyous worship; but I did not see any bodily shape or representation in the glorious appearance" (10-11).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Topics: great and abominable church, priesthood and church
Author: William Howitt
Title of Book: A Popular History of Priestcraft in All Ages and Nations
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: London
Publisher: Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange
Date of Publication: 1846
Nature of Source: The cited work is an extended tract, published in England. The edition at hand is the eighth. The first edition was probably published around 1844.
Comment: The cited work is a polemic discussion of the historical development of priestcraft from an apparently congregationalist minister. In the process of attacking priestcraft, the author dismisses heathen, Jewish, Roman and Anglican priests as pretenders and usurpers. One of the priestly characteristics which the author opposes is sacerdotalism. His criticism is of importance to any researcher considering the nature of the Latter-day Saint priesthood and hierarchical structure. His diatribe against the Catholic church, speaks to the intense anti-papalism, anti-clericalism present in Joseph's Smith's environment.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "Had [Satan] devised a system for himself, he could not have pitched upon one like popery;--a system which, pretending to be that of Christ, suppressed the Bible;--extinguished knowledge,--locked up the human mind,--amused it with the most ludicrous babbles,--and granted official licenses to commit all species of crimes and impurity. Satan himself became enthroned on the Seven Hills in the habit of a priest, and grinned his broadest delight amidst the public and universal reign of ignorance, hypocrisy, venality, and lust.
"As if the popes had studied the pagan hierarchies, they brought into concentrated exercise all their various engines of power, deception and corruption. They could not assert, indeed as the heathen had done, that they were of a higher origin than the rest of mankind; and therefore entitled to sit as kings, to choose all kings, and to rule over kings; for it was necessary to preserve some allegiance to the doctrines of Christianity;--but they too ground quite as effective. They declared themselves the authorized viceregents of Heaven. . . ." (66).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: infant baptism; God; humanity; Old Testament as historical context for modern doctrines
Author: John Brown
Comment: The theology of this tract appears to be orthodox Protestant--and is most likely Presbyterian--though there is some ambiguity. In a section which discusses the nature and necessity of certain sacraments, Brown indicates that all of the ordinances of both the Old and New Testaments are given of Christ and point toward him; although the old sacraments have been superseded by the new. In the process, with typical Anglican legality and reason, Brown poses and answers many of the then current objections to the Anglican practice of infant baptism; furthermore, he vindicates the Anglican practice of restricting baptism to the children of "visible believers". The discussion reveals a great deal about the nature of God and man. In addition, Brown uses references to the Old Testament practice of infant circumcision in order to defend infant baptism.

Excerpt (pages): [Obsext and Anso written in Greek] "Obsext.III 'Infants can receive no benefits from baptism.' Anso.1 If parents can settle upon them an earthly inheritance, what can hinder God to settle upon them an heavenly felicity? What can hinder him to bestow upon them all the blessings represented in baptism? 2. If they receive benefit by circumcision, why may they not receive as much from baptism? And can they not be laid under obligations to serve God by the one as well as by the other?" (539).

"Obsex.I 'Children ought never to suffer for their parents' sins.' Anso.1. Must then all the infants of the heathens, who are born as innocent as those of Christians, be baptized? 2. If no children ought to be excluded from admission to the church for their parent's sins, the Jews must still be the peculiar people of God, as well as in the days of Moses, David, &c. 3. Does not god, in manifold instances, visit the iniquities of the parents on their children, Exod. xx. 5.? 4. The withholding baptism from the infants of wicked parents is no proper punishment of these infants; but a not giving them that to which they have no right, and which, if given them, would do them no good, but hurt. 5. If magistrates may take occasion to execute both father and son, who were guilty of preceding treason,--from the father's continued repetition of his treason, why may not God justly take occasion, from the wickedness of parents, to punish their children as themselves deserve by their original sin. 6. Must all children, even of Christians, be put into possession of inheritances to which their parents never had any right; or which they had prodigally squandered away? How absurd and wicked the pretence!" (451-2).

Hard Copy (pages):
The Columbian Star and Christian Index is a Philadelphia-based periodical created by a Baptist organization for an audience of Baptist adherents. Edited by W.T. Brantly, its content is of both general and theological interest. The periodical became known as Christian Index after 1830.

Comment: The piece gives a rather limited description of Jewish customs in London, which the author describes as "applicable to that singular people in other parts of the world." According to the author, the Jews are an apostate and fallen people; however, he claims that the modern Christian can benefit from a consideration of both their theological shortcomings as well as "the spirit of liberality for which Judaism is remarkable." The author also refers to certain Jewish "rites" from which Christians can learn--though an explanation of those rites is not clear in the body of the article. At the close of the piece the author implies an imminent conversion and restoration of the Jews (see second excerpt).

Excerpt: "Modern Judaism is at best a wreck-a ruin; its adherents cling to a shadow, not a substance; they bow at an alter, but on it the heavenly fire glows not; they visit a temple, but the deity who once presided there is gone. The Christian, however, must be interested, and he may be reproved and stimulated by some of its rites. . . " (4)

. . . . .

"Who, as he peruses these details, will not see that 'blindness in part hath happened unto Israel,' and who will not pray 'let the time to favor them, yea, the set time soon come''" (7).

Length: 6 cols.

Hard Copy (pages): 4-7

Date when photocopying was completed:

Topics: Jesus Christ
Author: Samuel Whitman
Title of Book: Christ, the Son of God before he was made Flesh, A Sermon, the substance of which was preached at Cummington, October 5, 1819.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Goshen, MA
Publisher: Samuel Whitman
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract consists of the substance of a sermon preached at "a session of the Mountain Association;" however, the text has apparently been altered somewhat from the original oral version. The self-publication of the tract may indicate the importance which the topic held for the author.

Comment: The author takes Matthew 22:41-42 as his text and asks, "What think ye of Christ? Whose son is he?" He proceeds to document Christ's premortal existence and role in creation. The document warrants a comparison with the LDS doctrine on Christ's premortal role. The sermon establishes Christ's divinity and attempts to explicate his relationship with the father, in which he affirms Protestant Trinitarian doctrine.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "It is evident from Scripture that Christ was a Divine person. In him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead. Godhead means Divinity. He was just like God in his essence: being the brightness of God's glory, and the express image of his substance. . . . The Word is the person, no doubt, whom God addressed, when he said, "Let us make him in our image after our likeness " (5-6).

. . . .

If what we have heard be correct, we are led to doubt the truth of the doctrine of pre-existence. It is, however the opinion of some sincere Christians, and even learned men, men who have studied the Scriptures diligently, that the human soul of Christ pre-existed. They suppose that the human soul of Christ existed before the foundations of the world were laid; before God said, Let there be light: and there was light. They supposed the soul to have been created and fitted to occupy the body which was conceived in the womb and born of the virgin Mary. But whether his soul existed prior to the birth of the body, in any other sense or manner that the souls of men pre-exist, is a question" (15).

. . . .

"It has already been shown that the Father and the Son are two distinct persons: Christ therefore said of the Jews: 'They have both seen and hated both me and my Father.' He said also: 'Ye believe in God, believe also in me." They are, however, so mysteriously united in nature and essence as to be but one. Each one of the two possesses all the perfections of each" (21).

Hard Copy (pages): 1-24
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: Jesus Christ; Melchizedek priesthood; covenant
Author: Samuel Whitman
Title of Book: Christ, the Son of God before he was made Flesh, A Sermon, the substance of which was preached at Cummington, October 5, 1819.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Goshen, MA
Publisher: Samuel Whitman
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract consists of the substance of a sermon preached at "a session of the Mountain Association;" however, the text has apparently been altered somewhat from the original oral version. The self-publication of the tract may indicate the importance which the topic held for the author.

Comment: The author takes Matthew 22:41-42 as his text and asks, "What think ye of Christ? Whose son is he?" He proceeds to document Christ's premortal existence and role in creation. The document warrants a comparison with the LDS doctrine on Christ's premortal role. The sermon establishes Christ's divinity and attempts to explicate his relationship with the father, in which it affirms Protestant Trinitarian doctrine. In this process, the author makes a number of references to Christ in relation to Melchizedek and the priesthood.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The anointed God was not only a Prophet, but a 'Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec.' He must be a Priest in order to accomplish his part of the covenant of redemption between him and his Father in eternity" (8).

"The learned Dr. Cave considers Melchisedec as a type of Christ. And by the type, he gives us his idea of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. 'He was,' says he, 'referring to Hebrews vii.3. without genealogy, without having any pedigree extant upon record: whence the ancient Syriack version truly expresses the sense of the whole passage thus; whose neither father nor mother are written among the generations, that is, the genealogies of the ancient patriarchs. And in this he eminently typified Christ, of whom this is really true: he is without father in respect of his human nature, begotten only of a pure virgin; without mother in respect of his Divinity, being begotten of his Father, before all worlds, by an eternal and ineffable generation (17).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 8, 17

Topics: Jesus Christ; three separate beings in Godhead
Author: [J. Brown]
Title of Book: A Letter to the Reverend William E. Channing
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher: James Loring
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract is published in the form of a letter from a discontented layman to Reverend Channing, in response to the latter's recent Unitarian sermon on the subordination of Christ to the Father.
Comment: The argument contained in this letter defends the doctrine of the trinity and the unequivocal divinity of Jesus. The letter is representative of the larger debate between Trinitarians and Unitarians concerning the nature and role of Christ and is indicative of the controversy over this issue, which was current on the eve of the restoration. Reverend Channing was defended in a later refutation of this particular letter, written by William Bigelow (under the pseudonym Layman Junior) and entitled A Letter to "A Layman" in Reply To his "Letter to Rev. Mr. Channing."

Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "The friends of Christ who have read your sermon, who were grieved or offended by it, wondering at the temerity of its author in this Christian land, may again see that they were not offended without cause, we cite the noxious passages.--'We object to the doctrine of the Trinity, that it subverts the unity of God.' Now, Sir, you know we are fully assured of this unity. We adore it. Our ideas of the Trinity do not take from it, but fully confirm it. 'Trinity in Unity and Unity in Trinity['], is the long established doctrine of all the Christian churches.--And do we hold as we say,'Each of these persons, as described by the theologians, has his own particular consciousness, will, and perceptions?['] What acceptable divine ever asserted this? We never met with such an assertion. Our belief is, that whatsoever the Father willeth, the Son willeth, and whatsoever the Son willeth, the Holy Ghost willeth; that there is no particular, or self-respective acts of will and perception assignable to each person; because it is written, 'Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever de doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise.' And of the Spirit, Christ speaketh, "When he the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth, for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak" (5).

"Christ is called or truly named God in Holy Scripture" (16).
Length of Relevant Material: 16 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):

---

Topics: Jesus Christ; three separate beings in Godhead
Author: Layman Junior [William Bigelow]
Title of Book: A Letter to "A Layman" in Reply To his "Letter to Rev. Mr. Channing."

---

Comment: The letter to which this tract responds was published the same year by J. Brown and entitled A Letter to the Reverend William E. Channing. In this former letter, Mr. Brown attacked Rev. Channing on the issue of Unitarianism and its corollary doctrine on the nature of Christ. The former letter borrows typical Trinitarian language and reasons to accuse the Reverend of denying the divinity of Christ by making him distinct from and subordinate to the Father. In response, the letter here in question affirms and defends Reverend Channing's position on the basis of both reason and scripture. The tract is indicative of the kind of doctrinal debated over the nature of God and Christ which would have been occurring on the eve of the restoration.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "I have read this sermon with attention and delight, and as far as I can understand Mr. C. on this subject, he does not doubt the authenticity of this doctrine [trinity] because it is above human reason, but because he conceives it contrary to human reason. And so, sir, it appears to me. Common sense and reason assure us, that Omnipotence itself cannot cause a being to exist and not exist at the same time; and it appears to my weak understanding, that to say one person can be three persons, and three persons one person is an equal absurdity: and were such an idea expressed in the Bible as strongly as it is in some creeds and catechisms of mere human invention, I must confess, I should think it would outweigh all the evidence, internal and external, which that sacred book has in its favor, as a divine revelation" (1-2).

. . . . .

"Jehovah in reality is the only saviour. But others are called saviours in the subordinate sense. Jesus is called the saviour of the world; but 'him God exalted to be a Saviour.' Washington, in a vastly inferior sense, is called the saviour of his country; but he was raised up and fitted for this office by the Supreme Being" (4).

In referring to passages (particularly the baptismal prayer) of the Bible which seem to combine the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, the author explains, "I can reply to this by a familiar comparison, which, I hope, I make with the most profound reverence for the Supreme Being. Were a person appointed to receive a stranger, or foreigner, or new-comer into the United States, as a citizen, and the form of admission were, "I receive you, in the name of the President, Congress and People of the United States;" would it be understood that, the receiver meant, that these three were one being or person? The circumstance of three names being mentioned together, I believe, is not a proof that the three persons, designated by those names, are either the same, or equal in power and glory" (5).

Length of Relevant Material: 8 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Jews; restoration of Israel to knowledge, to their lands, to favor with God

Author: Levi Parsons

Title of Book: The Dereliction and Restoration of the Jews

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Boston, MA

Publisher: Samuel T. Armstrong

Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Preached in Park-street Church on October 31, 1819, this sermon was given as a farewell to the missionaries intended for Palestine. The author, Levi Parsons, was one of the departing missionaries. The exact denomination of the mission is unclear.

Comment: The tract describes the past, present and future states of the Jewish people. It seems to retain a belief in their literal restoration to both their lands, and their special relationship to God. Particular reference is made to the Abrahamic covenant. The tone of the sermon is unmistakably sympathetic. It appears that this restoration is contingent upon a Jewish conversion to Christ.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Afterwards they shall return, be reinstated in all the privileges included in the covenant of Abraham, and be again a peculiar people, a royal priesthood, a chosen generation" (4)

. . . . .

"[A primitive Jew would consider the prophesies and say] 'My brethren are to go again into captivity, so long a captivity that it will be said of Jerusalem, it has been always waste; they shall be cast out from God, excluded from all their religious and civil privileges even till the latter days; then shall they return to the land which was given to our Father Abraham. God himself will dwell with them, and establish with them an everlasting covenant which shall never be forgotten.'

"Place the same predictions in the hands of a Christian, who has the advantage of looking back upon the accomplishment of one of them [the first diaspora and restoration]. Does he object to a literal interpretation of the latter, because there is figurative language attached to it. He finds figurative language in the other; yet the Jews did literally return. Would not an impartial examination of these two predictions, recorded in precisely the same terms, constrain him to adopt the sentiment, that as one was literally fulfilled, the other must be. The outcasts of Israel will yet be gathered to their own land" (10-11).

Length of Relevant Material: 20 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

_______________________________________________________

Topics: lay priesthood

Author: Nehemiah Dodge

Title of Book: A Description of Gospel Ministers, and their Internal Call

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Exeter, NH

Publisher: Josiah Richardson

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: Written by the pastor of the Baptist Church in Lebanon, Connecticut, this tract was originally intended as a "circular letter" for internal church use only. However, the project was of such a size, the decision was made to publish.

Comment: The tract is intended to enable the sincere believer to distinguish between ministers "whom God never called" and those who are "called and owned of God in his cause." In so doing, the author's perspective on priesthood and authority is revealed. The author closes his treatise with a defense of the paid ministry and admonishes members of the congregation to be generous with their support of the clergy. In this defence of the paid ministry he outlines the reasons for paying the clergy. One such reason seems particularly relevant to the converse view of Mormonism.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "In the 2nd place, the minister is almost rendered useless in the world:
for dividing his attention between ministerial duties, and secular avocations, it is quicklu found that half a man is worth but little in any place" (14).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: lay priesthood

Author:

Title of Book: Report of a Committee of the General Assembly, Appointed for Revising the Form of Government, and the Forms of Process of the Presbyterian Church, In the United States of America

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: Thomas and William Bradford

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: "Ordered to be printed for the consideration of the presbyters," this report is similar to a ministerial handbook on church government. It is important to note that the report is only the suggestion of a committee to the General Assembly of Presbyters and may or may not have been ratified by that body.

Comment: The report thoroughly addresses the issue of requisite ministerial credentials and behavior. The focus on formal study and scholarship provides an interesting contrast to the sentiments expressed on the issue in Doctrine and Covenants, sections 4 and 20.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Because it is highly reproachful to religion, and dangerous to the church, to intrust the holy ministry to weak and ignorant men, the Presbytery shall try each candidate, as to his knowledge of the Latin language; and of the original languages in which the Holy Scriptures were written. They shall also examine him, on the arts and sciences; on theology, natural and revealed; and on ecclesiastical history. . . .That the most effectual measures may be taken to guard against the admission of insufficient men to the sacred office, it is recommended, that no candidate, except in extraordinary cases, be licenced, unless, after his having completed the usual course of academical studies, he shall have studied divinity at least two years, under some approved divine or professor of theology" (12-13).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Nature of Source: As explained in the title, the tract is designed as a model catechism for Sunday-school-aged children. The author, Reverend Perkins, was pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church.

Comment: The tract is composed in the form of questions and answers, which provide the researcher an excellent opportunity to consider the principal theological questions of the day. In the process of outlining the encompassing and basic principles of Presbyterian theology, Reverend Perkins answers a number of questions on the nature and mode of baptism. The views expressed on the mode of baptism are uniquely non-dogmatic and flexible as the author indicates that any common method is valid. He does close, however, with a defense of the superiority of sprinkling on grounds of both convenience and symbolism.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Q.13. What do the scriptures teach us concerning the way, in which Christian baptism may be administered, and be valid?"
"A.13. Three ways have been practised by the Christian Church, of all denominations; dipping the body all over under water; pouring water on the face; and sprinkling water on the face. Of all these ways of administering Christian Baptism, sprinkling water on the face, will be allowed to be the most convenient. The word baptise, may justly, as the christian world have judged, signify either of these ways. Sprinkling water on the face, most accurately and nearly, as a sign, represents the thing signified-the shedding down the purifying influence of the Holy Ghost, and sprinkling of the blood of Christ. But either of the ways is valid" (66).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Title of Book: Ministerial Parity; or An Equality of Grade, Office, and Authority, Among the Christian Clergy . . . .

Title of Article:

Place of Publication: Winchester, VA
Publisher: J. McGlassin
Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a sermon given in Winchester at the opening of the synod of Virginia, on October, 21, 1819. Reverend Hill was the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Winchester. The tract also includes some prefatory remarks which indicate that the sermon engendered some opposition among the Episcopalian denominations.

Comment: The author endeavors to prove, in a somewhat ambiguous manner, that there should be no distinction or rank among the ministers of the gospel. He appears to direct his comments toward the Episcopalian denominations of his day, which would have been noted for the diversity of ranks among their clergy. In so doing, he attacks the Episcopalian belief that the Christian church was patterned after the Jewish Temple, which entailed three different levels of ecclesiastical authority; namely, High Priests, Priests and Levites. His argument against such offices provides an interesting backdrop to Joseph Smith's reintroduction of them. The passage also vindicates the Presbyterian form of ministerial parity by comparing it to the nature of synagogue worship, which the author claims was a more likely model for the Christian church.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The argument drawn from the Jewish Temple, in which it is said there were three orders of ministers, viz. the High Priest, the Priests and the Levites. "This is seized upon with great avidity, to prove the same number of orders in the christian church.
"The order established in the synagogue, was decidedly such as that which prevails in the Presbyterian church. This is generally granted by prelatists themselves; and hence their great anxiety to resort to the temple service. There were in the synagogues a presiding Elder, whose office it was to expound the scriptures, after being read, and to teach and instruct members generally; there was also a bench of Elders, who in connection with the teacher or Pastor, exercised discipline and government; and there were Deacons, whose duty it was to take care of the property of the synagogue, attend to its temporal concerns, and provide for the poor. " (53).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: opposition in all things; agency

Author:

Title of Book: Tracts Designed to Illustrate and Enforce the Most Important Doctrines of the Gospel

Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New Haven, CT
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1818
Nature of Source: With no author or publisher listed, the cited work is a compilation of four tracts which discuss three major points of doctrine: atonement, agency, biblical sufficiency and ordination. From the context of the work, the author appears to be Presbyterian.
Comment: In the tract entitled "Man, a free-agent without the aid of Divine Grace," the author defends the reality of man's moral agency--independent of the atonement. In so doing, he touches on issues of opposition and choice, which make for an interesting comparison to Latter-day Saint views on the issues.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "We challenge any man to adduce one passage from the Bible, which detached or in its connection, wither declares or implies that mankind lost their free-agency in Adam, and have it restored to them by Jesus Christ. . . . Free-agency consists in the faculties of understanding, conscience and will; by which I intend, those powers, capacities, or qualities of the soul of man by which he is enabled to see the difference between good and evil, or to love one and hate the other" (17).
. . . .
"Fifthly, according to this scheme [which contends that man has no real agency independent of grace ] the posterity of Adam needed no Saviour, to atone for actual sin. As they could not have committed actual sin without being free-agents, and as they could not have been free-agents without a Saviour, they needed no Saviour to atone for actual sin" (29).
Length of Relevant Material: 18 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: order
Author: Lyman Beecher
Title of Book: A Sermon Delivered at the Installation of the Reverend Elias Cornelius
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Andover, MD
Publisher: Flagg and Gould
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The pamphlet is simply the text a sermon delivered at installation of a minister. The denomination here considered is referred to as the First Church of Christ in Litchfield, Conn.
Comment: The tract commences with a survey of God's dealings with man and quickly introduces the concept of covenant. In discussing the role of the covenant that existed between God and Israel in pre-Christian time, it affirms our need to be God's covenant people today. In the process, Rev. Beecher addresses the responsibilities of lawmakers in a democracy to allow and encourage the citizens to maintain that covenant relationship. The argument evolves into a defense of the desirability of established creeds. His major assertion is that God is a God of order; therefore, a systematic explanation of theology is in keeping with the character of God.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "It is fashionable, I am aware, to decry system in theology; but why the Most High should be pleased to observe order in the government of the natural world, so as to lay the foundation for demonstration and system in philosophy, and at the same time, be supposed to govern his moral kingdom by laws obscurely revealed, including no general principles, connected by no dependencies, and excluding the possibility of a system in theology, is an enigma for those to explain who choose to deny creeds, and to speak contemptuously of system in theology" (31).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Topics: priesthood, basis of authority
Author: James Gardner, (,)
Title of Book: The Faiths of the World vol. II
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: London and Edinburgh
Publisher: A. Fullarton and Co
Date of Publication: 1858
Nature of Source: The cited work serves as a theological dictionary and defines both groups and doctrines. The author of the text appears to be Congregationalist, though there is some ambiguity.

Comment: The dictionary here considered is comprehensive and scholarly, though slightly polemic in its tone. In discussing the priesthood, the author dismisses the notion of sacerdotalism and ritualism, and offers establishes Congregationalist notion, found in the excerpt below, as the most logical and scriptural. In so doing, the author betrays the general opinions and assumptions of his age. These opinions contrast sharply with the thought and practice of Joseph Smith, in that Joseph restored a sacerdotal and hierarchical priesthood. However, Joseph also distributed that priesthood to all of his congregation. The author articulates the sentiment of his contemporaries in rejecting any power inherent in the act of ordination, aside from the symbolic.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "In the view of the congregationalist the pastoral tie is considered as resting, in subordination to the Great Head of the Church, on the call of the church members, and ordination is simply the formal recognition of the tie thus formed. This view of the matter is diametrically opposed to the doctrine of the Romish church, which regards orders as a holy sacrament, conveying an indelible character, flowing down by regular succession from the apostles" (572). Elsewhere, the author denounces the heresy of separating "a particular priesthood from the universal and ordinary calling of all Christians" (548).

Length of Relevant Material: The articles under the headings "ordination" (572) and "clergy" (548) are contained on a single page each.

Hard Copy (pages):

---

Topics: priesthood, basis of authority
Author: Winthrop S. Hudson (eds. Richard Neibuhr and Daniel D. Williams)
Title of Book: The Ministry in Historical Perspectives
Title of Article: "The Ministry in the Puritan Age"
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: Harper and Brothers
Date of Publication: 1956
Nature of Source: The cited work is a compilation of essays on the historical development of the Christian ministry. The essay in question concerns the period leading up to the restoration.
Comment: The evolution, which Winthrop here describes, from priest to minister becomes significant in the light of Joseph Smith's inauguration of a sacerdotal priesthood which retains the obligations of ministry. Although the passage refers to events in the 1600's, they have a direct bearing on the general anti-clerical sentiment in nineteenth century America.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The sacerdotal aspect of the ministry was not in express words disallowed, but it was so effectually obscured as to fall out of general acceptance. The word 'priest' remained, but it was carefully explained by Archbishop Whitgift to mean no more than presbyter, and it was carefully avoided in official documents. Except when referring to the Ordinal, the Canons of 1604 invariably employ the word 'minister' instead of 'priest.' The suggestion of the official usage was emphasized by the destruction of the alters in the parish, . . . and the abandonment of the Eucharistic vestments.' Formerly the clergy had been 'priests,' finding their primary responsibility at the alter; now they were 'ministers,' with preaching and pastoral care as their pre-eminent duties" (180). [H.H. Henson, The Church of England (London, 1939), 149.]

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Complete:

---

Topics: priesthood, basis of authority
Author: Winthrop S. Hudson (eds. Richard Neibuhr and Daniel D. Williams)
Title of Book: The Ministry in Historical Perspectives
Title of Article: "The Ministry in the Puritan Age"
The cited work is a compilation of essays on the historical development of the Christian ministry. The essay in question concerns the period leading up to the restoration.

Comment: The following excerpt, although principally concerning the seventeenth century, sheds some light on the sentiment prevalent in Joseph Smith's day which began to see ordination as optional and symbolic, rather than sacerdotal.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Thus John Milton said that it is 'the inward calling of God that makes a minister.' Milton went on to insist that 'the ministerial gifts' need to be 'manured' and improved by 'painful study,' but there were others who were to suggest that the inward call itself was sufficient" (205).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "In the great bulk of American Protestantism an 'evangelical' understanding of the faith had gradually supplanted the traditional sacramental outlook. With these great shifts extending over two centuries and a half and culminating in America in the decade of the 1850's, both the conception of the ministry and the practical life of the minister were metamorphosed into ways of thinking and ways of doing that were different from anything previously known in Christendom" (208).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Throughout the adaptation to the exigencies of the new situation faced in America, one institutional development stands out as having tremendous influence on the conception and practice of the ministry, namely, the tendency in all the transplanted churches of whatever polity to gravitate toward an actual 'congregationalism' or localism. . . .

"The minister was likely to be completely isolated from the sustaining power and status-giving context of church, and, thrown into intimate face-to-face contact with his lay people, made dependent upon his own character and something as intangible to most colonist as 'the Spirit' for whatever prestige he could gain and leadership he could give. . . .

"In 1697 the Archbishop of Canterbury expressed surprise that the clergymen might be "removed like domestic servants by a vote of the Vestry," but obviously neither he nor anyone could do anything about it. [Elizabeth Davidson, The Establishment of the English Church in Continental American Colonies (Durham, 1936), 19.]

. . . .

"The Secretary of the American Home Missionary Society actually wielded more uncontrolled power than 'the whole college of Bishops presiding over the Episcopal Church of the United States' since 'the clergy Employed' and 'the congregations assisted' and 'the kind of doctrine [permitted] to its beneficiaries' was 'under the absolute control of the society.' [Thoughts on the Religious State of the Country with Reasons for Preferring Episcopacy (New York, 1836), 90-91.]

. . . .

As the local churches were revolting against overall control, there was widespread revolt against the power of the ministers in the local churches until 'after the Reforming Synod [of 1697], the clergy found themselves shorn of every weapon except moral persuasion, and their threat of [Divine] vengeance.’ And already, as Urian Oakes had declared in 1673 'in many churches 'a few Pragmatical and Loquacious men' are . . .
exercising real power, while the constituted authority is helpless.' [Perry Miller, The New England Mind from Colony to Province (Cambridge, 1953), 142, 111.]

"'No minister can be forced upon his people, without their suffrage and voluntary support. Each pastor stands upon his own character and deeds, without anything to break the force of his responsibility to his people.' This kind of political relationship, because of overt and immediate dependence upon the local congregation, tended to make the American minister--unless of more than average abilities or wealth--very sensitive to the peculiar provincialisms of his parish and often subservient to and spokesman for them.

"It is obvious that within this broad context the conception of the minister practically lost its priestly dimension as traditionally conceived, and became that of a consecrated functionary, called of God, and who directed the purposive activities of the visible church.

"Sectarian anticlericalism was of course almost universal in America. If all the Protestant groups are seen on a continuum with say Quakers on the left and 'catholic' Episcopalians on the right, one can say that each group tended to criticize the 'clericalism of all the groups to its right. Indeed such criticism was an essential element in each group's definition of itself" (212-235).

Length of Relevant Material: entire essay is relevant--42 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood, basis of authority

Author: Sidney E. Mead (eds. Richard Neibuhr and Daniel D. Williams)

Title of Book: The Ministry in Historical Perspectives

Title of Article: "The Rise of the Evangelical Conception of the Ministry in America (1607-1850)."

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York

Publisher: Harper and Brothers

Date of Publication: 1956

Nature of Source: The cited work is a compilation of essays on the historical development of the Christian ministry. The essay in question concerns the period leading up to, and including, the restoration.

Comment: The following passage is a quotation from an 1855 essay entitled "The Position of the Evangelical Party in the Episcopal Church," in Miscellaneous Essays and Reviews, I (Chicago, 1855), 371-72. The excerpt highlights the anti-sacerdotalist, antiritualistic, and anti-hierarchical tendencies in Joseph Smith's environment. These tendencies are diametrically opposed to the Restored Gospel, which re-established and expanded ritual, a sacerdotal priesthood and hierarchical government.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "We [evangelicals] regard the prevailing spirit of Episcopacy, in all aspects, high and low, as at variance with the spirit of the age and of this land. This is an age of freedom, and men will be free. The religion of forms is the stereotyped wisdom or folly of the past, and does not adapt itself to the free movements, the enlarged views, the varying plans of this age. The spirit of this age demands that there shall be freedom in religion; that it shall not be fettered or suppressed; that it shall go forth to the conquest of the world. It is opposed to all bigotry and uncharitableness; to all attempts to 'unchurch' others; to teaching that they worship in conventicles, that they are dissenters, or that they are left to the uncovenanted mercies of God. All such language did better in the days of Laud and Bonner than now. . . . The spirit of this land is, that the church of Christ is not under the Episcopal form, or the Baptist, the Methodist, the Presbyterian, or the Congregational form exclusively; all are, to all intents and purposes, to be recognized as parts of the one holy catholic church. . . . There is a spirit in this land which requires that the gospel shall depend for its success not on solmen precessions and imposing rites; not on the idea of superior sanctity in the priesthood in virtue of their office; not on genuflections and ablutions; not on any virtue conveyed by the imposition of holy hands, and not on union with any particular church, but on solemn appeals to the reason, the conscience, the immortal hopes and fears of men, attended by the holy influences of the Spirit of God. . ." (223).

Length of Relevant Material: entire essay is relevant--42 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: priesthood and church

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Inconsistency of Sectarianism"

Title of Periodical: The Catholic Telegraph, Vol. I, No. 4

Place of Publication: Cincinnati, OH

Publisher:

Date of Publication: November 12, 1831

Nature of Source: A Catholic newspaper which began in Ohio in 1831. The paper contains articles of both theological and general interest.

Comment: The article in question is a diatribe against the sectarians of the day. It explains why the theological platform of the Protestants is invalid. One of the issues it addresses, and perhaps the issue of most importance for the Latter-day Saint, is the necessity of religious authority. It is also a good example of the Catholic tendency to use the Old Testament as a type for its current priesthood structure and doctrine.

Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "Among [the Jews], the Lord established and sustained an infallible tribunal, to determine all religious controversy. If any were found, who refused to abide by its decisions, the rash dissenter paid the forfeit of his temerity with his life. 'If thou perceive that there be among you a hard and doubtful matter in judgement between blood and blood. . . .thou shalt come to the Priest, of the Levitical race, and to the judge, that shall be at that time: thou shalt ask of them and they shall shew thee the truth of the judgement. And thou shalt do whatever they say, that preside in the place where the Lord shall choose, and what they shall teach, according to this law: and thou shalt follow their sentence: neither shalt thou decline to the right hand nor to the left hand. But he that will be proud, and refuse to obey the commandment of the Priest, who ministereth at that time to the Lord thy God, and the device of the judge, that man shall die, and thou shalt take away the evil from Israel.' Duet. Xvii. Such is the authority which God was pleased to give the church guides of the ancient covenant. Is it compatible with reason, philosophy, or scripture, to believe that Jesus Christ has deprived his church of a power and authority, which infallibly decided all manner of religious controversy under the law of Moses?"

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood and church
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Authority in Religion"
Place of Publication: Cincinnati, OH
Publisher:
Date of Publication: December 31, 1831

Nature of Source: A Catholic newspaper which began in Ohio in 1831. The paper contains articles of both theological and general interest.
Comment: In establishing the need for authority in religion, the paper quotes a passage from Rousseau, which makes many of the same claims against Protestantism that Mormons would make.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "Here, the Catholics acted unwisely. Had they instead of contesting the doctrines of their adversaries, called only in question, their right of preaching and instructing, they would [have] confounded and perplexed them. . . .You [reformers] assert, that you are the envoys of heaven; and you oblige us to believe you on your word alone; for you give no other sign of your divine commission, but new interpretations of the Scriptures, which have always been understood in a different sense from yours. You preach, you tell us no new doctrines; but what then are your interpretations, if they are not new doctrines? Surely, to give new sense to the words of the Scripture, is not this establishing a new doctrine? Is not this making God speak otherwise than he has spoken before? Is it not the sound, but the sense of the words which God has revealed; and therefore, changing the sense, which has been always admitted and determined in the Church--that is changing the Revelation.

"Moreover, behold how unjust you are; you allow that miracles are essential, in order to authorize a divine mission--and yet, you mere individuals, you grant it, you come without miracles; and speak to us, imperiously, as the envoys of the Almighty. You claim authority of interpreting the Scriptures by the dictates of your own caprice; and yet you take from us the liberty to do likewise. You arrogate to yourselves alone a right, which you refuse to all of us, who compose the great body of the Church. Pray, on what title do you thus subject our judgements to your private interpretation? . . . . What solid answer could the Reformers have made to this expostulation? For my own part, I cannot see it. I think, that either they would have been reduced to silence, or compelled to work miracles" (84-85).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: priesthood and church

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical: The Catholic Telegraph, Vol. I, No. 8

Place of Publication: Cincinnati, OH

Publisher:

Date of Publication: December 10, 1831

Nature of Source: A Catholic newspaper which began in Ohio in 1831. The paper contains articles of both theological and general interest.

Comment: The cited article was written in response to an article which appeared in the Rochester Observer. The article here is a defense of the Catholic doctrines and practices, which were apparently denigrated in the Rochester paper. The following phrase should be of obvious significance for the Latter-day Saint researcher.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "What [the author] is pleased to dignify with the name of churches, the catholic knows to be conventicles of error and confusion--houses, wherein a new and ever-varying doctrine is substituted for the Holy Temples, Priesthood, Sacrifice and Sacraments, of the religion of Christ" (63).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: priesthood and church
Author: Henry Edward Manning
Title of Book: The Eternal Priesthood
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: London
Publisher: Burns and Oates
Date of Publication: 1912 (originally published in the 1880s.)
Nature of Source: The book is published by a Catholic minister, and contains 286 pages of explanation and defense concerning the Catholic notion of priesthood.
Comment: Cardinal Manning was the archbishop of Westminster. Originally an Anglican clergyman, Manning took part in the 1834-1836 "Oxford Movement" which saw a number of Anglican priests criticize Episcopalian doctrine. One of the principle objectives of the Oxford Movement was to restore a sacerdotal nature and power to a clergy which had become relatively impotent in Anglican theology. Manning eventually converted to Catholicism. The cited work is Manning's definitive work on the subject of the Catholic priesthood and warrants a comparison with the sacerdotalism inherent in the Latter-day Saint notion of priesthood.
Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Ordination impresses a character, and that character is a spiritual and indelible sign or seal, by which the soul is marked for the exercise of the acts of divine worship, and for teaching of the same to others. The priesthood of Christ is the source of all divine worship . . . The sacerdotal character, therefore, is a participation of the priesthood of Christ and the closest configuration to Him in His office of mediator" (9-10).

. . . . .

"[Christ] meant that His priests should perpetuate in the world not only His truth and His Holy Sacraments, but His own mind, and likeness, and life. And for this, he has given us all the necessary means. He chose and taught and trained and assimilated His Apostles to Himself by direct and immediate action. He chooses, calls, and conforms His priests to Himself now no less than in the beginning, though His action be mediate by the divine tradition, and by the action of His mystical body edifying itself in charity. Dionysius the Areopagite, whosoever he be, says: 'He who speaks of a priest speaks of a man most August, and altogether divine, and most skilled in the whole sacred science,' that is, of God. S. Ignatius calls the priest 'the culminating point of all goodness among men.' "This, then, is an axiom in the law and spirit of the sacerdotal life: that a priest is predestined for the greatest glory of God" (68).

. . . . .

"We [the priests] are in contact with the eternal world; and that contact is real and substantial and personal, both on His side and on ours. We behold him face to face by the vision of faith. Beyond this there is nothing but the vision of the blessed. After the consecration we are already admitted to it under a veil" (90).

Length of Relevant Material: entire work is relevant--286 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Topics: priesthood and church, basis of authority
Author: William Howitt
Title of Book: A Popular History of Priestcraft in All Ages and Nations
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: London
Publisher: Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange
Date of Publication: 1846
Nature of Source: The cited work is an extended tract, published in England. The edition at hand is the eighth. The first edition was probably published around 1844.
Comment: The cited work is a polemic discussion of the historical development of priestcraft from an apparently congregationalist minister. In the process of attacking priestcraft, the author dismisses heathen, Jewish, Roman and Anglican priests as pretenders and usurpers. One of the priestly characteristics which the author opposes is sacerdotalism. His criticism is of importance to any researcher considering the nature of the Latter-day Saint priesthood and hierarchical structure.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "[When we] hear [Aaron] telling [Israel] to bring their golden ornaments, and he would make a god to go before them; and, in the next moment, telling Moses that the people constrained him, and he threw gold into the fire and 'out came this calf,' as if by accident,--we are filled with contempt for sacerdotal sycophancy and time-serving" (63).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.
Hard Copy (pages):

Topics: priesthood and church, basis of authority
Author:
Title of Book: "Methodist Objections"
Title of Article: The Catholic Telegraph, Vol. I, No. 33
Title of Periodical: The Catholic Telegraph
Place of Publication: Cincinnati, OH
Publisher:
Date of Publication: June 2, 1832
Nature of Source: The cited periodical is a Catholic newspaper which began in Ohio in 1831. The paper contains articles of both theological and general interest.
Comment: The excerpted article contains the answers to proposed Methodist objections against Catholic theology. This is a regular feature in the paper. Surprisingly, the response excerpted below is one of the few which addresses the issue of clerical authority. The passage below speaks to the notion of a sacerdotal priesthood, which Mormons and Catholics accept (albeit in strikingly different forms) and which most Protestants reject.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "That Christ conferred his own authority on the pastors of his Church is clear from his own declaration, 'All power is given to me in heaven and on earth.' As my father sent me, I also send you." (261).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood and church, basis of authority

Author: Leonard Woods

Title of Book: The Usefulness of the Sacred Office

Title of Article: "Methodist Objections"

Place of Publication: Cincinnati, OH

Publisher: Charles Whipple

Date of Publication: June 2, 1832

Nature of Source: The cited periodical is a Catholic newspaper which began in Ohio in 1831. The paper contains articles of both theological and general interest.

Comment: The excerpted article contains the answers to proposed Methodist objections against Catholic theology. This is a regular feature in the paper. Surprisingly, the response excerpted below is one of the few which addresses the issue of clerical authority. The passage below speaks to the notion of a sacerdotal priesthood, which Mormons and Catholics accept (albeit in strikingly different forms) and which most Protestants reject.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "That Christ conferred his own authority on the pastors of his Church is clear from his own declaration, 'All power is given to me in heaven and on earth.' As my father sent me, I also send you." (261).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority

Author: Leonard Woods

Title of Book: The Usefulness of the Sacred Office

Title of Article: "Methodist Objections"

Place of Publication: Cincinnati, OH

Publisher: Charles Whipple

Date of Publication: June 2, 1832

Nature of Source: The cited periodical is a Catholic newspaper which began in Ohio in 1831. The paper contains articles of both theological and general interest.

Comment: The excerpted article contains the answers to proposed Methodist objections against Catholic theology. This is a regular feature in the paper. Surprisingly, the response excerpted below is one of the few which addresses the issue of clerical authority. The passage below speaks to the notion of a sacerdotal priesthood, which Mormons and Catholics accept (albeit in strikingly different forms) and which most Protestants reject.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "That Christ conferred his own authority on the pastors of his Church is clear from his own declaration, 'All power is given to me in heaven and on earth.' As my father sent me, I also send you." (261).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority

Author: Leonard Woods

Title of Book: The Usefulness of the Sacred Office

Title of Article: "Methodist Objections"

Place of Publication: Cincinnati, OH

Publisher: Charles Whipple

Date of Publication: June 2, 1832

Nature of Source: The cited periodical is a Catholic newspaper which began in Ohio in 1831. The paper contains articles of both theological and general interest.

Comment: The excerpted article contains the answers to proposed Methodist objections against Catholic theology. This is a regular feature in the paper. Surprisingly, the response excerpted below is one of the few which addresses the issue of clerical authority. The passage below speaks to the notion of a sacerdotal priesthood, which Mormons and Catholics accept (albeit in strikingly different forms) and which most Protestants reject.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "That Christ conferred his own authority on the pastors of his Church is clear from his own declaration, 'All power is given to me in heaven and on earth.' As my father sent me, I also send you." (261).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Newburyport, Massachusetts, on March 9, 1819. The author, Reverend Woods, was then Abbot Professor of theology at the Theological Seminary, Andover, Massachusetts.

Comment: The tract is in most ways typical of the sentiment of Protestants toward their clergy. The eulogy is characterized by respect and appreciation, but makes no mention of any priesthood power the deceased may have held. One passage in the sermon is a particularly well-articulated statement on the perceived powers and authority of most orthodox Protestant clergy.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The train of reflection, in which I have indulged myself on this occasion, clearly shows, that the death of a faithful minister is a great loss, and should excite heartfelt sorrow. For when a minister dies, he can no more preach the truths of revelation. He can no more be an instrument in the conversion of sinners, in building up the church, or in advancing the knowledge and holiness of believers. He can no more lift up his voice against prevailing iniquities, and contribute to the order and peace of society. He can no more guide the duties of the Sabbath; no more visit the sick and the dying, or feed the sheep and lambs of Christ. He can no more engage in the plans of benevolence, which distinguish the present day; can no more labor and pray for the spread of the gospel, and the renovation of the world. His pious designs, his benevolent efforts have all ceased" (12).

Length of Relevant Material: 12

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority

Author: William Hill

Title of Book: Ministerial Parity; or An Equality of Grade, Office, and Authority, Among the Christian Clergy . . . .

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Winchester, VA

Publisher: J. McGlassin

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a sermon given in Winchester at the opening of the synod of Virginia, on October, 21, 1819. Reverend Hill was the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Winchester. The tract also includes some prefatory remarks which indicate that the sermon engendered some opposition among the Episcopalian denominations.

Comment: The author endeavors to prove, in a somewhat ambiguous manner, that there should be no distinction or rank among the ministers of the gospel. He appears to direct his comments toward the Episcopalian denominations of his day, which would have been noted for the diversity of ranks among their clergy. The author does make allowance for the different offices of Bishop and Deacon--but claims that only one class of minister (known alternatively as Bishop, Elder or Pastor) existed and that the other office of Deacon entails completely different properties and position. As with most of his Presbyterian colleagues, the author is careful to differentiate between "extraordinary" ministers (apostles and prophets) which existed in the primitive church but are no longer needed, and "permanent" ministers (Bishops) who currently govern the church. Although the author dismisses the Episcopalian claims to apostolic succession, he offers no defense of Presbyterian authority other than the claim of more careful adherence to biblical doctrines.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "We shall now proceed to establish the proposition which we have assumed, as deducible from the text, which is that Christ and his Apostles have established an equality among the ministers of the Gospel: and that a difference in grade and office, in the church of Christ, among its ministers, is so far a departure from apostolic order, and the simple plan laid down in the word of God.

"Now we wish it to be distinctly understood, that we do not mean to assert, that there is but one order among the primitive teachers, to be found in the word of God. We are ready to acknowledge that there are a great variety of grades and offices to be found there. As 1 Cor. 12.28. "And God hath set some in the church, first Apostles, secondarily, Prophets, thirdly, Teachers, after that, Miracles, Helps, Governments, Diversities of tongues." But our meaning, is, that there is but one permanent order of ministers, to be found in the scriptures, as established by Christ and his Apostles for the church.

"We are ready also to acknowledge that we meet with different orders of offices; such as Bishops and Deacons; and Presbyters, who labour in word and doctrine, and Presbyters whose office it is only to rule and govern in the church; and that different degrees of honour are due to those in different offices.

"But we contend that these were not different orders among the ministers, whose duty it was to preach the word, and administer the ordinances of the Gospel, but that some of those were offices of another nature altogether" (16-17).

Length of Relevant Material: 71 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority
Author: Charles Chauncey
Title of Book: The Validity of Presbyterian Ordination Asserted and Maintained
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher: Richard Draper, Thomas Leverett
Date of Publication: 1762
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a discourse given by Dr. Chauncey at the Dudleian-Lecture, at the Harvard-College in Cambridge, May 12. 1762.
Comment: The discussion is very similar to defenses of Presbyterian ordination which appeared after the publication of Dr. Chauncey's lecture. In particular, sermons and tracts of this genre contend that there was a parity among minister of the primitive church, and that, therefore, Presbyters have the power to ordain, while Episcopalian bishops are usurpers. This particular tract is interesting for its discussion of the purely symbolic nature of ordination and authority; being a symbol of the inner call which each minister must receive from Christ.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "For it is to be remembered, the thing intended by ordination is not, that the ordainers should commission persons to do the work of the ministry. This is done by Christ. It only belongs to them to declare who these persons are, and separate them to the work to which Christ has commissioned them. They don't make them ministers; but being authorized hereto, give them an authentic character as such in the eye of the world" (33).

Length of Relevant Material: 118 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority

Author: Charles Buck

Title of Book: A Theological Dictionary. . . .Two Volumes in One

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA

Publisher: W.W. Woodward

Date of Publication: 1818

Nature of Source: The cited source is a theological dictionary containing definitions and explanation of diverse theological terms and doctrines. The author appears to be an adherent of the Church of England, though the dictionary attempts to be representative of Protestantism in general, and for the most part retains a fairly objective perspective. The work is an excellent of barometer of the state of orthodox Protestantism on the eve of the Restoration. This editions is the fifth American, adapted from the the third London.

Comment: Under the article entitled "priest," the author gives an account of the history and evolution of that office. In explaining the differences between Catholic, Episcopalian and Presbyterian views on the priesthood, he makes it an issue of sacrament. That is, for the Catholics to believe in transubstantiation it is necessary for them to believe in a sacerdotal priesthood; similarly, for the Presbyterians to see the sacrament as purely commemorative, it is sufficient to have presbyters whose authority is administrative in nature. The article is an excellent example of the debate then raging over the issue of priesthood authority. The discussion of this issue is of inevitable interest to scholars interested in the unique Mormon doctrine of priesthood.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "If the word priest be taken to denote a person commissioned by divine authority to offer up a real sacrifice to God, we may justly deny that there is a priest upon the earth. Under the Gospel, there is but one priest, which is Christ; and but one sacrifice, that of the cross. The church of Rome, however, erroneously believe their priests to be empowered to offer up to the Divine Majesty a real proper sacrifice, as were the priests of the Old Testament. Ecclesiastical history informs us, that, in the second century, some time after the reign of the emperor Adrian, when the Jews, by the second destruction of the Jerusalem, were bereaved of all hopes of the restoration of their government to its former lustre, the notion that the ministers of the Christian church succeeded to the character and prerogatives of the Jewish priesthood, was industriously propagated by the Christian doctors; and that, in consequence, the bishops claimed a rank and character similar to that of the Jewish high-priest; and the deacons to that of the Levites. One of the pernicious effects of the this groundless comparison and pretension seems to have been, the introduction of the idea of a real sacrifice in the Christian church, and of sacrificing priests.

In the Church of England, the word priest is retained to denote the second order in her hierarchy, but we believe with very different significations, according to the different opinions entertained of the Lord's supper. Some few of her divines, of great learning, and of undoubted protestantism, maintain that the Lord's supper is a commemorative and eucharistical sacrifice. These consider all who are authorised to administer that sacrament, as in the strictest sense priests. Others hold the Lord's supper to be a feast upon the one sacrifice, once offered on the cross; and these, too, must consider themselves as clothed with some kind of priesthood. Great numbers, however, of the English clergy, perhaps the majority, agree with the church of Scotland, in maintaining that the Lord's supper is a rite of no other moral import, than the mere commemoration of the death of Christ. These cannot consider themselves as priests in the rigid sense of the word, but only as presbyters, of which the word priest is a contraction of the same import with elder" (424).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 cols.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

______________________________

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority
Author: John Brown
Title of Book: A compendious view of natural and revealed religion
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: David Hogan
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: This publication is the first American printing of a late London edition. John Brown (1722-1787) was deceased at the time of this printing.
Comment: The theology of this tract appears to be orthodox Protestant--and is most likely Presbyterian--though there is some ambiguity. In a section which discusses the nature and necessity of Church organization, Brown indicates that authority is the sole prerogative of ordained officers. That is, that the body of the church has no legitimate claim to authority. Brown's comments on the subject warrant a comparison with Joseph Smith's concepts of universal priesthood and church organization. In particular, the language in D&C 84:19 is in direct contrast to Brown's arguments concerning the "mysteries of God" (see excerpt).
"No where are the Christian people in general, but particular officers, marked by characters which denotes authority;--Nay, they are represented as the flock; the family; the body: and subject; and are commanded to honour, obey, and submit to their officers, who are represented as elders, overseers, rulers, guides, governments, Acts xx.17, 28. 1 Thess. v. 12. 1 Tim. v. 17. Heb. xiii. 7,17. 1 Cor. xii. 28. 4. Great absurdity and confusion would ensue, if even all adult believers should be admitted to govern the church. All would be rulers: who then would remain to be ruled? All would be stewards of the mysteries of God to themselves and others: who the could need the dispensation of them?--Further, unless manhood, which is nothing spiritual, draw all church power to male believers, women, who are prohibited to speak in the church, must be allowed as much authority in government as men, 1 Cor. xiv. 3,4. 1 Tim. ii. 12.----More over, What neglect of business, what disorder must ensue, if all adult believers be equal triers and ordainers of pastors, or censurers of subtle hereticks? If elders or deacons offend, their spiritual pupils and children must be their judges and correctors. If a whole congregation fall into error and scandal, who can reclaim them? (458-9).

The author defends the mode and validity of the Presbyterian ordination. His comments bear directly on the Latter-day Saint doctrines of power and authority. In particular, his focus on the absolute necessity of proper forms and succession reveal much about the theological world into which the priesthood was restored. His defenses of the practice are very similar to other treatises on Presbyterian ordination (e.g., citing the biblical parity of ministers) which have already been archived.

Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "If, however, the subject were merely of a speculative nature, I should feel little inclination to enter upon the discussion. But this is not the case. It is of the highest practical importance; for if Presbyterian ordination be not valid, it follows that the ministers of our denomination, and those of most other denominations, have never been regularly ordained, and therefore, that they have no authority to preach, or administer the ordinances of the gospel" (37).

Length of Relevant Material: 18 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority
Author:
Title of Book: Fessenden & Co.'s encyclopedia of religious knowledge : . . .
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Brattleboro; Boston, MA
Publisher: Fessenden and Co.; Shattuck and Co.
Date of Publication: 1835
Nature of Source: Edited by B.B. Edwards, the cited source is a theological dictionary of terms and doctrines. Most likely of a Presbyterian inclination, the work is an excellent barometer of the state of orthodox Protestantism in the 1830s.
Comment: Under the article entitled "authority," the encyclopedia offers the following synonyms: warrant, order, permission, power, rule, dignity. The article is careful to differentiate between God's authority and man's. By man's authority, the article directly refers to the Catholic institution of hierarchical priesthood; it is in reference to that hierarchy that the following quotation was found. Of note is the striking absence of references to charismatic power in association with this authority.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "[Authority is] the greatest and most irreconcilable enemy to truth an argument that this world has ever furnished" (152).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.
Hard Copy (pages): 2
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Nature of Source: Edited by B.B. Edwards, the cited source is a theological dictionary of terms and doctrines. Most likely of a Presbyterian inclination, the work is an excellent barometer of the state of orthodox Protestantism in the 1830s.

Comment: Under the articles entitled "priest" and "priesthood," the encyclopedia offers a relatively detailed history of those terms and the practices associated with them. In the process of explaining the essence of the priesthood, the articles condemn the Catholic church for maintaining Levitical forms (e.g., sacerdotal priests), which they claim were done away by the new covenant. Perhaps most notable for the LDS scholar is the articles designation of four different orders of the priesthood: kingly, Melchizedek, Aaronic and Christian. While the author's understanding of these orders differs widely from Joseph Smith, the resemblance of the language and delineations used warrants a comparison with Latter-day doctrine. The author also implies that the priesthood is the right of all believers, although the implementation of such a doctrine is left ambiguous. As was common for contemporaneous discussions on this issue, no sense of charismatic power is associated with this priesthood.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "We may distinguish four kinds of priesthood. (1) That of kings, princes, heads of families, and the first born. This may be called a natural priesthood, because nature and reason teach is, that the honor of offering sacrifices to God should belong to the most mature of understanding and the greatest in dignity. (2) The priesthood, according to the order of Melchizedek, which does not differ from that now mentioned, but in its dignity; because Melchizedek was raised up of God to represent the priesthood of Jesus Christ. Or the priesthood of Melchizedek combined in the same person the right of the kingly and the priestly offices, with that of the First Born, to exercise the priesthood; or he was at once king, priest and prophet, that is, authoritative teacher in every sense of the term. (3) The priesthood of Aaron and his family, which subsisted as long as the religion of the Jews. (4) The priesthood of Jesus Christ, and of the new law, which is infinitely superior to the all others in its duration, its dignity, its prerogatives, its objects and its power. The priesthood of Aaron was to end. But that of Jesus Christ is everlasting. That of Aaron was limited to his own family . . . the priesthood of Jesus Christ includes the entire church. " (972).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 col.

Hard Copy (pages):

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority

Author:
Title of Book: A Defence of the Essentials of Ordination
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: T. and J. Swords
Date of Publication: 1812
Nature of Source: The cited work was composed in answer to a previously published pamphlet entitled "Serious thoughts on a late administration of Episcopal orders."
Comment: The tract answers the claims by one disaffected Episcopalian that the ordination of a clergyman (who had apparently taken disciplinary action against the former) to the office of Bishop was invalid because the term "In the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost" was not invoked during the ordination. The debate over the necessity or non-necessity that phraseology strikes the Latter-day Saint researcher as an example of debates over the "form of godliness." The author also provides an interesting contrast between Episcopalian and Catholic ideas of ordination. For a similar discussion of the same incident and issue, see John Bowden, The Essentials of Ordination, (New York: James Oram, 1812).

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The author of the pamphlet, in order to drag Bingham into his service, changes entirely the matter of inquiry, which he states to be 'Whether the naming of the Trinity as the fountain of authority, formed the grand essential of ordination in whatever form it was administered?" (23).

. . . . .
"That the use of the words 'in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost,' at the imposition of hands, is essential to a valid ordination, and yet that no mention or instance of this use of them should occur in any ancient writer, or any ritual extant, it is impossible to believe. And still more incredulous would any man of sense be as to the opinion so confidently maintained, that if these words were omitted at the imposition of hands, the authority of the Trinity was wanting, though the Godhead be invoked and acknowledged in other parts of the service!" (30).

. . . . .
"This writer will quote a passage from Bishop Burnet, from which it appears that the name of the Trinity was not used at the imposition of hands in the Church of Rome, in order to prove that it was actually used at this ceremony, in the consecration of a Bishop! And the proof is, that the name of the Trinity was used at another part of the office at the ordination of a Priest, in which, power was given 'to offer up sacrifices to God, and to celebrate masses, both for the living and the dead,' a power which all Protestants disclaim. . ." (38).

Hard Copy (pages):

---

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority, descent of authority; apostles

Author: Harvey Denison Kitchel

Title of Book: Who Gave Thee This Authority?: the nature and source of ministerial authority, a scriptural and congregational view of the Christian ministry: a sermon preached at the ordination of Joel L. Dickenson

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Hartford, CT

Publisher: John Paine (A.H. Maltby)

Date of Publication: 1844
Nature of Source: Given be the pastor of the church in Plymouth, Connecticut, the sermon placed the addressee at the congregation in Northfield, Connecticut. The denomination of the author and addressee are unclear, though the doctrine seems to be congregational in nature.

Comment: This ordination speech from 1844 is an excellent representation of the Protestant perceptions of priesthood authority. The tract compares the Protestant concept of ministerial authority with the Catholic, and thereby provides an interesting portrait of both for the LDS researcher. The following passage is from the section entitled "The Nature of Ministerial Authority." In this section, the author refutes the idea of a Christian priesthood and of Apostolic succession. In passages which follow the first excerpted passage, the author rejects the idea of ordination in general, as opposed to congregational election. The second excerpted passage regards the practice of congregational election "by uplifted hands" (11), and makes an interesting assertion regarding early Christian use of the term priesthood.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The authority of a Christian Minister is purely administrative and moral, and is limited and characterized by his work. It is an authority to serve Christ and the church--to watch over, and feed, and guide the flock--to preach the Word, administer the ordinances of the Gospel, and win souls to Christ--to act as the religious instructor and monitor of the people, and the executive organ of the church. The special authority of the Minister to do this, lies essentially, as we have seen, in his special and divinely-given fitness to do it well, and outwardly in the certification of that fitness by proper judges.

"The nature of this authority will most clearly appear in contrast with that of the Priestly office. Two things cannot well be more unlike than a Christian Minister and a Priest. And the distinction is one that reaches to the very heart of the Christian system. This will appear in the following specifications.

"1. The Priest has his appropriate place only in a system which provides no other way of intercourse with God but through the Priest. . . . He has a certain holiness, ex officio; the people are profane, and can but stand afar off, and send forward the priest to be their agent and advocate with God. . . . A system of human mediation was, therefore, divinely instituted in the Hebrew economy--

"a figure," we are told, "for the time then present"--a typical and temporary representation of the perfect and divine Mediator, who should bring all men nigh unto God. . . .

"2. The just conception of real Ministerial authority excludes the idea of transmission by a succession. It is grounded in personal attributes, real or supposed, and cannot be transmitted. A sound mind and a holy heart and all special qualities and tokens of a Christian minister are not from St. Peter. Priestly authority, in the other hand, is official, and admits of transmission. But that office "let no man take to himself but he that is called of God as was Aaron." And as to a succession, hereditary or manual, we estimate as out Lord did, who stamped it as worthless in His kingdom by springing not of the priestly tribe of Levi, but of the lay "tribe of Judah, of which no man gave attendance at the alter, and of which Moses spake nothing concerning the priesthood." The proofs of a truly authorized Minister of Christ are not to be found in the certain way in which he was put into a certain office, but in the work his is doing and the way he does it. . . .
"3. Ministerial authority consists in no mysterious prerogative or official virtue, investing its acts with a supernatural efficacy. But such a virtue is implied in the notion of a Priest. His person is sacred—he stands nearer to God than other men—his acts have a magic energy, and a certain indefinable and awful validity. But nothing of this belongs to the Christian Minister. . . . His tried worth and ability may indeed inspire confidence in him, and invest his teachings with great moral authority; but he is no spiritual dictator, and can bind men's consciences only with God's truth. He officiates in no pompous ritual; he applies water in the name of the Trinity and gives to the believing the symbols of Christ's body and blood. And in these simple yet solemn acts, so far is he from giving them their value, or imparting to them a mystic efficiency, that he is the mere organ of ministration. As the leader and executive functionary of the church, he is the appropriate organ of these rites; otherwise the humblest member of Christ's household could minister in them as efficaciously as he" (5-7).

. . . .

"Were it not beyond the field of the present inquiry, it could be shown by a multitude of citations, that, during all the purest centuries, this very method was maintained in the Christian church; and that even for some ages after the Christian ministry was regarded as a Priesthood, and until that radical vice had plunged the body of the church in irretrievable corruption, the elective act of a church was deemed essential to the pastoral office" (12).

. . . . .

"Power is in every Christian church adequate to supply its own wants, and compass all the ends of its being. It is subject to none but Christ, and limited in the exercise of its powers only by the Word of God. No other church, nor all other churches, nor any Ministry, may come within such a church and authoritatively dictate to it, appoint for it, or legislate over it" (13).

Length of Relevant Material: pp. 13
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Comment: This ordination speech from 1844 is an excellent representation of the Protestant perceptions of priesthood authority. The tract compares the Protestant concept of ministerial authority with the Catholic, and thereby provides an interesting portrait of both for the LDS researcher. The author's subsequent warning about the dangers of central theological authority is very typical of the Protestant perceptions of the day.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "If this system [of congregational autonomy] which we love and venerate, shall be subverted, and the liberties of the churches be exchanged for the gilded fetters of Authority, it will be by suffering its principles to lie untaught and forgotten by the people. . . " (16).

Length of Relevant Material: pp. 16

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority; apostles

Author: [Thomas Foxcroft]

Title of Book: The Ruling and Ordaining Power of Congregational Bishops, or Presbyters, Defended.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Boston, MA

Publisher: Samuel Garrish

Date of Publication: 1724

Nature of Source: The cited work contains "Remarks on some Part of Mr. P. Barclay's PERSUASIVE, lately distributed in New-England."

Comment: In defending the Presbyterian doctrine of ministerial parity, the author employs the same arguments that were prevalent in Joseph Smith's day. A Latter-day Saint researcher would be most interested in the portions of the tract which deal with the primitive role of the apostles, and the Protestant definition of "power and authority," which seems to exclusively refer to the right to ordain.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "We may safely therefore grant our Author, 'That the Eleven Apostles receiv'd a Power by this last Commission, which they had not before, and which none of the Seventy did then receive: and yet it will not follow from hence, That our Saviour left his Church with a set of Gospel-Ministers vested with different degrees of Power and Authority" (4-5).

HE tells us, The Apostles exercised Authority over the Rest of the Gospel-Ministers, In making Laws. What the? Do's this argue, that there must be a standing Order in the Church to make Laws, and prescribe Rules to Ministers? No, by no means. The Church was in its Infant State then, and the Canon of Scripture not perfected; the Apostles were therefore extraordinarily inspired, to reveal the Mind and Will of CHRIST, unto his People and Ministers. But, as there is no need of any such infallible Guides now, since the Canon of the New Testament in completed; So, that the Apostles, who were divinely inspired, and under and infallible Conduct, did prescribe Rules and Laws to Churches and Pastors, This certainly is no Warrant, to Men not so qualify'd, to presume to do the same thing. 'Tis not a Legislative, but an Executive Power, that belongs to the ordinary Governors of the Church. They have Authority only to execute the Laws of CHRIST, contained in the Holy Scriptures. And I know of no Laws or Orders there, but what ordinary Pastors have the Execution of, committed to them" (5-6)

Length of Relevant Material: 4 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):

Topics: priesthood and church; basis of authority; descent of authority
Author: Nehemiah Dodge
Title of Book: A Description of Gospel Ministers, and their Internal Call
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Exeter, NH
Publisher: Josiah Richardson
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Written by the pastor of the Baptist Church in Lebanon, Connecticut, this tract was originally intended as a "circular letter" for internal church use only. However, the project was of such a size, the decision was made to publish.
Comment: The tract is intended to enable the sincere believer to distinguish between ministers "whom God never called" and those who are "called and owned of God in his cause." In so doing, the author's perspective on priesthood and authority is revealed. The acceptable method which he establishes as the proper mode of commission is flexible and adaptable to various circumstances. His reference to an "inner" and "outer" call contrasts interestingly with Joseph Smith's teachings on the mode of ordination and D&C 4, which seems to describe some kind of inner call. However, there is no mention of descent of authority or the laying on of hands.
Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "If God designs a man for the work of the ministry, he will open a door to his regular entrance upon it, for whatever end he hath in view, he will overrule every circumstance to bring it to pass; consequently he whom he hath internally called as above stated, shall be externally called also. This lies with the church to which the person belongs; who being satisfied of his grace and gifts, invite him to the exercise of them in a public manner, and appoint him a preacher of the gospel" (7-8).
Length of Relevant Material: 17 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
In the body of the sermon, Reverend Lewis begins discussing the concept of godly power as it pertains to ministers of the gospel. The reverend's conclusion is that ministers can be instruments through which the power of God is manifest and can be improved by that power, but that they have no claim on that power of themselves. The language here employed provides an interesting contrast to Joseph Smith's teachings on the power of the priesthood. The basis of authority, here described in ambiguous terms, also provides an interesting contrast to Latter-day doctrine.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The power by which sinners are converted, is of God; and that it evidently appears to be of him, from the weakness and imperfection of the instruments which he employs in this great work. The weaker and the more inefficient Ministers are in themselves, the more clearly does the Divine agency discover itself. When Moses, with his rod, smote the Red Sea, and the rock in Horeb, the events which followed, in both instances no doubt, appeared to the whole congregation of Israel, to be the works of God. Probably no individual supposed that either of these miracles was the effect of human power, or that they were produced by a secret efficacy inherent in the rod, which the prophet held in his hand. So when sinners bow before a preached Gospel, when they cordially renounce their sins, and embrace the Saviour, at the call of his Ministers; the agency by which this effect is produced, as evidently appears to be of God" (20).

. . . . .

"He not only gives the necessary furniture to those whom he appoints to this service; but to the faithful, he abounds in promises of his gracious presence, in all their labours, trials, difficulties and dangers. 'Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.' It was in a view of this promised assistance, and in full dependence upon it, that St. Paul said, 'I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me.' In the exercise of the same faith-the same reliance on the promises of the Saviour, every one, who is competently qualified, may enter upon this work. If with these views he commences his labours; if with this temper he executes his ministry; his work will not be in vain in the Lord. And 'Though Israel by not gathered, yet shall he be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and his God shall be his strength'" (22-23).
Topics: priesthood as salvific
Author: Lucius Bolles
Title of Book: A Sermon, Delivered at Newburyport, In the First Presbyterian Meeting-house, December 9, 1918, at the Ordination of the Reverend Hosea Wheeler. . . .
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Newburyport
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: Published by request and printed by W. & J. Gilman, the tract is the text of a sermon given orally at the ordination of Hosea Wheeler. The sermon is followed by two minor presentations entitled Charge and Right Hand of Fellowship.
Comment: As was common for ordination sermons of the time, this particular oration covers a myriad of subjects. However, its principal focus is the nature of the priesthood, or authority to minister in the name of God. The author does make reference to the redemptive role this authority--at least the exercise of it--will play in the life of the minister. Although the doctrine here expounded is not extremely similar to the Latter-day Saint teachings on this issue, a comparison is still warranted.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "How should we labor to live habitually under the power of religion, and to keep our hearts in the love of God! Our usefulness depends on it. When do we acquit ourselves of our responsibility, and clear our garments of the blood of souls? . . . Make full proof of your ministry, and be faithful into death, and he will give you a crown of life" (17-18).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: proselyting, taking the gospel to all the world
Author: Board of Managers of the Albany Bible Society
Title of Book: Anniversary Report of the Board of Managers, of the Albany Bible Society, February, 1819.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Albany, NY
Publisher: G.J. Loomis
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: This is the eighth annual report of the Society for the year of 1818, given in February of 1819. The report is followed by a lengthy move for acceptance by B.F. Butler, a speech by Mr. A. Townsend and a treasurers account.
Comment: The report is a simple summary of the growth of Bible societies throughout the world, the dissemination of bibles in the Albany area and the growth of Society membership—which in 1919 was 206. The Society took in $511.54 and spent $760.64. The report also documents the growth of the separate Albany Female Bible Society, formed in 1816. The language and emphasis used in describing the dissemination of Bibles throughout the globe warrants a comparison with LDS missionary efforts.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "The least attention to the actual state of the world and the church, must convince every observer, that the grand consummation contemplated in the Bible, is as yet far from being fully attained. Zion hath, indeed, come in remembrance before God. The zeal of 'the generation of the righteous' hath been kindled.--Their fervent prayers are heard on high. The Torch of Light and Truth hath been carried far into the land of darkness and of the shadow of death. The final issue is not doubtful. "The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth"" (16).

Length of Relevant Material: 17 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 1-17

Date When Photocopying Was Completed: ____________________________

Topics: religion and civilization

Author: Moses Stuart

Title of Book: A Sermon Preached in the Tabernacle Church, Salem, Nov. 5. 1818, at the Ordination of the Re, Messrs. Pliny Fisk, Levi Spaulding, Miron Winslow, and Henry Woodward

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Andover, [MA]

Publisher: Flagg and Gould

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a sermon delivered upon the ordination of four men as "missionaries to the unevangelized nations."

Comment: In enumerating the value of missionary service in foreign lands, the author points out the temporal, social benefits of the gospel. The language he employs is typical of this period where ideas of theological and social improvements were inextricable.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Look too at the heathen and Mohammedan countries, and tell me, What is the condition of the poorer, the labouring, and more numerous class of society in them all? What can be the condition of those who have security of neither liberty, property, not life? Where is compassion to the poor? Walk the suburbs of Canton, of the temple of Juggernaut, of Constantinople--and see thousands of miserable wretches, every year, absolutely perishing with hunger and nakedness, while not as single hand is moved, or heart touched for them. Pass then into Europe and America, and see the Lazarettos, the hospitals, the alms-houses, which bless every hamlet that you find. Consider the immense amount of taxes paid by the public, and the still greater amount of private contributions, for the support, and comfort, and education of the poor and unfortunate."
Look at the administration of justice in Christian countries; consider the means of instruction, the colleges and schools that exist; consider the progress of all the arts and sciences, which contribute to ennoble and adorn, as well as to render comfortable and affluent, societies of men. [sic] and before you finish the comparison, look on the thousands of Christians, who are devoting their time, their talents, their property, to the sole object of promoting the happiness of their fellow creatures. Then say, if you have hardihood enough to say, that heathen countries are as moral and happy as Christian" (15).

Length of Relevant Material: 3 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: religion and civilization; proselyting
Author: Heman Humphrey
Title of Book:
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Goshen, Connecticut
Publisher: Samuel T. Armstrong
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a sermon delivered at the ordination of missionaries imminently departing for the Sandwich Islands. The author, Reverend Humphrey, was pastor of the Congregational Church in Pittsfield, Massachusetts.
Comment: As was common for missionary sermons of the day, Rev. Humphrey's sermon addresses the civilizing influence of missionary labors. As a parallel to this, he seems to equate primitiveness with evil, and culture with righteousness. This language is very non-distinctive and thereby provides the researcher with an excellent example of the prevailing views of the era. Perhaps most striking to the Latter-day Saint researcher is the absolute absence of any endowment or ordination of priesthood or ministerial authority.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "The darkness of a hundred ages is to be pierced and scattered, by all the pervading light of the Sun of Righteousness. "The strong man armed" is to be ejected as a cruel usurper. Unnumbered millions of captives are to be set free. Jerusalem and the holy city are to be rescued from the hands of the infidels, "not by might, nor power, but by the Spirit of the Lord." The river of the water of life is to flow in a thousand new channels, bearing upon its unruffled current, the blessings and the triumphs of the Cross. Those who are scorched in equatorial deserts will "sit down under the shadow of Christ with great delight," while all, who shiver amid the ice of the poles, will be warmed into spiritual life. The effeminate Hindoo and the degraded African will be raised to the dignity of men and of Christians. The habitations of cruelty, in far distant continents and islands, will be enlightened by the Gospel and possessed by the church. The wild men of the American forests will be tamed, and all the wilderness will become the heritage of Zion" (11).
"It is not to enslave the free, or circumvent the ignorant, or stimulate rival chiefs to acts of hostility--but it is to 'proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison doors to them that are bound.' It is to persuade them to 'beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks.' It is to save their children from the shark, and to make them acquainted with the arts and improvements of civilized nations. It is to pour in upon their benighted minds the light of science and literature; to multiply among them the sources of enjoyment in this life, and above all, to prepare them for endless happiness in the world to come. To God and the word of his grace we fervently commend you" (28-29).

Topics: religion and civilization; proselyting
Author: Joseph Harvey
Title of Book: The Banner of Christ Set Up
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Elizabethtown, NJ
Publisher: Edson Hart
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The tract is the text of a sermon given at the inauguration of Reverend Hermon Daggett as Principal of the Foreign Mission School in Cornwall, Connecticut on May 6, 1818. Reverend Harvey was apparently the minister of a congregation in Goshen, Connecticut, but his denomination is unclear from the document.
Comment: The text of the sermon is fairly non-distinctive, and as such it becomes an excellent example of the proselyting language and mentality of the period. In particular, the author uses phrases which were common among contemporaneous discourses on preaching/missionary effort in which he implies the civilizing effect of Christianity and its attendant social improvements. They society was intended to bring "heathen" to the United States for religious and moral instruction.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "The situation and character of females in Christian society, is one important point of distinction between that and the society of heathen, and one thing in which the beneficial influence of the Gospel is very conspicuous. But this could never be fully known but by observation. Obookiah [a beneficiary of the missionary society] frequently remarked that nothing seemed so strange to him, on coming to this country, as to see men and women eating at the same table and of the same kind of food. This was a convincing evidence to his mind, that the Gospel was designed to make mankind happy. "He said, that when a lad, he had often thrown stones at his mother, and thought it no crime; and that in his country, mothers frequently murdered their infant sons, on account of the cruelty they expected from them if they should live. He often wept at the recollection of cruelties which he had inflicted on his mother in his early years" (24).

Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: revelation

Author: Layman Junior [William Bigelow]

Title of Book: *A Letter to "A Layman" in Reply To his "Letter to Rev. Mr. Channing."

Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1819?

Nature of Source: Composed in the form of a letter, the tract attempts to defend the Unitarian sermon of Reverend Channing which had been attacked by the Trinitarian views of a previous letter.

Comment: The letter to which this tract responds appears to have attacked Rev. Channing on the issue of Unitarianism. In the process of defending Channing, the author conveys his own belief that revelation will never contradict reason; in so doing, he also exemplifies the effects of enlightenment philosophies on the theology of the early 1800s.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "I have read this sermon with attention and delight, and as far as I can understand Mr. C. on this subject, he does not doubt the authenticity of this doctrine [trinity] because it is above human reason, but because he conceives it contrary to human reason. And so, sir, it appears to me. Common sense and reason assure us, that Omnipotence itself cannot cause a being to exist and not exist at the same time; and it appears to my weak understanding, that to say one person can be three persons, and three persons one person is an equal absurdity: and were such an idea expressed in the Bible as strongly as it is in some creeds and catechisms of mere human invention, I must confess, I should think it would outweigh all the evidence, internal and external, which that sacred book has in its favor, as a divine revelation" (1-2).

.......

"'Reason is revelation's elder brother.' These brothers will live and thrive in harmony together, and all the sophistry of schoolmen, bigots, and infidels, even the gates of hell shall not prevail against them" (7).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
As explained in the title, the tract is designed as a model catechism for Sunday-school-aged children. The author, Reverend Perkins, was pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church. The tract is composed in the form of questions and answers, which provide the researcher an excellent opportunity to consider the principal theological questions of the day. In the process of outlining the encompassing and basic principles of Presbyterian theology, Reverend Perkins answers a number of questions on the nature of revelation. He indicates that revelation is a reality and necessity, yet he doesn't indicate whether such revelations are occurring in his own day--there is an inference that such revelations were confined to the church of the New Testament and to the prophets of the Old.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages):

"Q.8. Is it possible for an infinitely perfect God to give to man, a special Revelation of His mind and will, as an infallible directory in the way of duty and happiness?"

"A.8. God has Almighty power, and therefore can reveal His mind and will, by his spirit to man. Such a revelation implies no contradiction or natural impossibility."

"Q.9. Is such a revelation probable?"

"A.9. It is probable that God would condescend, in his infinite kindness, to grant such a Revelation. He has amply provided for the sustenance and comfort of the body. And can we rationally suppose he would do so much for the body, and do nothing for the salvation of the soul? It is altogether probable the He would interpose for the benefit of the soul, as it is immortal, and of so much more worth than the body."

"Q.10. Is such a revelation necessary?"

"A.10. It is absolutely necessary, as nature's light is wholly inadequate to disclose to us the way of duty, and of happiness."

"Q.11. Such a Revelation is extremely desirable, as it would be so much for our interest and happiness; and would free us from doubts, and fears, and distressing anxieties on the grand subject of our residence in another world; and what might prepare us for a blessed immortality" (20-21).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): 20-21
The publication is an American reprint of a work published originally in Great Britain around the time of Law's death (1761).

Nature of Source: Apparently directed toward the Episcopalian clergy, the text was reprinted in America as a "common concern to all professed Ministers of the Gospel, and to Christians in general" (8).

Comment: The essence of William Law's thesis is the universal need for regeneration. In defense of the thesis, the piece addresses the necessity of experiential religion and ambiguously refers to the indispensability of personal prayer and a subsequent rebirth followed by continual inspiration. In the process of defending the need for such a "conversion," Law undermines the idea that a rational study of the Biblical text is sufficient for redemption. He establishes the need for emotion and spirituality in addition to (and as superior to) rational inquiry. Though Law's descriptions of these experiential conversions are vague, his arguments surrounding their necessity are of worth to the Latter-day Saint researcher (please note Law's use of James 1:5).

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "But now does he not in reality deny this, who seeks for the highest gift of knowledge below, from the poor contrivance of a common-place book? Again, 'If any man lack wisdom let him ask of God;' St. James does not say, let him go ask Peter, or Paul, or John, because he knew that, divine wisdom was nothing else but divine inspiration. . . .But then the scriptures themselves, though thus true, and infallible in these reports, and instructions about the Holy Spirit, yet they can go no farther, than to be a true history; they cannot give the reader of them, the possession, the sensibility, and enjoyment of that which they relate. This is plain not only from the nature of a written history or instruction, but from the express words of our Lord, saying, 'Except a man be born again of the Spirit, he cannot see or enter the kingdom of God.' Therefore the new birth from above, or of the Spirit, is that alone which gives true knowledge and perception of that which is the kingdom of God. The history may reveal truths enough about it; but the Kingdom of God being nothing else but the power and presence of God, dwelling and ruling in our souls, this can only manifest itself, and can manifests itself to nothing in man, but to the new birth. For everything else in man, is deaf and dumb and blind to the kingdom of God; but when that which died in Adam, is made alive again by the quickening Spirit from above, this being the birth which came at first from God, and a partaker of the divine nature, this knows, finds and enjoys the kingdom of God. . . .The immediate, continual inspiration of the Spirit as the only possible power and preservation of a godly life, stands upon the same ground, and is absolutely necessary to salvation, as the new birth" (81,83-84).
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: ritual and ceremony; baptism; sacrament of the Lord's Supper
Author: Henry Tuke
Title of Book: The Principles of Religion, As Professed by the Society of Christians, called Friends.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York, NY
Publisher: Samuel Wood
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: "Written for the instruction of their youth, and for the information of strangers," the cited work is a fairly extensive statement on the doctrines and practices of the Quaker community.
Comment: The nature of this source is particularly helpful for the Latter-day Saint researcher as the author makes broad statements about the general theories of Christianity in the early 1800s, and then points out the doctrines where the Quakers differ from orthodoxy. In defending the Quaker belief in the non-necessity of physical baptism and sacrament, the author compares them to the washing of feet, which was introduced in the New Testament, but was not being practiced in Protestant denominations. His caveat, "at least by Protestants," raises the possibility that some groups were practicing such an ordinance.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "It has already been remarked, that the washing of one another's feet was strongly recommended by our blessed Lord, and might, with at least equal propriety, be now enjoined as a religious obligation on Christians. It may be remembered, that our Lord, having washed the feet of his disciples, afterwards addressed them in this manner: 'Know ye what I have done unto you? Ye call me Master and Lord, and--so I am. If I, then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet: for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you.' Can any thing so clear, or so positive, be produced in favour of the Lord's Supper, or even of Water Baptism? Nevertheless, we do not hear of this practice, this plainly enjoined, being recommended at this day, at least by Protestants, as a Christian duty.--And why? Because I t is considered, as we consider the others, of a local or temporary nature" (92).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: ritual and ceremony; Christianization of Old Testament; Jehovah
Author: John Brown
Title of Book: A compendious view of natural and revealed religion
Nature of Source: This publication is the first American printing of a late London edition. John Brown (1722-1787) was deceased at the time of this printing.

Comment: The theology of this tract appears to be orthodox Protestant—and is most likely Presbyterian—though there is some ambiguity. In a section which discusses the nature and necessity of certain sacraments, Brown indicates that all of the ordinances of both the Old and New Testaments are given of Christ and point toward him; although the old sacraments have been superseded by the new. However, in conformity with the Protestant conception of works, Brown reaffirms that none of these sacraments is a prerequisite to salvation; nevertheless, it is indicated that if we have the opportunity to partake of these sacraments we surely should. There is also a familiarity to Brown's depiction of these sacraments as temporal symbols of spiritual things.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Every Sacrament, whether of the Old or New Testament is an holy ordinance instituted by Christ, in which, by sensible signs, Christ, and the benefits of the new covenant, are represented, sealed, and applied to believers, and they are solemnly dedicated to his service. The matter of every sacrament is sensible signs, and spiritual things represented by them. And the form is that union which is constituted between the signs and things signified, by the authority, institution, and promise of Christ, 1 Cor.x.16 Exod.xii. 1Cor. v.7 -- No sacraments are absolutely necessary to salvation, as they do not put men into a state of it, but suppose them already in it: and many have been saved without partaking of them, Rom. iv. 11. 1 Cor. xi. 28. Mark xvi. 16. " (532).

Length of Relevant Material: 30 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Comment: One of the results of the author's attack on the concept of universal salvation is an implied attack on the concept of irresistible grace. In the progression of the pamphlet's attack on Universalism, the author establishes Christ's grace as a gift that has been freely offered, but must be received by a life of righteous works.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "It is abundantly evident that the atonement is universal, & it is as evident that some part of mankind will be damned, as it is that Christ has died for them. You will ask, 'how can a person be lost for whom Christ has died?' I answer, for not believing in that Christ who has died, and embracing that atonement which he presents. This is now the condemnation of men--that the light is come, but they choose darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil;--they reject Christ, despise his humble gospel, and quench his holy Spirit: here is the cause of the MISERY of mankind" (7).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages): pp. 6-8

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: second coming

Author: Isaac Lewis, D.D.

Title of Book: As Sermon, Delivered in West Greenwich, Connecticut, at the Installation of the Reverend Isaac Lewis, A.M.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: New York, NY

Publisher: The Church and Congregation of West Greenwich

Date of Publication: 1819

Nature of Source: Given by Isaac Lewis (who appears to be the father of the inductee) on December 1, 1818, this tract was printed a year later by J. Seymour. The denomination of the Reverends here considered is not clear.

Comment: After a doctrinal explanation of the nature of the gospel ministry, Reverend Lewis turns his attention to the congregation and commences to rebuke them for nameless improprieties. In closing his rebuke, he uses the following vocabulary, which bears a close similarity to the millennial language employed by Joseph Smith. The context and meaning of the phrase may be different, but the resemblance of the wording warrants consideration.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Although you have hitherto neglected your souls, I, once more, entreat and beseech you, 'to flee' now, without delay, 'from the wrath to come.'" (32).

Length of Relevant Material: 1 para.

Hard Copy (pages):

Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: spirit child of God; judgement; redemption
The tract is published as a letter from a concerned son, apparently a minister of another denomination, to his Universalist father, on the dangers of Universalism. The tract includes considerable extracts from the writings of one Elias Smith.

Comment: This tract particularly attacks the concept of universal salvation and in so doing attacks the Universalist view of the nature of man. The author dismisses the idea that the soul of man is "part of God" as blasphemous—though this idea is not necessarily a universal tenet of Universalist belief. The author also attacks the concept of predestination and affirms man's agency (in the process the author also condemns Calvinism by name). The author employs extensive scriptural supports in the formation of the argument.

Excerpt (pages): "Yet who is so presumptuous as to say mortal man has the powers and qualifications of his maker God!" (4).

"It is very mysterious that God should give laws to machines, as this scheme completely renders them so. -- God has never given laws to the trees of the forest. Would you not think the goldsmith beside himself, to appoint a day to judge all of his watches according to their works? and how must it appear to thinking people who read the scriptures and learn that men are to be judged according to the deeds done here in the body, and then to learn, from your theory, that they cannot do any thing different from what they do; or, that God has foreordained whatsoever comes to pass?" (5).

"Should you find that the doctrine you have esteemed as truth 'cries peace and safety to sinners,' while sudden destruction awaits them, you will be willing to exchange it for that truth which opens to the sinner the worst of his case." (3)

"Again, you say, all men are the children of God; but Paul says, 'If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his.' We also read of some who have not the spirit, and 'all who are led by the spirit of God are the sons of God'" (10).

Length of Relevant Material: 11 pp.
Hard Copy (pages): 1-11
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics: spiritual death
Author: John Brown
Title of Book: A compendious view of natural and revealed religion
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: David Hogan
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: This publication is the first American printing of a late London edition. The author, John Brown (1722-1787), was deceased at the time of this printing.
Comment: The theology of this tract appears to be orthodox Protestant--and probably Presbyterian--though there is some ambiguity. The portion that is most significant vis-a-vis Latter-day Saint theology involves the nature of the Atonement. In discussing the covenant relationship of Christ and man, Brown uses language which is fairly familiar to Latter-day Saints in order to describe the concept of spiritual death.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "Spiritual death. Sin, and the curse procured by it, separating man from the favour and fellowship of God, the fountain of life, he necessarily becomes dead in trespasses and sins, Isa.lix.2. Eph.ii.1" (203).
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: spiritual gifts, prophesy
Author: Patrick Walker
Title of Book: The Life and Prophecies of Alexander Peden
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Hollowell, ME
Publisher:
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The cited work was originally composed in the 1700s in Scotland, and reprinted in Maine in 1819.
Comment: The cited work is a biographical sketch of Alexander Peden, who served as a Presbyterian minister in New Glencluce, Galloway, Scotland. The portions of the biography which may prove most relevant for the Latter-day Saint researcher, are the myriad references to Peden's prophetic ability.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "On the second of August, 1684, he was in a christian Scots woman's house, called Margaret Lumbernor; on that day there was an extraordinary shower of large hail, such as he had never seen. She said, what can be the meaning of this extraordinary hail? he said, 'Within a few years there will be an extraordinary storm and shower of judgement poured out upon Ireland: but Margaret, you will no live to see it.' And accordingly, she died before that rebellion; and the rest had a sad accomplishment at Derry, and the water of Boyn" (21).
Comment: The essence of William Law's thesis is the universal need for regeneration. In defense of the thesis, the piece addresses the necessity of experiential religion and ambiguously refers to the indispensability of personal prayer and a subsequent rebirth followed by continual inspiration.

In the process of condemning those who focus on the outward ordinances to the neglect of the inner conversion, Law refers to a common understanding among Christian theologians that ancient Rabbis believed temple worship would be established throughout the world.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Christian doctors reproach the old learned Rabbies [sic], for their vain faith and carnal desire of a glorious, temporal, outward Christ, who should set up their temple worship all over the world. Vanity indeed, and learned blindness enough" (135).

Length of Relevant Material:
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:
Nature of Source: Apparently directed toward the Episcopalian clergy, the text was reprinted in America as a "common concern to all professed Ministers of the Gospel, and to Christians in general" (8).

Comment: The essence of William Law's thesis is the universal need for regeneration. In defense of the thesis, the piece addresses the necessity of experiential religion and ambiguously refers to the indispensability of personal prayer and a subsequent rebirth followed by continual inspiration.

In his vindication of an inner conversion, he condemns the formulaic, hypocritical and contentious religion of his day. His condemnation employs a vocabulary similar to that used in the Latter-day Saint discourse on the great and abominable church and the apostasy--particularly the idea that the churches of the reformation are no more than the illegitimate offspring of the original harlot.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "In these last ages of fallen Christendom, many reformations have taken place; but alas! Truth must be forced to say, that they have been in all their variety, little better than so many runaway births of one and the same mother, so many lesser Babels come out of Babylon the great. For amongst all the reformers, the only one true reformation hath never been thought of. A change of place, of governors, of opinions, together with new formed outward models, is all the reformation that has yet been attempted" (163).

Length of Relevant Material: 2 pp.

Hard Copy (pages):

Topics: temple; priesthood
Author: Edward Rochie Hardy Jr. (eds. Richard Neibuhr and Daniel D. Williams)
Title of Book: The Ministry in Historical Perspectives
Title of Article: "Priestly Ministries in the Modern Church"
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: New York
Publisher: Harper and Brothers
Date of Publication: 1956

Nature of Source: The cited work is a compilation of essays on the historical development of the Christian ministry. The essay in question concerns a period earlier than the restoration, but there are important references to the nineteenth century.

Comment: The passage cited here concerns the importance of priestly vestments. These vestments which were so important to the Catholic and Anglican priestly identity, were seen by Protestants as particularly ugly symbols of priestly pageantry and elitism. The comment made below warrants consideration in light of Mormon notions of priestly vestments. The quotation included in the excerpt below is apparently taken from Joseph Smith's time period.

Researcher: David Holland

Excerpt (pages): "Any priest may say, in the words of a young cleric of a century ago who was criticized by a lady in his parish for the tone of authority he assumed with his surplice, 'Madam, when I have this on I am nineteen hundred years old" (155). [Told of Thomas F. Davies, late Bishop of Michigan, 1889-1905, in J.G.H. Barry, Impressions and Opinions (New York, 1931), 83-84.
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages):
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics:  Word of Wisdom
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Fourth of July"
Title of periodical: Columbian Star and Christian Index
Place of Publication: Philadelphia, PA
Publisher: Martin and Boden
Date of Publication: July 4, 1829
Nature of the source: The Columbian Star and Christian Index is a Philadelphia-based periodical created by a Baptist organization for an audience of Baptist adherents. Edited by W.T. Brantly, its content is of both general and theological interest. The periodical became known as Christian Index after 1830.
Comment: The article begins with a patriotic reflection on the significance of July 4th.
After praising the virtues of the American founding, it proceeds to designate "drunkenness" as the greatest threat to American liberty and morality and advocates an aggressive campaign of temperance. The commentary is followed by a letter from one Elder A.W. Clopton, representative of the Virginia Society for the promotion of Temperance, who provides a favorable review of a tract entitled Wisdom's Voice and the Temperance Question and offers a spirited call for the formation of local temperance societies. Elder Clopton calls on the help of "Jehovah Lord" in his pursuit of temperance.
Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt: "They therefore must be regarded as the most consistent respecters of the FOURTH OF JULY who accomplish most in rescuing men from the relentless vortex of intemperance, who secure the largest number of instances, in which the total abjuration of intoxicating liquors can be reported, and who make the most important deductions from the consumption of ardent spirits" (12).
Length of Relevant Material: 3 cols.
Hard Copy (pages): 11-12
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

Topics:  youth and religion
Author: Anna Letitia (Aiken) Barbauld
Title of Book: Hymns in Prose for the Use of Children
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Boston, MA
Publisher: Timothy Swan
Date of Publication: 1819
Nature of Source: The publication is a basic prose hymnal for children.
Comment: While the hymnal has limited direct bearing on the doctrine or phenomena of the restoration, it does provide a better understanding of a period in which childhood experiences with deity were accepted and encouraged. Five versions of the hymnal were published within the same year.

Researcher: David Holland
Excerpt (pages): "The peculiar design of this publication is, to impress devotional feelings as early as possible on the infant mind; fully convinced, as the author is, that they cannot be impressed too soon; and that a child, to feel the full force of the idea of God, ought never to remember the time when he had no such idea;--to impress them by connecting religion with a variety of sensible objects; with all that he sees, all he hears, all that affects his young mind with wonder or delight; and thus, by deep, strong, and permanent associations, to lay the best foundation for practical devotion in future life: for he who has been early accustomed to see the Creator in the visible appearances of all around him, to feel his continual presence, and to lean upon his daily protection, has made large advances towards that habitual piety, without which religion is but a name."
(preface)
Length of Relevant Material: 1 p.
Hard Copy (pages): preface
Date When Photocopying Was Completed:

---

Topics: Adam
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Adam-Where art thou?"
Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: June 5, 1818 (v. 4)
Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)
Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.
Comment: The author in this article has three topics he wants to discuss: 1) Every man is some where, 2) Many are (as Adam was) where they should not be, and 3) There is reason to fear that some will soon be where they would not. To begin his discussion, the author discusses the name of Adam and that the title of "Adam" can be applied to both males and females. This has some resonance with Mormon doctrine.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "Adam is the name which God gave to the first human pair: Gen. v. 1, 2. In the day that God created man, in the likeness of God made he him: male and female created he them, and blessed them, and called their name Adam in the day when they were created. In this chapter we are taught that both of them eat of the fruit of that tree which God had forbidden, that they felt the same terror on hearing the voice of God, and both hid themselves: from which we conclude, that in the address contained in this passage Adam and eve were included - Man where art thou? - a question of serious and awful import to every one who is now on the journey of life to a state which will be fixed and unalterable eternally." (347)
Length of Relevant Material: 2p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Adam, Agency, Women's role
Author: James Wood
Title of Book: Facts and Observations Concerning the Organization and State of the Churches in the Three Synods of Western New-York, and the Synod of Western Reserve.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Saratoga Springs, NY
Publisher: G.M. Davison
Date of Publication: 1837
Library Location: BX 8947 .N7 W6 Amer
Nature of Source: Report of the doctrines taught different Presbyteries in New York. In this report, Wood relates irregularities within the churches such as the teaching of "perfectionism" by one of the ministers in the Genesee Presbytery, who also "believes in miracles and prophecy, and has a prophetess in his house for whom he professes to entertain high veneration." (27) Wood also gives brief histories of the synods Utica, Geneva and Genesee, and how they were formed.
Comment: Wood relates an interview he had with a layman from the Oneida Presbytery.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "He said he believed Adam sinned, because God could not prevent him without altering his plan of government. I replied, If God could not prevent Adam from falling, can he keep christians from falling? He answered, No; if they resolve not to be influenced by the motives which he presents to encourage them to persevere. I believe christians may fall away. He said he did not believe in the imputation of Adam's sin, or that we are born sinners - but that when we are born we are destitute of moral character. In regard to conversion, he said, there are some things which God cannot do for the sinner - they are the sinner's own acts, and not God's. He commands the sinner to repent. and make to himself a new heart, and he can do it if he will. He was told he can do it by the assistance of God's Spirit. He replied, I will not say this, though I admit the Holy Spirit has an agency in the conversion of the sinner. He was asked what kind of agency? Just such an agency, said he, as I should exert over you, in persuading you to go to Rome. I observed to him, You might fail in attempting to persuade me to go to Rome. So may God fail, said he, of the conversion of the sinner. God is as dependent upon the sinner in his conversion as the sinner is upon God. The moment in which a sinner is converted, he said, he is holy - he is right - he is just as God requires him to be; he loves God with all the heart and soul and strength and mind; and he might continue in this state if he would; but he yields to temptation and so falls into sin. By loving God with all the heart, he said, he meant not the heart of a man but of a child; and hence he is to grow in grace. When he is converted he is free from sin, and by growing in grace he meant that he becomes stronger, more firmly established, &c....I asked him whether another church, which I named, entertained the same doctrinal views as the church to which he belonged. He said, Not altogether; but they differ more particularly in regard to measures than to doctrine. The latter are in favor of having females pray in promiscuous assembles - the former are opposed to it." (9-10)

Length of Relevant Material: 2p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:
described in LDS doctrine, where Satan strives to take away our agency giving us a false sense of salvation.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): Wines asks, "What would become of man, were every individual complete master of his own actions? Caprice and passion would then be his chief rules of conduct. In that case, most of our faculties would become quite useless. The powers of reason, judgement, reflection, prudence, conscience, and liberty of choice, form the true dignity of our nature. But to what purpose should we be endowed with these noble faculties, if we were always to yield to first impressions, and allowed ourselves to be evermore hurried away by the impulses of instinct or the force of blind inclinations? In the case supposed, the most exalted powers of the soul would not only by rendered futile, but would become hurtful by their very excellence; since the higher any faculty is, the more does the abuse of it become dangerous." (21)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Astronomy

Author: Johann Heinrich Lambert

Title of Book: Cosmologische Briefe uber die Einrichtung des Weltbaues

Place of Publication: Augspurg

Publisher: Eberhard Kletts Wittib

Date of Publication: 1761

Nature of Source: In the history of science and mathematics, Lambert is usually known for his achievements in mathematics. His Cosmological Letters were written as set of imaginary correspondence with the odd numbered letters being written by Lambert's imaginary correspondent and the even numbered letters written by himself. They deal with the structure of the Milky Way and the structure of the universe in general. Lambert's work was later used by Thomas Dick in his Philosophy of a Future State and his Sidereal Heavens for further proof that there was a governing body of the stars known as the "throne of God."

Comment: The following passages are representative of Lambert's theories concerning ever greater world systems that all revolved around central bodies. The astronomical system in the Book of Abraham can also be read as a super structure of ever greater world systems with the lesser revolving around the greater.
Excerpt (pages): "...I group without any hesitation into a special system the fixed stars visible to us, which taken together constitute the Milky Way. This presents to me a whole system which presumably belongs to still several others." (49-50)
Lambert puts it best when he wrote, "...the satellites belong to the planets, these to the sun, the sun to its system, and this to the system of the whole Milky Way. Farther our eyes do not reach and I leave it undecided whether the Milky Way visible to us still belongs to uncounted others and forms with these a whole system. Perhaps the light of this so immeasurably distant [super] Milky Way is so weak that we are unable to see it." (111)

Length of Relevant Material: 3pp.

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: Astronomy
Author: Immanuel Kant
Title of Book: Allgemeine Naturgeschichte und Theorie des Himmels
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Königsberg and Leipzig
Publisher: Johann Friedrich Peterson
Date of Publication: 1755
Nature of Source: Kant's Universal History was written before Kant became the great philosopher that we know him as today. Universal History is a work of speculative astronomy which attempted to make some sense out of the appearance of the Milky Way. Kant and others were the forerunners of practicing astronomers who confirmed that the Milky Way was a super system of stars of which our own solar system was a part.
Comment: The following passages are representative of Kant's theories concerning ever greater world systems that all revolved around central bodies. The astronomical system in the Book of Abraham can also be read as a super structure of ever greater world systems with the lesser revolving around the greater.

Excerpt (pages): Talking about Thomas Wright's Original Theory of the Universe, Kant wrote, "Mr. Wright of Durham, whose essay became known to me from the Freye Urteil of Hamburg from 1751, gave me first the prompting to look upon the fixed stars not as a scattered swarming with no visible order, but as a system which has the greatest similarity with a planetary system, so that just as in this [system] the planets find themselves very close to a common plane, the fixed stars too are in their position related as closely as possible to a certain plane which must be conceived as drawn across the whole sky and, through their thickest crowding toward it, represent that bright streak which is called the Milky Way. I have become convinced that because this zone, which is illuminated by uncounted suns, has very nearly the direction of a great circle, our sun must find itself very close to that great plane of reference. While I was pursuing the cause of this arrangement, I have found it very probable that the so-called fixed stars, or stationary stars, can very well be the slowly wandering stars of a higher order [system]."

(88-89)

"...all the suns of the firmament have orbital motions either around one universal center or around many." "According to this presentation one can to some extent picture the system of fixed stars through [analogy with] the planetary system, if one enlarges this infinitely." (104)

"...the motion of the suns of the starry sky goes around a common center whose distance is uncommonly great and the advance of stars would therefore be exceedingly slow,..." (105)

Length of Relevant Material: 4p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Astronomy
Author: Thomas Wright
Title of Book: An Original Theory or New Hypothesis of the Universe
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: London
Publisher: H. Chapelle
Date of Publication: 1750
Library Location: I got a reprint of this work through Inter Library Loan.
Nature of Source: The purpose of Wright's work was to explain the appearance of the Milky Way and the motion of several stars.
Comment: In the Book of Abraham, Joseph Smith used phrases in his translation that were similar to phrases Wright used in his work. I have extracted a couple of examples below.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "'Tis true, the Sun may be said to be the Governor of all those Bodies round him; but how? no otherwise than he himself may be governed by a superior Agent, or a still more active Force;...that the same gravitating Power is common to all; and that the Stars themselves are subject to no other Direction than that which moves the whole Machine of Nature." (51-52) p. 51 is stuff before ellipses, p. 52 is stuff after.

"Though the Deity, says a learned Writer 'be essentially present thro' all the Immensity of Space, there is one Part of it in which he discovers himself in a most transcendent and visible Glory. This is that Place which is mark'd out in Scripture, under the different Appellations of Paradise; the third Heaven; the Throne of God, and the Habitation of his Glory...'

"It is here, and here only, as in the Center of his infinite Creations, where he resides in a sensible Magnificence, and in the midst of those Splendors, which can Effect the Imagination of his Creatures;" (80)

Length of Relevant Material: 3p.

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Astronomy
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: On the Improvement of Society by the Diffusion of Knowledge

Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Originally published in 1833, for convenience I used the 1859 version printed in Philadelphia
Publisher: E. C. & J. Biddle
Date of Publication: 1859
Library Location: BV 4611 .D53x 1859 vol. 4

Nature of Source: Dick's Diffusion of Knowledge was donated to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute by John Oakley in 1844. The text is an extended argument for the diffusion of scientific knowledge in order to prevent superstition, vain fears, disease, etc. Dick's book was a popular work written in the mode of early nineteenth century Baconian science, which emphasized experience, observation and inductive reasoning over theorizing and hypothetical philosophy. Dick dedicates a lot a space in this work to the utility of knowledge with regard to understanding God, plural worlds and the afterlife.

Comment: Dick's works resonated with the early saints and passages from his works were reprinted in the Messenger and Advocate. Several of his works were donated to the Nauvoo Library. Dick was an amateur astronomer and enjoyed using evidence from astronomy to prove the doctrine of a plurality of worlds. The following passage is representative of his zeal.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "Are we led, from the discoveries of modern astronomy, to infer, that numerous worlds besides our own exist throughout the universe? This idea will be found imbodied in numerous passages of Scripture, such as the following: - "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God." - "In these last days he hath spoken to us by his Som, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." - "Thou hast made heaven, the heaven of heavens, with all their host, and thou preservest them all, and the host of heaven worshippeth thee." - "He sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as grasshoppers. All the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing in his sight. The nations are as the drop of a bucket; and he doth according to his will in the armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth." - "He hath prepared his throne in the heavens, and his kingdom ruleth over all." - "When I consider thy heavens - what is man, that thou art mindful of him?" It would be easy to show, were it expedient in the present case, that all such expressions and representations imbody in them the idea of a plurality of worlds, without which they would appear either inexplicable, or as a species of bombast, unworthy of the character of inspired writers. So that, to whatever department of nature we direct our contemplations, we perceive its correspondence with the sentiments expressed in the sacred writings, and find in these writings the most sublime and appropriate language in which to express those emotions which the diversified scenes of the material world are calculated to inspire." (261)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Astronomy, Intelligence and intelligences

Author: Thomas Dick

Title of Book: On the Mental Illumination and Moral Improvement of Mankind

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Originally published in 1836, for convenience I used the 1859 version printed in Philadelphia

Publisher: E. C. & J. Biddle

Date of Publication: 1859

Library Location: BV 4611 .D53x 1859 vol. 5

Nature of Source: Dick's Mental Illumination and Moral Improvement was donated to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute by Isaiah Mattison in 1844. This text was the result of 26 years worth of contemplation over how to improve the elementary and secondary education of youth. Dick describes methods, programs and courses of instruction to insure that youth grow up to be intelligent Christian beings. Dick was an advocate for universal education and for moral and religious instruction within the educational system.

Comment: While outlining how teachers should instruct their students in the rudiments of astronomy, Dick brings in theological reasons why students should learn about the heavens. The purpose of his discussion about plural worlds and intelligences is to help us become more humble and to excite our minds to learn more about the heavens where we will one day live after our earthly existence.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages):

As a guideline to teachers for instructing students in principles of astronomy, Dick wrote, "When discanting on the number and magnificence of the celestial worlds, he may very appropriately take occasion to impress them with the idea of the littleness of this earth, and its comparative insignificance, when placed in competition with the numerous and more resplendent worlds and systems which compose the universe; and, consequently, with the folly and madness of ambition, and of all those warlike schemes and ferocious contentions, of which our world had been the melancholy theatre. He may occasionally expatiate a little on the folly of pride, and its inconsistency with the character and circumstances of man, when we consider his comparative ignorance, and the low station which he holds in the scale of creation - and the reasonableness of cultivating a spirit of humility in the presence of that Almighty Being whose 'glory is above the heavens,' and 'whose kingdom ruleth over all,' when we consider, that, when compared with the myriads of more exalted intelligences that people the universe, we are only like a few atoms in the immensity of space. He may direct their attention to the infinitely diversified scenes of grandeur and felicity which the universe must contain, since its range is so extensive and its objects so magnificent; and to the evidence which these facts afford, that the Creator has it in his own power to gratify his rational offspring with new objects, and new sources of enjoyment, during every period of infinite duration. -In short, he may excite them, from such considerations, to aspire after that more glorious state of existence where the works of Omnipotence will be more fully unfolded, and to cultivate those holy principles and dispositions which will qualify them for mingling in the society and engaging in the employments of the heavenly world." (227-228)

Length of Relevant Material: 2p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Book of Mormon, Missionary work
Author: Alvin Torry
Title of Book: Autobiography of Rev. Alvin Torry, First Missionary to the Six Nations and the Northwestern Tribes of British North America

Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Auburn NY
Publisher: William J. Moses
Date of Publication: 1861
Library Location: E 78 .C2 T69 1861 Amer-Rare
Nature of Source: Basically this is Torry's memoir of his missionary experiences to the Indians of North America. According to Grunder, Torry's account of the conversion of an Indian chief parallels the conversion of King Lamoni in Alma. Indeed a parallel could be drawn between the two. Torry contacts the Indian chief in the name of the Great Spirit and the chief falls into a trance before his conversion. Alma tells a similar story. Below, I have extracted information concerning Torry's views of the "Mormons."

Comment: Between pp. 246-254, Torry relates how in 1832, he reclaimed Br. S. "of Spafford Hallow Society" who had been converted to "Mormonism" by Elders in Spafford. Torry betrayed his lack of chronological knowledge when he wrote that "Had not this brother been reclaimed, he would, in all probability, have sold his farm, and with all his property emigrated to Nauvoo, where the Mormons were then engaged in building
Nevertheless, Torry gives a fairly accurate description of the Elders' message, although he does not mention any connection between his work as a missionary to the North American Indians and the Book of Mormon or "Mormon bible" as he calls it.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "Two Mormon preachers had entered the town of Spafford, and were preaching what they called the 'Apostolic doctrines,' professing to have the gift of tongues, and of working of miracles. They claimed a special commission from God to pronounce a woe upon all christian Churches in the world, for having forsaken the commandments of the Lord, unless they returned to the doctrines of primitive Christianity, which they professed the Lord had in a very marvelous manner discovered unto them. They also claimed to possess the last portion of divine revelation to fallen man, engraved on tables of gold, which they affirmed were found in the earth, where they had been hid from the earliest ages of Christianity, but which the Lord, a short time since, had revealed unto a certain individual, the founder of their sect, who had transcribed it, and formed it into a book, which they denominated their bible, that the world might, as they said, know what great honor the Lord God of heaven and earth had conferred upon them." (247)

Torry was most concerned about the fact the Br. S. had never received the gift of tongues as the Elders had promised.

Length of Relevant Material: 9p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Book of Mormon, Native American history and religion, Elephants and horses in America, Destruction of an ancient people

Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Antiquities of Marietta," "Antediluvian Antiquities"
Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: September 8, 1819; September 15, 1819 (v. 6)
Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)
Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.
Comment: Volume 6 of the Weekly Recorder is filled with reports about "Antiquities" found under the earth in North America. Several of these reports have a direct bearing on the history of the Book of Mormon. I have extracted sections from two of the relevant articles in volume 6.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): From "Antiquities of Marietta" I extracted the following, which comes after the author has already explained several of the items that have been found in Marietta such as a skeleton and a silver sword.

"The situation of the mound on high ground, near the margin of the plain, and the porous quality of the earth, are admirably calculated to preserve any perishable substance from that certain decay which would attend it in many other situations. To these circumstances, is attributed the tolerable state of preservation in which several of the articles above described were found, after lying in the earth for several centuries. We say centuries, from the fact that trees were found growing on these ancient works, whose ages were ascertained to amount to between four and five hundred years each, by counting the concentric circles in the stumps, after the trees were cut down; and on the ground beside them were other trees in a state of decay that appeared to have fallen from old age. Of what language, or of what nation were this mighty race, that once inhabited the territory watered by the Ohio remains yet a mystery, too great for the most learned to unravel.

"But from what we see of their works, they must have had some acquaintance with arts and sciences. They have left us perfect specimens of circles, squares, octagons and parallel lines, on a grand and noble scale. And unless it can be proved that they had intercourse with Asia or Europe, we now see that they possessed the art of working in metals.

"Marietta, July 19th 1819.

"N. B. The above described articles are in the possession of Doct. Hildreth, and can be seen by any one desirous of viewing them." (29)

From "Antediluvian Antiquities" I have extracted the following information, which hints toward the fact that elephants lived in North America (even though it was before the Flood).

"In the township of Middletown is very remarkable for the relics of animals and things that may be conceived to have existed before the flood...Bones, horns, and teeth of land animals, are mingled in this jumble of materials which the Marl pits afford. The horn of a deer, the tooth of an elephant, the thigh of a rhinoceros, and the fragments of other skeletons, not so well ascertained as yet, show the admirable and unaccountable association of heterogeneous substances deposited here." (38)

Length of Relevant Material: 3p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Book of Mormon, Prophets, Native American history and religion

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Indian Prophet"

Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: September 27, 1815 (v. 2)
Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)
Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.
Comment: The experience of the "Indian Prophet" resembles the experience of King Lamoni in the Book of Mormon. The obvious difference is that the four messengers who come to him are angels rather than missionaries. There are still some striking similarities between the Indian Prophet's conversion and King Lamoni's.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "During the first fifty years of his life he was remarkable only for his stupidity and beastly drunkenness. About 18 years ago while lighting his pipe, he suddenly fell back upon his bunk upon which he was then sitting and continued in a state of insensibility for six or eight hours; his family supposing him dead, had made preparations for laying him out, and while in the act of removing him from his bunk he revived. His first words were, 'don't be alarmed, I have seen heaven; call the nation together that I may tell them what I have seen and heard' The nation having assembled at his house he informed them that he had seen four beautiful young men who had been sent from Heaven by the Great Spirit, and who thus addressed him - Great Spirit is angry with you and all the red men, and unless you immediately refrain from drunkenness, lying, stealing &c. you shall never enter that beautiful place which we will now show you. He stated that he was then conducted by these young men to the gate of heaven which was opened, but he was not allowed to enter that it was more beautiful than they could conceive of or he describe; and that the inhabitants appeared to be perfectly happy that he was suffered to remain there three or four hours, and was then re-conducted by the same young men, who on taking their leave, promised they would visit him yearly and commanded him to inform all other Indians what he had seen and heard. He immediately visited the different tribes of Indians in the western part of the States, the Oneida excepted. They all put the most implicit faith in what he told them, & revered him as a Prophet. The consequence had been that from a filthy, lazy, drunken set of beings, they have become a cleanly, industrious, sober and happy people. The Prophet has continued as he says to receive regular annual visits from these heavenly messengers, immediately after which he in his turn visited the different tribes. He was on one of these annual visits at the time of his decease." (93)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:
The following dream shares some similarities with Lehi's dream both in substance and form. The author first explains his dream which includes a proud city and a river. Then he gives an interpretation for some of the objects in his dream. Differences lie in the fact that there is no "Tree of Life" at the end and that the author's dream ends with despair for his own salvation, whereas Lehi's dream ends with the despair for the salvation of his sons Laman and Lemuel.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): The author begins the dream "on a day, when the sky was serene and the air temperate, pure, and elastick, I strolled on a lawn of velvet verdure, variegated with every lovely flower of the climate, and the season. -On my left, just within the reach of vision, was a proud city, with its spires piercing the blue canopy; on my right, a majestick river, glided in silence down its deep channel, half hidden from my view by an immense precipice. I gazed on the scene with rapture and wild delight. I thought no object in nature so grand, so beautiful, so enchanting, as could recal my intoxicated imagination, or divert my senses from the delerium of pleasure, which the scene afforded. At that moment a bright dazzling dancing ray of light flitted before me. I thought it near, leaped forward, and reached out my hand to seize it. But when the effort was made, I found it receded, and eluded my grasp. But still it appeared beautiful and attractive, Once more I determined to seize it. I hastened, quickened my step more and more, with my delighted eyes, fixed on the shifting and receding object, continually displaying new lustre, and wantoning in all the tints of the rainbow: until, headlong I plunged over the precipice, into the abyss below. I scuffled and resisted the waves in vain. Prone to the bottom, my progress could not be retarded, until I was dashed to atoms, against the rocks that lay covered beneath the billows. Here nature aroused, and in afright bursted the chains which sleep had bound around me. I awoke to contemplate a dream, the most delicious - the most dreadful.

"The interpretation may be useful to myself, and to my fellow mortals. It applied nearly to our condition in this world, and exhibits by illustration, that awful and, to which too many of the human family are hurrying as fast as time can urge their footsteps.

"That lawn, so enticing, so beautiful, and so lovely in its native decorations, resembles this world with its evanescent charms. The ray of light resembles pleasure, decoying and beguiling poor silly, thoughtless, and discontented mortals from their duty: and at last precipitating them into a world of spirits, with all their unrepented sins upon their guilty heads." (101)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Destruction of an ancient people

Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "American Antiquities"
Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: May 21, 1819 (v. 5)
Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)
Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.
Comment: This account is similar to other contemporary accounts about the destruction of an ancient people. Usually the blame for the destruction is placed upon the shoulders of American Indians, as is the case here.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "An article in the Cleveland Register states, that a mound of considerable dimensions on the west side of the Cayahoga river, Ohio, had been opened, and a number of silver broaches found within the body of it which were much corroded by rust. The writer of the article proves that the mound was a depository of the dead, by the remains of human bones which were found, and he also proves it to be of great antiquity, by a part of the bones being in a state of dust when found, and the apparently sound parts presently becoming so upon exposure to air...From these and many other similar discoveries, the writer believes that this country was once inhabited by a race of people, at least partially civilized; and that this race have been exterminated by the forefathers of the present and late tribes of Indians in this country." (325)
Length of Relevant Material: 1p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Destruction of an ancient people
Author: Orasmus Turner
Title of Book: History of the Pioneer Settlement of Phelps and Gorham's Purchase, and Morris' Reserve
Title of Article: Title of Periodical: Place of Publication: Rochester, N.Y. Publisher: William Alling Date of Publication: 1852 Library Location: F 127 .G2 T82 1852
Nature of Source: 624 page history covering material from 1535-1851. The text includes a history of Jemima Wilkinson and the "Society of Friends" (153-162, 477-478, 588). In an appendix, Turner included Wilkinson's will, where she claimed that her name was Jemima Wilkinson until 1776, when she took on the name "Universal Friend, a new name which the mouth of the Lord hath named." (588) The text also includes a skewed history of the Church titled "Gold Bible - Mormonism" (212-217).
Comment: Turner relates the legend of a lost race of Indians.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): "There are few localities in all Western New-York, so abounding in matters of historical interest, as Boughton Hill, Victor Flats, and their immediate vicinity. There were, in an early day, the mounds, the rude implements of war and the chase, that marked the occupancy of a race, whose history or identity are lost - of whose existence, even, we have but the evidence afforded by these mysterious relics. When the Pioneers of our own race first sought out the spot, there were here and there, in hill and valley, in the ravines, and around the pure, refreshing springs that gurgled at the base of the bluffs, evidences that here was once a favorite abiding place of the Seneca branch of the once powerful and warlike Iroquois; here were the charred remains of their wigwams, their burial places, teeming with the smouldering remains of by-gone generations; here they worshipped the "Manitou" of their simple creed; here they held their war and peace councils; here erected their war post, and danced around it, recounting their brave achievements, over their own race, in regions far off to the south, where the terror of their war whoop gave them victory before the battle had begun; or far off to the north, upon the St. Lawrence, the rivers of Maine, or at the west, upon the borders of the Lakes." (524)
Length of Relevant Material: 1p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Destruction of an ancient people
Author: Diedrich Willers
Title of Book: Centennial Historical Sketch of the Town of Fayette, Seneca County, New York.
Title of Article: Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Geneva, N.Y.
Publisher: W.F. Humphrey
Date of Publication: 1900
Library Location: HBLL F 129 .F2 W7
Nature of Source: History of Fayette prepared by Willers in celebration of Fayette's centennial birthday. Basically a local history, which includes a large section of biographical sketches at the end of the text. Also includes a short history of the Church, emphasizing the role of the Whitmer family on pp. 47-51.
Comment: Willers relays an interesting statement from DeWitt Clinton about a lost civilization in North America. Unfortunately, Willers does not document where he took this information from.
Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): With reference to the "old Indian Fort" found near Fayette, Willers records the following:

"An ancient Indian burying ground was also found located nearly a mile southeast of this fortification, where human skeletons of unusually large size were found in mounds of earth. These were regarded by many persons, as the bones of a pre-historic race of human beings.

"A similar earthrow or fortification was found in the Town of Ovid, and visited by Governor DeWitt Clinton.

"His theory thereof was 'that it was one of a number of similar works of defense, found occupying the most commanding positions in Western New York, and in the valleys of the Ohio and Mississippi, erected by a race more civilized than the Indians, and that they preceded the latter in the occupation of this country. Their origin and end are alike a mystery: their annals defy the ken of human research, and their history will remain a sealed book perhaps forever.'" (14)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed: ________________________________

Topics: Destruction of an ancient people, Native American history and religion, Pre-columbian migrations to America, Race, Book of Mormon

Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Of the Aborigines of the Western Country"
Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: June 28, 1816 (v. 2)
Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)
Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.

Comment: This fascinating history deserves to be extracted in full, but I have chosen instead to extract passages that are representative of the history in general. The article itself is extracted from the manuscripts of John P. Campbell, who researched "the ancient inhabitants of a great continent" that "came to the western country a thousand or twelve hundred years ago." I will let the following passages speak for themselves.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): Campbell first hypothesized that the Aborigines migrated from Asia. Then he wrote: "Again, it is a current opinion, that the first inhabitants of the western country were white people, and therefore cannot be denominated Indians. Our readers will recollect, and may have noticed, that there are distinguishing shades of white and black within the extent of our own country; and that there are those among us who, by birth or physical causes, are exceedingly dark. It is hence not indispensable that the Aborigines should be a white people, strictly speaking, in order to account for their improvements, or their knowledge of the arts. The inhabitants of Asia & of the Asiatic continent in general, are allowed to be darker than the inhabitants of these American states, while at the same time they likewise are denominated a white people...The Aborigines, for aught we know, might have sustained a lighter complexion than those Indians who contributed to their destruction, or than the ancestors of the present race of Indians; and might on that account, have been denominated a white people.

"...We likewise suspect that the Aborigines were denominated a white people by the present race of Indians, solely or principally, in consequence of that distinction which they possessed in the view of the Indians, by their works or by the knowledge and skill displayed in these works. These Indians having been accustomed to pay respect to Americans and Europeans as white people, appropriated naturally the same respect and title to the Aborigines. The Indians universally disclaim these ancient works and monuments which are attributed to the Aborigines, and alledge that these works were erected by white people.

"Mr. Thomas Bodley was informed by Indians of different tribes north-west of the Ohio, that they had understood from their old men, and that it had been a tradition among their several nations, that Kentucky had been settled by whites, and that they had been exterminated by war. They were of opinion that the old fortifications, were now to be seen in Kentucky and Ohio, were the productions of these white inhabitants." (380)

"An old Indian, in conversation with Col. James F. Moore, of Kentucky, informed him that the western country, and particularly Kentucky, had once been inhabited by white people, but that they were exterminated by the Indians. That the last battle was fought at the falls of Ohio, and that the Indians succeeded in driving the Aborigines into a small island below the rapids, where the whole of them were cut to pieces." (380-381)

According to Colonel M'Kee, who had conversed with an Indian named Cornstalk, "Ohio and Kentucky had been once settled by white peodle [sic], who were possessed of arts which the Indians did not now. That after many sanguinary contests they were exterminated- Colonel M. inquired why the Indians had not learned these arts of the white people. He replied indefinitely, relating that the great Spirit had once given the Indians a book which taught them all these arts, but that they had lost it, and had never since regained the knowledge of them."
In keeping in line with his hypothesis that the Aborigines came from Asia, Campbell notes, "From the descendants of Shem, or from the Israelites, we derive the commencement of all that knowledge which served to keep the vast continent of Asia from total barbarism. The Israelites carried captive by Salmanaser, in the time of Hoshea, became in a great measure, incorporated with the neighbouring nations; and from this source, or in this channel, we deduce many of the customs which prevailed, and continued to prevail in Asia, and which have been frequently recognized among the Tartars, the Aborigines of the western country, and the present race of Indians." This excerpt is followed by a passage from the second Book of Esdras, which says that the ten tribes were carried away captive by Salmanasar, who "carried them over the waters, and so came they into another land." (381)

Length of Relevant Material: 2p.

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Dreams, Book of Mormon, Tree of Life, New Jerusalem
Author:
Title of Book: "Dream"
Title of Article: "Dream"
Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: October 2, 1818 (v. 5)
Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)
Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.
Comment: The following excerpt comes from a lengthy dream, in which the author is chased by wicked people and later Satan himself. In order to escape his pursuers, the author must cross a river. In the process, his faith is tested, but he makes it safely across the river to the other side where he catches a glimpse of the "new Jerusalem." The dream shares some similarities with Lehi's dream about the Tree of Life. For example, the author must trust a beam that stretches across the river, much the same way individuals in Lehi's dream must trust the iron rod. The author is also accompanied by a companion, whom he calls his "instructer." This "instructer" plays a similar role to the angel who guides Lehi in his dream.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "I now thought that my way run out, and a dreadful river appeared before me. This river was the most tremendous, and terrifying sight I ever beheld. The waves were fire and brimstone, black and dismal with pitch and other fearful matter for which I have no name. The fire emitted a pale blue light, and a thick gloomy cloud rested near the surface. I thought this river was innumerable miles in breadth. I could see no shore. I knew that my way lay across it, but I saw not how. I thought also that Satan appeared again raging behind me, and tried to break down the end of the road in which I stood.

"I now looked to God for help. Then I heard one saying, 'He that believeth shall not make haste;' and again, 'Fear ye not; stand still and see the salvation of the Lord.' I now waited till the Lord would appear. I had not waited long till I saw a small beam floating down the river with great rapidity. The fire appeared to make no impression on it. I thought it stopped when it came opposite to me, and the end next me extended to the shore. Then a man of heavenly countenance came to me, and bid me go down to the river and get on that small beam. I went down, but found it would not bear me, and I thought it was the weight of my clothes that caused it to sink. I expressed to my instructor [sic] the backwardness I felt in taking off my clothes and crossing the river naked. He said it was not my clothes but my sins I must put off, especially pride; he informed me that the small beam was humility and that none could cross on it, without being arrayed by the Holy Spirit. I then prayed to God for humility. The heavenly messenger then gave me a plain neat dress, which he told me to put on; I did so and began to creep along the beam. Satan sent showers of fiery darts after me; but none of them could pierce the garment I had just received. I thought I went on my way rejoicing, although I was but escaping on a small piece of timber over a terrible river. I looked back to thank my kind instructor; he bid me go on in God's name. I pursued on a long way, when I found by degrees, that the beam had increased to a firm permanent bridge. From creeping I got to walking, and that with more ease and agility than I had ever done before. I went on a great distance, when suddenly, I found myself wafted to another country. The first person I saw was my dear wife, who with ineffable joy welcomed me to the mansions of eternal day. My mother them came and rejoiced with us, telling me I was done with my sorrows, that tears and distress were not known there. I asked where my father was? They told me he was one among a brilliant and glorious throng, then full in our view, who were all engaged adoring the thrice Holy God for my safe arrival at the new Jerusalem on high. -But to my inexpressible disappointment, I now awoke, and found it was but a dream." (60)

Length of Relevant Material: 2p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Elephants and horses in America
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "A Bone: For Philosophers and Naturalists"
Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: October 6, 1821 (v. 7)
Some immense Bones were last week brought to Mr. Greenwood, conductor of the New England Museum from near Cincinnati [sic], Ohio and offered for sale as bones of the mammoth, which to be sure, their immense size would reasonably warrant. On examination, however, he pronounced them not bones of the mammoth, but of an elephant of enormous size. -On comparing [sic] them with the skeleton of an elephant seventeen years old, in his possession, their conformation was found to be the same, but at least four times as large. There was also difference in the teth, which M.G. pretty clearly proves to be the effect of age. The teeth in the large jaw are deeply serrated, and, notwithstanding their having been some centuries under ground, have a beautiful enamel. -Those of the elephant of seventeen years old, are flat on the surface, with small waving ridges, and those in the larger jaw, in the N.E. Museum, are partially serrated, by having deep furrows between the harder waving lines. If these premises be correct, they are stronger proofs than any heretofore known, that the elephant [sic] was formerly an aboriginal of America. These facts are here stated with no other motive than to call the attention [sic] of the learned to give this subject the investigation which its importance merits." (413) relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.

Comment: I know that a mammoth and an elephant are not the same thing, but I find this article very interesting nevertheless. I have extracted information from two different reports in the article, which relay the discoveries of large bones. The author of the first report hypothesizes where the bones came from. This tells us a little bit about the skepticism that such large animals ever existed in the area of Ohio.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): "It may be seen in the picture of Cincinnati, from the 58th to the 74d page, that a variety of bodies, naturally foreign to the soil, have been discovered in the alluvial plain on which our town is erected. Among these, at the same time the above work was written, there does not seem to have been but a single fragment of the Mammoth. This we are told was a joint of the back bone, which was buried in gravel about 12 feet beneath the surface, between Main and Sycamore streets, a little north of Market street. About 400 feet east of this spot, some cartmen last week discovered a very large bone, which is judged to be the thigh bone of the same animal. It was imbedded in sand, 40 feet beneath the surface. A portion of it, five feet in length, was laid bare, the thickest part of which measured 24 inches. An apprehension that the superincumbent gravel might full prevented the excavation necessary for the full development of this gigantic relic.

"We are disposed to think, with the author of the work just quoted, that this, as well as the vegetable and animal remains which have been found, at various depths, from 10 to 90 feet beneath our soil were washed and floated hither at some remote, antecedent period; and deposited with the gravel, sand, rolled pebbles and clay, which compose the extensive plates on which we are located."

The second report comes from London, but still says something about discoveries in Ohio. "There have been recently discovered in the parish of Mottestoo, on the south side of the Isle of Wight, the bones of that stupendous animal the Mammoth, or Mastodon. Several of the vertebra, or joints of the back bone, measuring thirty six inches in circumference: they corresponded exactly in form, color and texture with the bones found in plenty on the banks of the Ohio, in North America, in a vale called by the Indians, Big-bone swamp." (Both reports on p. 109)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Happiness as God's purpose for man
Author: Enoch Cobb Wines
Title of Book: Commentaries on the Laws of the Ancient Hebrews
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: William S. & Alfred Martien
Grunder reports that an advertisement for a proposed series of lectures by Wines on the ancient Hebrew form of government appeared in the New York Weekly Tribune on October 11, 1845. In the preface to Commentaries, which came as the result of his lectures, Wines claimed that he began giving lectures on the subject in 1843 when he was asked to appear before the Mercantile Library Company of Philadelphia. At such a late date, it is highly unlikely that any of Wines' work could have influenced the thought of Joseph Smith. Nevertheless, Wines provides some interesting ideas about Hebrew government as established by Moses.

Comment: In an introductory essay to his work titled, "Introductory Essay on Civil Society and Government," Wines provides 8 proofs to support the divine origin of government. The excerpt below comes from proof number five where Wines discusses happiness as the "ultimate end of man." He structures his argument systematically like an axiomatic system. He wrote, "As there are, in physical science, certain axioms, which serve as the basis of all its deductions, so likewise, in moral and political science, there are certain elementary principles, which constitute the foundation of ethics and jurisprudence. These, in both cases, are termed first truths...." In the excerpt below, Wines outlines some of the first truths of divine government and theology.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): "That the ultimate end of man is happiness: that happiness cannot consist in things inconsistent with his nature; that, to attain happiness, not only present good and evil must be considered, but also their consequences; that it is unreasonable to pursue a present good, which must issue in a greater evil, but quite reasonable to bear a present evil, which must issue in a greater good; that a higher good ought ever to be preferred to a lower one; and that order is more excellent than disorder; these are all first truths." (22)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Happiness as God's purpose for man, Book of Mormon, Consecration

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Theology: Christian Doctrine: The Chief End of Man's Existence"

Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder

Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio

Publisher: John Andrews

Date of Publication: September 6, 1814 (v. 1)

Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)

Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.

Comment: In the first excerpt, glorifying God is seen as the first purpose of our existence and happiness is seen as secondary. The second excerpt has some resemblance to Mosiah 3:19 "For the natural man is an enemy to God." The concept of consecration presented in this passage is also similar to later Mormon concepts of consecration. However, there are important differences between this passage and Mormon doctrine, including the fact that this passage relates a doctrine of original sin that Mormonism denies.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): "The chief end of man consists of two parts, the glorifying of God, and the enjoyment of him. The first of these is the primary or principal end of our being, and in it consists the whole of our duty. The other is that which constitutes our highest interest and supreme felicity...These two things are inseparably connected in the councils of God, and in the economy of divine grace."

"All men are by nature under the reigning power and dominion of sin, and under the governing influence of a proud, self-seeking, self-exalting temper, which stands in direct opposition to the great end of their being. The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is nor subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So long as we continue in this state we are morally unable, that is, utterly indisposed to glorify God. As our inability consists in nothing but our aversion from God and holy things, it is so far from excusing us, that it is the very essence of sin, and the very root of bitterness that produces all iniquitous conduct. Yet it will forever prevent us from glorifying God, unless we be born of the Spirit of grace, or created in Christ Jesus unto good works. - When this change takes place (and not till then) we become sensible of our obligations to God, and cordially disposed to consecrate our powers, our time, and our talents, without reserve, to him, and perform which is characteristick [sic] of his people." (73)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Infant baptism

Author: James Wood

Title of Book: Facts and Observations Concerning the Organization and State of the Churches in the Three Synods of Western New-York, and the Synod of Western Reserve.

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Saratoga Springs, NY

Publisher: G.M. Davison

Date of Publication: 1837

Library Location: BX 8947 .N7 W6 Amer

Nature of Source: Report of the doctrines taught different Presbyteries in New York. In this report, Wood relates irregularities within the churches such as the teaching of "perfectionism" by one of the ministers in the Genesee Presbytery, who also "believes in miracles and prophecy, and has a prophetess in his house for whom he professes to entertain high veneration." (27) Wood also gives brief histories of the synods Utica, Geneva and Genesee, and how they were formed.

Comment: In the following passage, Wood relates the doctrines and practices of the Buffalo Presbytery. Although infant baptism is excluded from the Presbytery's "articles of Faith" it is still left as an option.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "That Presbytery adopted some time ago a set of articles of Faith for the use of their churches, from which almost every thing distinguishing is excluded. Among other points is that of infant baptism - and hence, in practice, it is left optional with parents to have their children baptized or not, just as they please." (26)
Length of Relevant Material: 1p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Jesus Christ, Justification, Salvation through knowledge
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Biblical Criticism"
Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: February 20, 1816 (v. 2)
Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)
Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.
Comment: In this article, the author makes a distinction between what he calls "active" and "passive" obedience. He examines several scriptures in the New Testament and comes to the conclusion that "In every instance where obedience is predicated of men, active obedience is manifestly intended." Christ is our supreme example of active obedience through "the will of his Father, in his humiliation, through life, his agony in Gethsemane, and his sufferings upon the cross." The author concludes that we are justified through the active obedience of Christ.
Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "The obedience which Christ learned by the things which he suffered, according to Heb. v: 8, cannot be passive obedience. His sufferings were the means by which he was taught; obedience was the thing which he learned. Therefore, as the means of instruction are necessarily distinct from the instruction conveyed by them, so the active obedience of Christ is distinct from his sufferings or passive obedience, and the former is exclusively intended in this place.

"Wherefore, it is unscriptural to exclude the active obedience of Christ from that righteousness by which the sinner is justified." (230)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Jews

Author:

Title of Book:

Title of Article: "Literary Intelligence"

Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder

Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio

Publisher: John Andrews

Date of Publication: July 5, 1814 (v. 1)

Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)

Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.

Comment: This excerpt comes from a summary of Thomas Yeates' report on the "Collation yf [sic] an Indian Copy of the Pentateuch...collected by the Rev. C. Buchanan...Also a collation and description of a manuscript roll of the book of Esther, and the Megillah of Ahasuerus. from the Hebrew copy, originally extant in brazen tablets at Goa." In this summary, a short explanation is given for the origins of Indian (people from India) Jews. This parallels the experiences of Lehi and his family and the Jaredites.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): "There are, as Dr. Buchanan informs us, two classes of Jews in Malabar, the Whiter Jerusalem Jews, and the Black Jews- The former delivered to Dr. Buchanan a narrative, in the Hebrew language, of their arrival in India; which stated that after the second temple was destroyed, their ancestors, fearing the wrath of the conqueror, departed from Jerusalem, and came into that country; and, in the year of the Creation, 4250, (A.D. 490,) obtained certain privileges from the sovereign. The royal grant was engraved on a brass plate, which they still possessed. Dr. Buchanan examined it. Like other old Malabaric records, it had no date; but he observes, that the Jews must have existed a considerable time in the country before they could have obtained such privileges.

"Such is antiquity of the White Jews of Malabar. Of the Black Jews, Dr. Buchanan remarks, that 'it is only necessary to look at their countenance to be satisfied that their ancestors must have arrived many ages before the White Jews. Their Hindoo complexions, and their very imperfect resemblance to the European Jews, indicate that they have been detached from the parent stock in Judea many ages before the Hews in the West.' - Christ. Res. p. 310

"To this may be added, as an additional proof of their very early separation from the Jewish nation, that they appear not to have had copies of the Prophetic Books among them originally, but to have been supplied with them, and other parts of the Scriptures, by the white Jews. There seems, therefore, every reason to believe, that the Black Jews of Malabar are a part of the remains of the first dispersion of the nation by Nebuchadnezzar; and that the text of the Pentateuch, preserved in their synagogues, is derived from those copies which their ancestors brought with them into India" (4-5).

Length of Relevant Material: 2p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Kolob

Author: Johann Heinrich Lambert

Title of Book: Cosmologische Briefe über die Einrichtung des Weltbaues

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Augspurg

Publisher: Eberhard Kletts Wittib

Date of Publication: 1761

Library Location: I used a translation of this text that I got through Inter Library Loan.

Nature of Source: In the history of science and mathematics, Lambert is usually known for his achievements in mathematics. His Cosmological Letters were written as set of imaginary correspondence with the odd numbered letters being written by Lambert's imaginary correspondent and the even numbered letters written by himself. They deal with the structure of the Milky Way and the structure of the universe in general. Lambert's work was later used by Thomas Dick in his Philosophy of a Future State and his Sidereal Heavens for further proof that there was a governing body of the stars known as the "throne of God."

Comment: In the Book of Abraham, Kolob is the governing body of all planets and stars that are of the same order as ours. Above Kolob in the hierarchy of celestial bodies is the throne of God. In Lambert's view of the universe star systems are governed by a dark celestial bodies which Lambert refers to as regents. One of these regents is the throne of the Universe or the great capital around which everything revolve.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "I believe that I have proceeded in an orderly fashion in applying your principles. If I now take them as necessarily conclusive, I must then assume [the existence of] a dark body which has enough mass to keep the Milky Way in a simple order, and if you assume, Sir, that the Milky Way belongs to still innumerable other Milky Ways, then you give me material for a still many times heavier and larger body which must give law and order to all Milky Ways. However far you wish to go, you will finally come to the center of the whole world-edifice, and here I find my last body which steers around itself the whole creation.

"Here I find material for my forces of imagination, and I count the moments of eternity in which the outermost boundaries of creation complete their circles. There is the throne to which all systems attend like so many satellites, the capital city that issues laws to the realm of reality and keeps all in order and complete harmony, makes all a whole, bans all excess, sets a limit to the revolt and dissolution of each fleeting part, and guides it back into its proper place." (159-160)

Length of Relevant Material: 2pp.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Kolob
Author: Immanuel Kant
Title of Book: Allgemeine Naturgeschichte und Theorie des Himmels
Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Königsberg and Leipzig

Publisher: Johann Friedrich Peterson
Date of Publication: 1755
Nature of Source: Kant's Universal History was written before Kant became the great philosopher that we know him as today. Universal History is a work of speculative astronomy which attempted to make some sense out of the appearance of the Milky Way. Kant and others were the forerunners of practicing astronomers who confirmed that the Milky Way was a super system of stars of which our own solar system was a part.
Comment: In the Book of Abraham, Kolob is the governing body of all planets and stars that are of the same order as ours. In Kant's view of the universe, our solar system is part of the Milky Way, which in turn is governed by one powerful star or celestial body. Kant hypothesizes that the central star of the Milky Way (which would be Kolob in the Book of Abraham) is Sirius. Interestingly enough, William Hamblin, Daniel C. Peterson and John Gee in their paper "'And I saw the Stars:' the Book of Abraham and Ancient Geocentric Astronomy" also argued that Sirius would have been the equivalent to Kolob in ancient geocentric astronomy as well.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "If one again looks upon these star systems as members in the great chain of the entire nature, one had just as much cause as before to think of them as being in mutual attraction and in connections which form in virtue of the law of first formation dominating throughout the entire nature, a new [and] still greater system which, through the attraction of a body of incomparably mightier attraction, will be ruled, as were all the former [systems], from the center of their regular positions." (150)
"I have a conjecture according to which it appears to me very probable that in the system of stars, which form the Milky Way, the Sirius or Dog-star is the central body and occupies the center toward which all are related." (166)
Length of Relevant Material: 2pp.
Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Name of Church
Author: Diedrich Willers
Title of Book: Centennial Historical Sketch of the Town of Fayette, Seneca County, New York.
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Geneva, N.Y.
Publisher: W.F. Humphrey
Date of Publication: 1900
Library Location:

Nature of Source: History of Fayette prepared by Willers in celebration of Fayette's centennial birthday. Basically a local history, which includes a large section of biographical sketches at the end of the text. Also includes a short history of the Church, emphasizing the role of the Whitmer family on pp. 47-51.
Comment: The Church was formally organized in Fayette on April 6, 1830. Willers documents the names of other churches in the area that existed at the same time. This is important because we see the names that the Church could not use as a title.
Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): Among other churches, Willers records the names of the following two:
"The earliest church in town, was erected as a union church for German Reformed and Lutheran residents, under an organization of Dec. 26, 1809, and a log church was soon afterwards erected at Bearytown, which was replaced with a stone edifice in 1824, and which is still standing and known as 'Christ Church.' The services for the first half century after 1809, were conducted largely in the German language." (44)
"Jerusalem Church in West Fayette organized as Zion's Church, Aug. 3, 1811,..." (45)
Length of Relevant Material: 2p.
Topics: Native American history and religion, Jews, Ritual and ceremony
Author:
Title of Book:
Title of Article: "Of the Aborigines"
Title of Periodical: Weekly Recorder
Place of Publication: Chillicothe, Ohio
Publisher: John Andrews
Date of Publication: August 21, 1816 (v.3)
Library Location: 051 B reels 248-250 Microfilm (v.1 is at the end of reel 248, reel 249 consists of volumes 2-4, and reel 250 consists of volumes 5-7)
Nature of Source: The Weekly Recorder was "a newspaper conveying important intelligence and other useful matter under the three general heads of Theology, Literature, and National Affairs." There is a useful index at the back of each volume. The paper relayed interesting information regarding contemporary archeology and missionary efforts to American Indians and others.
Comment: This is an extract from a letter by Col. R.J. Meigs who wrote concerning "Mr. Boudinot's book, in which he attempts to prove that the Indians of America are of Hebrew descent." Meigs was not convinced by Boudinot's arguments and concluded that although Indian customs "bear strong resemblance to Jewish customs and laws, yet they by no means prove that the American Indians are descended from the Jews." The entire passage is of interest in that it shows arguments attempting to prove that the Indians were descended from Jews and a particular reception of one man who is skeptical of the arguments. Joseph would run up against similar skeptics 14 years later.
Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): One of Boudinot's proofs connecting Indians with Hebrews was the Indian ritual of "Ablutions." "Formerly they had practised [sic] frequent washings; these were resorted to after going through bodily exercise - perhaps of dancing; the whole meeting, on such occasions, went to the clear stream and plunged in. This was intended to express that they were then cleansed of all moral impurity - that however they might have before done wrong, the wrong was now done away, and nor more to be considered as any part of their character. This corresponds with my personal observation; for they never reproach each other of former deviations from right." (29-30)
Length of Relevant Material: 2p.
Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Plural worlds
Author: Thomas Dick
Title of Book: On the Mental Illumination and Moral Improvement of Mankind
Nature of Source: Dick's Mental Illumination and Moral Improvement was donated to the Nauvoo Library and Literary Institute by Isaiah Mattison in 1844. This text was the result of 26 years worth of contemplation over how to improve the elementary and secondary education of youth. Dick describes methods, programs and courses of instruction to insure that youth grow up to be intelligent Christian beings. Dick was an advocate for universal education and for moral and religious instruction within the educational system.

Comment: The purpose for the inhabitation of other worlds in Dick's mind is to portray his idea about celestial sociability. In the future state of existence, we will socialize with intelligences from other worlds. For Dick, the purpose of this life is to gain all the knowledge we can about this earth, its history, etc. in order to be equipped with knowledge to socialize with beings from other planets. If we do not gain knowledge in order to be able to intelligently socialize with celestial intelligences, we will not be able to share in the felicity of the most exalted of beings. Below is an example of why we should learn all the knowledge we can about the earth and its system so that we will not be shown up (for example) by an inhabitant of Saturn who may know more about his moon than we do about our own.

Excerpt (pages):
"Were an inhabitant of the planet Saturn to wing his flight to this globe ours, and were he capable of communicating his sentiments in language intelligible to man, we should expect to learn from him a minute detail of the history and phenomena of nature in that region, of the various aspects of the moons, the diversified appearances of the magnificent rings which encircle that world, and descriptions of the different science of nature, the operations of art, the sciences cultivated by its inhabitants, and the plan of God's moral government among them; and, doubtless, our curiosity to become acquainted with the physical and moral arrangements of another world, would be abundantly gratified. But where an inhabitant of our globe, from among the lower or even from among many of the higher classes, to be transported to one of the planets, what account could he give of the arts and sciences, of the history, statistics, and natural scenery of the world? What could he say of its continents, rivers, islands, oceans, and volcanoes; its mountain scenery, and the properties of its atmosphere, of the variegated surface of the moon, and the peculiarities of its motions, of the history of its inhabitants, or the progress they had made in knowledge? What description could he give of the arts and inventions of modern times, of the construction of the instruments by which we view distant objects, and by which we penetrate into the scenes invisible to the unassisted eye, of the principle of air-balloons, steam-engines, air-pumps, mechanical powers, electrical machines, or galvanic batteries? Above all, what could he tell them of the moral dispensations of the Creator towards our world, and of what is contained in the revelations of his word? He could perhaps tell them that there were hills, and rivers, and four-footed beasts, and men that were employed in killing each other; but could convey no precise idea of any thing in which this world differed from that to which he had been transported. He would be looked down upon with pity as a kind of lusus naturae, unworthy of the name of rational being. Of 800 millions of men that people our globe, there are at least 750 millions of this description, who could give little more information respecting the peculiarities of our world to the inhabitants of another planet, than they could receive from an elephant or a beaver, if such creatures had the faculty of communicating their ideas."

Length of Relevant Material: 2p.

*Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

---

Topics: Plural worlds

Author: Immanuel Kant

Title of Book: Allgemeine Naturgeschichte und Theorie des Himmels

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Königsberg and Leipzig

Publisher: Johann Friedrich Peterson

Date of Publication: 1755

Library Location: I used a translation of this text under call number QB 981 .K1513x.

Nature of Source: Kant's Universal History was written before Kant became the great philosopher that we know him as today. Universal History is a work of speculative astronomy which attempted to make some sense out of the appearance of the Milky Way. Kant and others were the forerunners of practicing astronomers who confirmed that the Milky Way was a super system of stars of which our own solar system was a part.

Comment: Kant believed in an infinite universe where worlds were continually passing in and out of existence. Some of the language as it is translated here shares similarities to the Book of Moses. The saints would have probably never been exposed to Kant's ideas, because his work remained relatively obscure especially in the English-speaking world.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): "If now the creation [created realm] is infinite...then the cosmic space will be enlivened with worlds without number and worlds without end." (151-152)

Kant believed in the continual creation and passing way of worlds. "Creation is never completed. Though it has once started, but will never cease. It is always busy in bringing forth mire scenes of nature, new things and new worlds." (155) "...worlds and world-orders fade away and are devoured by the abyss of eternity; however, creation is always busy in setting up new formations in other celestial regions and in repairing the loss with gain." (157) "...nature is unremittingly busy on the opposite border of the developed world in building worlds from the raw means of scattered elements and while she ages on one side beside the center, which is young on the other side and fruitful in new beginnings." (159)

Speaking of a future state, Kant concludes, "Perhaps there are further globes of the planetary system in the process of evolving, so that after the completed course of time, which is prescribed to our sojourn here, there may be new habitats ready for us in other heavens." (196)

Hard Copy:
Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Plurality of Gods
Author: Enoch Cobb Wines
Title of Book: Commentaries on the Laws of the Ancient Hebrews
Title of Article:
Title of Periodical:
Place of Publication: Philadelphia
Publisher: William S. & Alfred Martien
Date of Publication: 1861 (Fifth edition)
Library Location: BM 520. 3 .W56x 1861
Nature of Source: Grunder reports that an advertisement for a proposed series of lectures by Wines on the ancient Hebrew form of government appeared in the New York Weekly Tribune on October 11, 1845. In the preface to Commentaries, which came as the result of his lectures, Wines claimed that he began giving lectures on the subject in 1843 when he was asked to appear before the Mercantile Library Company of Philadelphia. At such a late date, it is highly unlikely that any of Wines' work could have influenced the thought of Joseph Smith. Nevertheless, Wines provides some interesting ideas about Hebrew government as established by Moses.

Comment: In an introductory essay to his work titled, "Introductory Essay on Civil Society and Government," Wines stated that man is "an able living divine." He was influenced by Lothrop's "Sermon on the Death of the late Harrison Gray Otis." (23)

When wrestling with scriptures that proclaim a plurality of gods, Wines places them all into the context that the plurality refers to civil leaders on earth as gods and sovereigns of government.

Researcher: Derek Jensen
Excerpt (pages): "...the Spirit of inspiration has dignified magistrates with the title of 'gods;' as he clearly has in Ps. 82: 1. 'God standeth in the congregation of the mighty; he judgeth among the gods.' The import of such an appellation deserves to be seriously weighed. It is a title which cannot imply less, than that civil rulers are invested with a divine authority, and are, in the exercise of their magistracies, the representatives and vicegerents of the divine majesty. Such seems to be our Savior's interpretation: 'He called them gods, unto whom the word of God came.' What is the meaning of the declaration, 'the word of God came to them,' if not, that they hold their commission from him?" (26)

Length of Relevant Material: 1p.

Hard Copy:

Date when Photocopying was Completed:

Topics: Plurality of Gods, Creation, Premortal existence, Destruction, Plural worlds

Author: Samuel Nott

Title of Book: A Sermon on the Idolatry of the Hindoos, Delivered Nov. 29, 1816

Title of Article:

Title of Periodical:

Place of Publication: Norwich, CT

Publisher: Hubbard & Marvin

Date of Publication: 1817

Library Location: 080 Sh64a no. 41676

Nature of Source: Sermon delivered to the Female Foreign Mission Society after Nott came back from a mission to Bombay, India. In it, Nott discusses the idols of the "Hindoos," their "gods" which are more like men than deity, and his conviction that they believe in one Supreme Being apart from their gods. Nott also includes a short description of what happens in their temples (23-24) and an appendix detailing "The worship of the Hindoos." (80-85).

Comment: Nott records "Hindoo" belief in a plurality of gods that existed at the beginning. Nott also relates a "Hindoo" belief in the plurality of worlds. He concludes that the "Hindoos" believe in a "general wreck" to end all creation.

Researcher: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): "When creation started into being, the first creatures were the primeval deities. For these there are local habitations, heavens, where they reside, ministered unto, and accompanied by, subordinate deities and ministering servants. By the incarnation of the gods, and the incarnation of the inhabitants of heaven by which they were accompanied, the universe has become filled with deities; till, scarce an animal exists, which has not been inhabited by superior beings, and till, as I have been often told, there are three hundred and thirty millions of gods. But this state of things, is not to be eternal. The universe, with all which it contains, without the exception of either men, or gods, is to undergo a general wreck, a final dissolution, and all existence is to be swallowed up, in the Supreme." (14)

What follows is an excerpt from Sir William Jones' Hymn to Narayena, which Nott included in his appendix titled "The Hindoos believe in an eternal and omnipotent God."

Jones relates a "Hindoo" belief in a plurality of worlds.

"For when th' Almighty will'd Unnumber'd worlds to build,
From Unity diversified he sprang,
While gay Creation laugh'd and procreant Nature rang..." (40)

Length of Relevant Material: 5p.
In the following passages, we find reports about the status of the poor house and poor farm in Fayette around the time the Church was founded there on April 6, 1830.

Researchers: Derek Jensen

Excerpt (pages): "The poor were not forgotten, and as early as 1806, at a special town meeting, fifty dollars was voted in support of the poor, and frequently in subsequent years, appropriations were voted for like purpose, until better provision was made for the poor, under a general system. In 1827 and again in 1828 the town meeting voted that the supervisor use his influence in the county board for erection of a county poor house. As early as 1813 the people of the town represented in town meeting, voted that the supervisor have power to raise by tax for public schools, 'a sum equal to what shall come to this town from the school fund.'" (40)

